usually prejudice the opposing party because the opposing party has no time to: (1) prepare for the witness; (2) effectively plan for cross-examination of the witness; and (3) obtain an expert to refute or question the testimony of the witness. Here, plaintiff initially listed a person as a witness, but not as an expert, and did not learn that the person would be called as a witness until he was called by defendant as an expert to refute plaintiff's experts. Therefore, plaintiff was prejudiced by defendant's failure to identify the person as an expert witness in response to discovery requests and in the scheduling order agreed upon by the parties, and the District Court abused its discretion by allowing the person to testify. The case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. Superior Enterprises, LLC v. Mont. Power Co., 2002 MT 139, 310 M 198, 49 P3d 565 (2002).

Failure to Identify Experts or Supplement Discovery Request — Reversible Error: Miranti failed to provide the identity of expert witnesses even though he agreed to do so in his answers to interrogatories. He also failed to comply with his continuing obligation to supplement his answers and submit a list of experts prior to trial even though he was given numerous opportunities to do so. These failures severely limited cross-examination of the witnesses after they were qualified as experts and had testified as such over objection. Allowing this evidence amounted to an abuse of discretion and constituted reversible error. Miranti v. Orms, 253 M 231, 833 P2d 164, 49 St. Rep. 478 (1992).

Surprise Expert Testimony by CPA Requiring Reversal: In suit involving a complex three-way property exchange between defendants (developer and builders) and plaintiff purchasers, developer, who was a CPA, was allowed, over plaintiffs' objection that it was surprise expert testimony, to testify for defendants as to a document he prepared that analyzed an exhibit by plaintiffs and included calculations regarding the property and exchange. He had not been listed as an expert witness. The testimony was expert testimony and an unfair surprise, requiring reversal of the judgment that, on the whole, went against plaintiffs. Vestre v. Lambert, 249 M 455, 817 P2d 219, 48 St. Rep. 769 (1991).

Improper Admission of Testimony of Expert — Reference to Unintroduced Exhibit — No Surprise: During his testimony, defendants' expert referred to a document that was not listed during discovery as one of the documents upon which he based his opinion and that was not a document to which he had access prior to deposition. Plaintiffs alleged surprise as grounds for a new trial, asserting defendants should have supplemented the expert's responses to his deposition, consistent with this rule, to reveal that the expert had gained access to the report subsequent to deposition. However, the expert also testified that he had formed his opinion prior to receipt of the report and that the report did not affect his analysis or conclusion. Because plaintiffs were unable to show that the surprise had a material bearing on the case or that the result of a new trial would probably be different, they were not entitled to a new trial because of improper admission of the expert's testimony. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

No Error to Exclude Expert Testimony: The trial court did not err in excluding proposed expert testimony because the witness had been disclosed prior to trial only as a lay witness, not as an expert. This rule serves to minimize the element of unfair surprise. Massman v. Helena, 237 M 234, 773 P2d 1206, 46 St. Rep. 764 (1989).

Continuing Interrogatory — Unsigned Statement by Other Party: An unsigned "Report of Facts" form filled out by plaintiff for defendant's insurance company shortly after an auto accident should have been produced in response to a continuing interrogatory relating to statements obtained by defendant from anyone, and since it was not produced, it was reversible error for it to be used by defendant to cross-examine plaintiff. Thibaudeau v. Uglum, 201 M 260, 653 P2d 855, 39 St. Rep. 2096 (1982).

Sanctions Not Applicable to Interrogatories Propounded by Other Party Absent Order: When a party failed to correctly provide answers to a continuing interrogatory propounded by the other party, the sanctions of Rule 37(b) do not apply because that rule relates to the failure to comply with a court order compelling discovery. Thibaudeau v. Uglum, 201 M 260, 653 P2d 855, 39 St. Rep. 2096 (1982).

Interview of Unnamed Witness — Consent to Alleged Noncompliance With Duty to Supplement: On appeal, a father suing for injury to his son found submerged in defendant's swimming pool alleged pretrial discovery abuse by defendant in that defendant was allowed to add a witness the day before trial and had known the location of the witness but failed to inform the father of the address, in violation of defendant's duty to supplement its interrogatory answers. It was not reversible error to allow the witness to testify. The testimony was probative on important fact issues, and the father interviewed the witness before trial and rejected an offered continuance.

The father was not entitled to have his cake and eat it too. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

Former Rule 26(g). Signing of discovery requests, responses, and objections

Sanctions Against Parties and Not Attorney for Multiple Abuses Upheld — No Abuse of Discretion by District Court: The District Court ordered Rule 11 and discovery sanctions against Hiltens and not their attorney for a variety of abuses in litigation involving Bragg. The sanctions consisted of Bragg's attorney fees and costs. The Hiltens appealed their Rule 11 sanctions based upon their slander claim against Bragg and appealed the discovery sanctions, claiming they were not timely sought. Because Hiltens failed to challenge the District Court's factual findings, the Supreme Court upheld the Rule 11 sanctions and the discovery sanctions. The court also held that the sanctions were valid because Hiltens brought the litigation for an improper purpose, brought a claim for slander that was frivolous, submitted a false affidavit, refused to admit they suffered no actual damages, altered an audio file before releasing it through discovery, and made irrelevant and burdensome discovery demands for use in other potential litigation but not the current litigation. Because the facts showed that their attorney was not culpable to the extent that Hiltens were, the Supreme Court affirmed the lack of sanctions against Hiltens' attorney. Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Harassing Discovery Requests — Sanctions Proper: The District Court did not err in sanctioning plaintiffs for harassing, unreasonable, and unduly burdensome discovery requests that attempted to obtain personal and confidential information that was unrelated and irrelevant to the case. Park County Concerned Citizens v. DePuy, 2008 MT 246, 344 M 504, 190 P3d 293 (2008).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Discovery Requests Designed to Harass and Embarrass Opposing Counsel Worthy of Sanction: Counsel for the heirs to an estate filed for sanctions against the estate's attorneys, contending that the estate's attorneys had knowingly misrepresented provisions of the Insurance Code and presented unwarranted positions of law to the District Court. The estate's attorneys subsequently filed for a protective order and sanctions against the heirs' attorney, arguing that various discovery requests were abusive, harassing, and constituted a personal attack on the estate's attorneys. The District Court denied the heirs' attorney's motion and granted the estate's attorneys' motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed, finding adequate evidence in the record that the discovery requests in question were not designed to elicit any relevant information, but rather were designed to harass and embarrass opposing counsel and needlessly increase the costs of litigation. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000), followed in Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Standard of Review From District Court Order Denying Sanctions: The Supreme Court adopted the following standard of review from a District Court's order denying sanctions pursuant to this rule: (1) The District Court's findings of fact will not be overturned unless clearly erroneous. (2) The District Court's conclusion that the facts do or do not constitute a violation of this rule will not be reversed absent an abuse of discretion. (3) If the District Court concludes that this rule has been violated, sanctions must be imposed upon the offending party, and failure to do so will be considered reversible error. (4) The nature and extent of sanctions imposed by the District Court pursuant to a violation of this rule will not be reversed absent an abuse of discretion. In the case at hand, the District Court did not enter findings pertaining to this rule and did not draw any conclusion as to whether the rule was or was not violated prior to denying plaintiff's motion for sanctions; therefore, the Supreme Court vacated the part of the order denying sanctions and remanded for more specific findings pursuant to this rule. Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994).

Dismissal With Prejudice Proper Sanction For Actively Withholding Relevant Information: In a personal injury suit, the plaintiff and her attorney purposely withheld information concerning the plaintiff's prior medical history. The lower court, relying on Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., dismissed the plaintiff's case with prejudice. The Supreme Court held that the dismissal was not proper under Rule 37(b) or (d), M.R.Civ.P., but was justified under this rule and therefore upheld the dismissal. Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919, 46 St. Rep. 2042 (1989). See also Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006).

Former Rule 27. Depositions before action or pending appeal Entitlement to File Claim — Precludes Deposition: A personal injury action arose from an automobile accident. Once the personal injury issue was resolved, plaintiff intended to pursue a bad faith tort action against the insurer. Plaintiff petitioned to perpetuate the testimony of the claims examiner. In Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414, 43 St. Rep. 814 (1986), the court held that in cases involving a bad faith insurance claim, the bad faith claim must be suspended until the liability issues have been determined. The bad faith claim may be filed, but no discovery may be engaged in. The ability to file the bad faith claim is the same as the ability to bring an action. Therefore under this rule, the petition to perpetuate testimony was properly denied. In re Petition of Johnson, 224 M 337, 728 P2d 1354, 43 St. Rep. 2232 (1986).

Former Rule 27(a). Before action

Motion to Compel Discovery Properly Denied for Vagueness: Plaintiffs deposed a witness who could not attend the hearing, but because the witness did not answer questions to plaintiffs' counsel's satisfaction, plaintiffs moved to compel the witness's testimony at the hearing. However, plaintiffs did not cite to any particular questions that were unsatisfactorily answered and only vaguely referenced the subject matter sought to be explored more fully. The District Court denied the motion as too vague, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the motion lacked the specificity needed to rule on it. Citizen Advocates for a Livable Missoula, Inc. v. City Council, 2006 MT 47, 331 M 269, 130 P3d 1259 (2006).

Motion to Retake Deposition Denied — No Relevancy — Improper Motion: Denial of motion to retake a deposition was not an abuse of discretion when the subject of the deposition was totally irrelevant to the issues and when movant claimed the other side improperly withheld, during discovery, information that would have made movant's deposition more valuable. Movant, however, failed to use the exclusive remedy of moving for an order compelling discovery. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Evidentiary Use Contemplated — Lack of Allegation: Where a petition for the taking of a deposition is barren of any allegation that it is sought for the purpose of perpetuating his testimony or that it is sought for use at a contemplated trial in the event that such person at that time would be unable to give testimony, and in fact the petition shows that it is for the purpose of ascertaining the financial capabilities of the party, it should be denied. State ex rel. Neilson v. District Court, 128 M 445, 277 P2d 536 (1954).

Good Faith Required: An application for perpetuation of testimony must be made in good faith for the purpose of obtaining, preserving, and using material testimony. State ex rel. Neilson v. District Court, 128 M 445, 277 P2d 536 (1954); State ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 120 M 585, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

Privilege Against Self-Incrimination: Where petition for deposition alleges facts which show that the person whose testimony is desired could be charged with a felony to compel the person to so testify would be a violation of Art. III, sec. 18, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 25, 1972 Mont. Const.). State ex rel. Neilson v. District Court, 128 M 445, 277 P2d 536 (1954).

Objection to Order Allowing Discovery: Where order of court on application to perpetuate testimony was complained of, the remedy was to apply to the court to vacate or modify the order under 25-4-103 and not by direct application to the Supreme Court for a Writ of Certiorari. State ex rel. Lichte v. District Court, 121 M 34, 189 P2d 1004 (1948); State ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 120 M 585, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

Issue to Be Shown: Where a deposition is to be taken an issue should be tendered by the affidavit, application or complaint, sufficiently definite to disclose that the testimony sought is relevant and pertinent to the framed or proposed issue. State ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 120 M 585, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

Records to Be Produced — Subpoena Required: Where no subpoena duces tecum has been issued, witness named in application for perpetuation of testimony cannot be compelled to bring before the magistrate the records, books, and papers. State ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 120 M 585, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

Order as Unlawful Search and Seizure: An order for perpetuation of testimony which compels the deponent to come with all his books and records, expose everything he has that tells the story of his business for 25 years, and submit it all to the scrutiny of the man who is planning a lawsuit against him in order that the facts necessary for the complaint may be found, is clearly in violation of the constitutional right against unlawful search and seizure. State ex rel. Pitcher v. District Court, 114 M 128, 133 P2d 350 (1943), distinguished in Woodard v. District Court, 120 M 585, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

Nonresident Defendants: While section 93-2301-2, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 27(a), M.R.Civ.P.), did not in express terms provide for perpetuation of testimony where defendant is a nonresident of the state, the only jurisdictional requisite was the contemplation of an action in a court in this state, irrespective of domicile. State ex rel. Cook v. District Court, 102 M 424, 58 P2d 273 (1936).

Adverse Party as Deponent: Since an adverse party may be a witness, his testimony may be taken. State ex rel. Holcomb v. District Court, 54 M 574, 172 P 329 (1918).

Requirements for Order Complied With: A petition for the perpetuation of testimony which recited that the applicant expected to be a party to an action in a District Court of this state, naming the intended adverse parties and stating the nature of the controversy, the residence of the witnesses, and that accounts and records in their keeping, and which they were desired to bring with them, were necessary to illustrate and make understandable their testimony, was sufficient to entitle petitioner to the order prayed for. State ex rel. Holcomb v. District Court, 54 M 574, 172 P 329 (1918), distinguished in State ex rel. Smith v. District Court, 112 M 506, 118 P2d 141 (1941) and State ex rel. Pitcher v. District Court, 114 M 128, 133 P2d 350 (1943).

Former Rule 27(b). Pending appeal

Rule Not a Substitute for Discovery: Plaintiff sought to depose an additional witness following the entry of summary judgment against him. The Supreme Court held that after a judgment has been entered in a case, further discovery is inappropriate unless specifically granted under Rule 27(b), M.R.Civ.P. Rule 27(b) is not a substitute for discovery. It is available in special circumstances to preserve testimony which otherwise could be lost. The plaintiff had sufficient opportunity for discovery before the entry of the judgment, and he cannot supplement an inadequate record on appeal by way of reliance upon this deposition. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150 (1979).

Former Rule 29. Stipulations regarding discovery procedure

Rules Regarding Effect of Stipulations: Court did not go beyond agreed statement of facts in making its findings. In considering an agreed statement of facts a court may make any reasonable inference of which the facts might be susceptible as if the facts had been gleaned from testimony. When a court feels it needs evidence beyond that in the agreed statement to make its decision, it may refer to evidence outside of the agreed statement. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Former Rule 30. Depositions upon oral examination

Summary Judgment — Deposition Costs Recoverable if Deposition Used in Dispositive Manner: In summary judgment actions, deposition costs are recoverable when a deposition is used in a dispositive manner. Here, depositions were not necessary to decide defendant's summary judgment motion because the grant of summary judgment was based purely on statutory interpretation and undisputed facts not derived from the depositions, so defendant's motion for deposition costs was properly denied. Ritchie v. Ennis, 2004 MT 43, 320 M 94, 86 P3d 11 (2004). See also Roy v. Neibauer, 191 M 224, 623 P2d 555 (1981).

Discovery Not "Cut Off" Prematurely by Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended defendants resisted taking of depositions of witnesses favorable to plaintiffs' cause and thus the court's granting defendants' motion for summary judgment "cut off" discovery prematurely. The court held that plaintiffs failed to present an affidavit as required by Rule 56(f), M.R.Civ.P., stating why depositions could not be taken; nor did plaintiffs exercise their prerogative under Rules 30, 31, or 37, M.R.Civ.P., at any time during the year or more after the complaint was filed. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Abuse of Deposition Process — Basis for Tort of Abuse of Process: The plaintiff and his wife were divorced in 1976. The plaintiff sought to have the property agreement set aside as unconscionable and failed. In 1979, he filed a fraud action against his ex-wife and her attorney in conjunction with the dissolution. The ex-wife petitioned the court to hold plaintiff in contempt for failure to comply with the dissolution decree. Plaintiff, residing in Idaho, was served, failed to appear, and was held in contempt. The judge issued a bench warrant for his arrest. Defendants, counsel for the ex-wife in the fraud case, set a time to take plaintiff's deposition in Bozeman. Subsequent to noticing the deposition, defendants notified the District Court Judge that plaintiff would be in Bozeman that day. After taking plaintiff's deposition, defendants notified the judge, who had plaintiff arrested. Plaintiff filed suit against defendants for the tort of malicious abuse of process, and defendants moved for summary judgment. The federal court held that abuse of the power granted under Rule 30, M.R.Civ.P., relating to depositions can serve as the basis for the tort of abuse of process. Factual issues existed, so that the summary judgment motion was denied. Hopper v. Drysdale, 524 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 1970 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Former Rule 30(a). When depositions may be taken

Deposition of Witness Taken During Trial — Insurer's Counsel Allowed to Testify at Trial — Objection to Testimony Not Preserved for Appeal: Defendant insurer assumed that its attorney was listed as a witness and called the attorney at trial, but the attorney was not a listed witness, so plaintiffs objected. The trial court took steps to abate any prejudice to plaintiffs by continuing the trial, reopening discovery, and allowing plaintiffs to depose the attorney and examine the correspondence file that the attorney would rely on during testimony. When trial resumed the following day, the court noted that it had granted the motion to add the attorney as a witness with the understanding that the relevant files would be made available to plaintiffs and inquired whether the issue had been resolved. Both parties responded affirmatively, plaintiffs stipulated to admitting the correspondence file as an exhibit, and the attorney went on to testify without further objection from plaintiffs. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the attorney to testify. The Supreme Court found no fault in allowing the attorney to testify when plaintiffs' actions indicated agreement and acquiescence with the court's resolution of the initial objection to the testimony. Further, plaintiffs' objection was not preserved for appeal because plaintiffs made no renewed objection following the trial court's resolution of the matter. Nelson v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 101, 315 M 268, 68 P3d 689 (2003), followed in In re Bower, 2010 MT 19, 355 Mont. 108, 225 P.3d 784. See also Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002)

Motion to Retake Deposition Denied — No Relevancy — Improper Motion: Denial of motion to retake a deposition was not an abuse of discretion when the subject of the deposition was totally irrelevant to the issues and when movant claimed the other side improperly withheld, during discovery, information that would have made movant's deposition more valuable. Movant, however, failed to use the exclusive remedy of moving for an order compelling discovery. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Misrepresentation and Improper Process by Attorney — Sanctions: Since under 33-1-602 defendant, a foreign insurer, could only be served by service upon the Commissioner of Insurance, personal jurisdiction over insurer was not obtained when it was served at its Billings claim office. Thus, when plaintiffs' attorney appealed quashing of the service, the appeal was dismissed. Plaintiffs' attorney represented to the District Court's personnel that he had won the appeal and was entitled to a default judgment, and the personnel entered one against insurer for $150,000 punitive damages and $385 costs. The default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and the District Court correctly vacated it. As insurer was not properly served, the District Court properly ruled plaintiffs could not take depositions. The attorney was properly adjudged liable to insurer for $4,031.50 under 37-61-406, stating that an attorney guilty of deceit or collusion with intent to deceive the court or a party forfeits to the party injured by his deceit or collusion treble damages. LaFountaine v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 215 M 402, 698 P2d 410, 42 St. Rep. 496 (1985).

Former Rule 30(b). Notice of examination; general requirements — special notice — nonstenographic recording — production of documents and things — deposition of organization — deposition by telephone — limitations

Subpoena Issued Prior to Notice Void: A notary public is without authority to issue a subpoena to a witness, in an action pending for the purpose of taking his deposition, until the notice and a copy of the affidavit prescribed by the statute have been served upon the adverse party by the party desiring the deposition. Hence, a subpoena issued prior thereto is void and disobedience thereof does not constitute contempt. Hiber v. Morrill, 105 M 323, 72 P2d 685 (1937); State ex rel. Mangam v. District Court, 91 M 240, 6 P2d 873 (1932).

Former Rule 30(d). Schedule and duration; motion to terminate or limit examination

Unilateral Cancellation of Deposition by Plaintiff's Attorney — Sanctions Appropriate for Discovery Abuse: Plaintiff's attorney Palmer was directed to appear at a deposition requested by defendant. Palmer objected to the subpoena under Rule 45(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule and failed to appear for the deposition. The District Court sanctioned Palmer for discovery abuses pursuant to Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., and ordered him to pay defendant's attorney fees and costs. On appeal, Palmer argued that the effect of his objection was to quash the subpoena and suspend the deposition and disclosure of documents until further order of the court. Palmer was mistaken on both issues. This rule only contemplates a motion to terminate or limit a deposition during the taking of the deposition. Rule 45(b)(1) provides that a District Court may quash a subpoena, not an attorney. By unilaterally canceling the deposition, Palmer violated the deposition order. When Palmer finally was deposed, he refused to answer any questions unless defendant agreed to his stipulations. The Supreme Court considered the relationship between the sanctions and the extent and nature of the discovery abuse and extent of the prejudice to defendant caused by Palmer's failure to appear at the deposition, in light of Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996). Although the District Court could have taken other actions, such as dismissing the underlying action, the sanctions, though severe, related appropriately to the extent of the discovery abuse and prejudice to defendant and were affirmed absent any showing by Palmer that his failure to comply with the discovery orders was substantially justified. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000). See also Pioche Mines Consol., Inc. v. Dolman, 333 F2d 257 (9th Cir. 1964).

Former Rule 30(e). Submission to witness — changes — signing

Substantive Changes to Deposition Testimony Properly Viewed With Distrust: Albert filed an action to determine a claim for a prescriptive easement and quiet title to a road across Hastetter's property. Hastetter was deposed, and in addition to the original transcript, Hastetter also submitted three pages of corrections, which contained numerous substantive changes to the original testimony. Hastetter died prior to trial, so the entire deposition was entered into evidence. Hastetter's trustee contended that because Hastetter's credibility was not directly attacked at trial, the judge was not at liberty to view the amended testimony with distrust and that the original and amended testimony should stand as probative evidence for every fact stated because Hastetter was presumed to speak the truth. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court noted that a witness may make any changes in form or substance in altering deposition testimony, but that the witness who changes testimony on a material matter between the giving of the deposition and appearance at trial may be impeached by the former answers and cross-examined as to why the answers were changed. However, Hastetter's death foreclosed Albert's right to cross-examination, raising an issue regarding the evidentiary value of the substantive changes to the deposition testimony and challenging the trial court with conflicting evidence without the benefit of witness cross-examination. In the event that a party deponent is unavailable to address apparent conflicts in amended deposition testimony, the trial court must exercise sound discretion in weighing the value of the evidence, and the Supreme Court will not second-guess a trial court's determination regarding the strength and weight of conflicting evidence. With Hastetter unavailable to explain the extensive changes to his original deposition testimony, the trial court appropriately exercised its discretion in viewing Hastetter's deposition changes with great distrust. Albert v. Hastetter, 2002 MT 123, 310 M 82, 48 P3d 749 (2002). See also Lugtig v. Thomas, 89 F.R.D. 639 (N.D. Ill. 1981), and J.H. Harvey Co. v. Reddick, 522 SE 2d 749 (Ga. 1999).

Unsigned Deposition: A deposition from Arizona was received by counsel the morning of the trial. The deposition was not signed. After reading of the deposition was underway, counsel for defendants objected to it because of the lack of signature. No evidence of prejudice due to the irregularity was introduced. The court held the deposition was admissible, as the irregularity should have been discovered prior to commencing its reading and a motion to suppress made accordingly. Adams v. Cheney, 203 M 187, 661 P2d 434, 40 St. Rep. 383 (1983).

Former Rule 30(f). Certification by officer — exhibits — copies — notice of receipt

Failure to File Original Depositions — Harmless Error: Failure of court reporter to file original copies of depositions in accordance with this rule was at most harmless error where there was ample time to discover this fact and no objection was made. Mustang Beverage Co., Inc. v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 162 M 243, 511 P2d 1 (1973).

Former Rule 30(h). Audio-visual and tape recorded depositions Costs of Filed Depositions Recoverable: Expenses for taking depositions that are not used at trial and that are for the convenience of counsel are not recoverable costs. Expenses incurred in taking depositions that are filed with the District Court and that are used at trial are not for the convenience of the litigant and thus constitute recoverable costs under subsection (5) of this rule. Gilluly v. Miller, 270 M 272, 891 P2d 1147, 52 St. Rep. 178 (1995).

Admissibility of Audiotaped Deposition Despite Procedural Defects — No Prejudice: Defendants contended that an audiotaped deposition should not have been admitted because the rules regarding taped depositions had not been followed. Claimed defects included: (1) the operator's name and business address were not stated on the taped part of the deposition; (2) the tape was not indexed by a time generator or other adequate indexing device; and (3) the original audiotape was not filed with the Clerk of Court. The Supreme Court noted that while the procedural requirements were at issue, the accuracy of the taped deposition was never challenged. Defendants were afforded adequate opportunities at trial to object and excise specific portions of the testimony. Furthermore, defendants did not object to the technical deficiencies until the day of trial, even though the deposition had been taken and transcribed prior to that time. Defendants had adequate time to bring genuine questions of the tape's accuracy to the court's attention prior to the day of trial. The Supreme Court found no prejudice to defendants despite the technical questions, holding that it was within the broad discretion of the trial court to admit the tape. King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 659 (1994).

Payment for Perpetuation Deposition Transcription Attributable to Party at Whose Convenience Deposition Taken: Defendant's expert was unable to complete testimony at the scheduled hearing, so the parties agreed to a perpetuation deposition to allow the expert to complete the testimony. The trial court did not err in ordering payment by defendant for a transcription of the deposition because the testimony was taken for the convenience of defendant's expert and on defendant's behalf. Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Costs Limited to Those Incurred in Constructing Exhibits Admitted at Trial: The lower court awarded costs to the plaintiff for expenses incurred for videotape depositions, photographic exhibits, telephone calls, and expert witnesses' airfare and hotel bills. The Supreme Court held that only expenses expended on exhibits admitted at trial may be taxed to the losing party. The court specified that telephone calls, airfare, hotel bills, rental car expenses, and other incidental costs incurred in obtaining depositions are not recoverable. Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 1082 (1990), followed in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Costs to Be Borne When Transcription Obtained for Party's Own Use: The District Court erred in requiring plaintiff to pay defendant's costs incurred in transcribing a witness's audio-visual deposition. Although defendant provided transcriptions for use during viewing of the deposition at trial, defendant obtained the transcription for its own use and convenience and must therefore bear the transcribing costs. McGinley v. Ole's Country Stores, Inc., 241 M 248, 786 P2d 1156, 47 St. Rep. 181 (1990).

Admissibility of Videotape With Cautionary Instruction — No Objection — Waiver: An insurer assigned as error the admission to evidence of a doctor's videotaped deposition, contending the deposition was cumulative, had no probative value, and invoked the sympathy and passion of the jury. The videotape was submitted to the jury without any objection by the insurer and under a cautionary instruction from the court that the video was not to be considered for the insured's damages but only to show whether he was physically able to participate in the fire in the way the insurer claimed he did. The District Court Judge, in his order denying the posttrial motions, properly found the objection to submission of the evidence to have been waived. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Former Rule 31. Depositions upon written questions

Discovery Not "Cut Off" Prematurely by Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended defendants resisted taking of depositions of witnesses favorable to plaintiffs' cause and thus the court's granting defendants' motion for summary judgment "cut off" discovery prematurely. The court held that plaintiffs failed to present an affidavit as required by Rule 56(f), M.R.Civ.P., stating why depositions could not be taken; nor did plaintiffs exercise their prerogative under Rules 30, 31, or 37, M.R.Civ.P., at any time during the year or more after the complaint was filed. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Former Rule 32. Use of depositions in court proceedings

Speculation Insufficient Grounds for Award of Sanctions: Defendants prevailed in an easement case and sought sanctions from plaintiffs for bringing an appeal in bad faith. The Supreme Court noted that although plaintiffs' claims were unsound, there was no evidence that the claims were brought in bad faith, nor did defendants claim that the appeal was unfounded or intended to cause delay. Defendants could only speculate as to the purpose of the appeal, and the court held that speculation provides insufficient grounds for awarding sanctions under this rule. Kullick v. Skyline Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2003 MT 137, 316 M 146, 69 P3d 225 (2003).

Attorney Fees Owing for Filing Unfounded Appeal: The District Court repeatedly determined that a child visitation schedule adequately and appropriately provided parenting opportunities between the parties. Nevertheless, the father continually filed motions in District Court and appealed to the Supreme Court, attempting to modify visitation. However, the appeal failed to properly present evidence or authority that the District Court erred in refusing to modify visitation, and the appellate briefs did not comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) in a form that the mother could intelligently respond to. The Supreme Court held that the appeal was taken without substantial and reasonable grounds, was entirely unfounded, and was intended to cause delay. The mother's request for attorney fees and costs for having to respond to a frivolous appeal was granted. In re Marriage of Snow, 2002 MT 143, 310 M 260, 49 P3d 610 (2002).

Former Rule 32(a). Use of depositions

Admissibility of Party Deposition — Failure of Party to Attend Trial — No Evidence Party Offering Deposition Procured Absence of Other Party — Cumulative Evidence Held Harmless Error: Just before trial on a complaint for damages brought by Susan, her husband David, their minor daughter, and their failed business, Rocky Mountain Enterprises, Inc., Susan and her minor daughter decided not to attend the trial because of fear for their safety and sent a declaration from San Diego, California, instead. The District Court denied a request by David and the failed business to introduce the deposition given by Susan in place of her live testimony, citing for its reasoning the fact that Susan had refused on her own volition to attend the trial. Distinguishing In re Marriage of Powell, 231 M 72, 750 P2d 1099 (1988), the Supreme Court held that when a witness's absence is procured by another, the person procuring the absence may not offer a deposition of the witness's testimony because the deposition provides no opportunity for cross-examination. In the case before it, the Supreme Court noted that there was no evidence that David or the company had procured the absence of Susan or the minor daughter and that because those witnesses were more than 100 miles from the place of trial, the District Court erred when it refused to admit Susan's deposition. However, the District Court correctly held that the deposition was cumulative of other evidence, pursuant to 26-1-102, and the Supreme Court held that only harmless error had been committed by the District Court. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Impeachment With Deposition Testimony Not Allowed if Not Clearly Inconsistent: The District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the impeachment of a witness with deposition testimony when the deposition testimony and the trial testimony were not clearly inconsistent. Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Failure to Prove Lack of Hearing Attendance Because of Travel Distance — Depositions Refused: Husband exercised his prerogative not to attend a hearing, so his attorney offered husband's deposition and several affidavits as evidence of husband's testimony. Admission of the deposition was refused, and husband later argued the deposition should have been admitted pursuant to the provision of this rule that allows a party's deposition if the party is at a distance greater than 100 miles from the place of hearing. In affirming, the Supreme Court found no offer of proof that husband was unable to attend because of too great a travel distance, but did note husband was uncooperative with the court and opposing party throughout proceedings and decided not to attend for personal reasons. Husband could not later introduce testimony that could not be verified or cross-examined. In re Marriage of Powell, 231 M 72, 750 P2d 1099, 45 St. Rep. 441 (1988), distinguished in Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Deposition of Managing Agents Erroneously Excluded: The trial court erroneously excluded the deposition of managing agents on the grounds that the plaintiff did not notify the state that the depositions were to be offered, that no cross-examination could be conducted, and that plaintiff made no showing that the witnesses were unavailable. The Supreme Court ruled that there were no such requirements for use of depositions of managing agents. In this case, the witnesses were Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) personnel whose jobs entailed sufficient supervisory responsibility to place them within the status of managing agents for the state. The Supreme Court found considerable evidence upon which to find justifiable reliance by the plaintiff contractor in the area of cost underruns in highway construction and remanded for new trial. Clark Bros. Contractors v. St., 218 M 490, 710 P2d 41, 42 St. Rep. 1765 (1985), followed in Hart-Albin Co. v. McLees, Inc., 264 M 1, 870 P2d 51, 51 St. Rep. 112 (1994).

Use of Part-Time Arizona Resident's Deposition: The deposition of a party could be used at the trial even though the party did not appear. The party lived part of the time in Arizona and was in that state during the trial. Edington v. Creek Oil Co., 213 M 112, 690 P2d 970, 41 St. Rep. 1990 (1984).

No Showing of Unavailability Required: A deposition of one of the parties was admitted without a showing of the party's unavailability. Because of the many hearings prior to trial and because of the representations made to the court that the case would be submitted on depositions and an agreed statement of facts, the deposition was properly admitted. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Parol Evidence Not Made Admissible by Rule: Buechler entered into a contract with Payne, granting him the right to sell Buechler's property. Payne's copy of the contract stated that the listing was exclusive. Buechler offered parol evidence that Payne had written "nonexclusive" on her copy of the contract. Her copy was destroyed and therefore was not introduced. The court held that the parol evidence was inadmissible under the parol evidence rule and that Rule 106, Montana Rules of Evidence, and Rule 32(a)(4), M.R.Civ.P., cannot render this otherwise inadmissible parol evidence admissible. Payne v. Buechler, 192 M 311, 628 P2d 646, 38 St. Rep. 799 (1981).

Deposition Taken After Court's Deadline: Where a deposition is taken after the time the District Court establishes as a deadline for pretrial discovery, the District Court cannot be held in error on the basis of documents not before it at that time. Reaves v. Reinbold, 189 M 284, 615 P2d 896 (1980).

Objection to Lack of Foundation for Impeachment — Reading of Plaintiff's Deposition Properly Refused: The method chosen by the cross-examiner violated Rule 613(b), Montana Rules of Evidence. The witness was not on the stand. The cross-examiner proposed to offer in evidence, in the absence of the witness, a deposition taken of the witness pretrial for the purpose of impeachment. Thus, the deposition itself was extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement. It was not admissible unless the witness had an opportunity to explain or deny the same, the opposite party was afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same, and the opposite party was afforded an opportunity to interrogate her on the deposition. This foundational requirement not having been met by the cross-examiner, the District Court was correct in denying the admission into evidence of the deposition or any part of it under Rule 613(b), Montana Rules of Evidence, and Rule 32(b), M.R.Civ.P. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

No Deviation in Trial and Deposition Testimony: District Court did not err in failing to admit into evidence a deposition of defaulting defendant where his testimony at the trial did not materially deviate from that contained in the deposition and material matters covered by the deposition were not omitted in his testimony at the trial. Walsh-Anderson Co. v. Keller, 139 M 210, 362 P2d 533 (1961). See also Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Absence of Witness From Jurisdiction — Proof: Before the deposition of a witness may be received in evidence on ground of absence from the jurisdiction, the party offering it must show by positive testimony that the witness had departed from and was at the time of trial out of the state, and the bare statement of counsel that inquiry had been within the state, with address unknown, was insufficient to warrant admission. Healy v. First Nat'l Bank of Great Falls, 108 M 180, 89 P2d 555 (1939).

Previous Deposition Properly Excluded — Identity of Issues and Parties: A deposition taken to be used in a guardianship proceeding was improperly admitted in evidence in a contest involving the question whether the incompetent for whom a guardian was appointed, and who subsequently died of dementia, was sane or insane at the time he executed the will sought to be probated; neither the parties nor the subject matter were the same, and the evidence was inadmissible. In re Murphy's Estate, 43 M 353, 116 P 1004 (1911).

Affidavits of Nonresidents Used to Prove Death: In application for letters of administration where there is no contest, affidavits of nonresident witnesses taken before a notary public may be used to prove death, although no commission was issued and no notice given that the testimony of such witnesses would be taken. The District Judge, if he is not satisfied with the proof thus offered, has the power to order further testimony. In re Liter's Estate, 19 M 474, 48 P 753 (1897).

Former Rule 32(b). Objections to admissibility

Objection to Lack of Foundation — Reading of Plaintiff's Deposition Properly Refused: The method chosen by the cross-examiner violated Rule 613(b), Montana Rules of Evidence. The witness was not on the stand. The cross-examiner proposed to offer in evidence, in the absence of the witness, a deposition taken of the witness pretrial for the purpose of impeachment. Thus, the deposition itself was extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement. It was not admissible unless the witness had an opportunity to explain or deny the same, the opposite party was afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same, and the opposite party was afforded an opportunity to interrogate her on the deposition. This foundational requirement not having been met by the cross-examiner, the District Court was correct in denying the admission into evidence of the deposition or any part of it under Rule 613(b), Montana Rules of Evidence, and Rule 32(b), M.R.Civ.P. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

Time for Objections: Where a deposition is taken pursuant to the statutes, unless otherwise provided by stipulation of the parties at the time of taking the original deposition, no objection will be permitted by the trial court unless objections were interposed at the time the deposition was taken. Williams v. Kearns, 138 M 51, 353 P2d 748 (1960).

Former Rule 32(c). Deleted

Conflicting Evidence Not Precluded: Where a plaintiff offers a deposition in evidence, he is not bound by such evidence in the sense that he may not offer evidence that conflicts with it and have all the evidence considered by the jury. McCollum v. O'Neil, 128 M 584, 281 P2d 493 (1954).

Former Rule 32(d). Effect of errors and irregularities in depositions Motion to Edit Deposition Testimony Denied — Waiver: Defendant moved to edit deposition testimony despite the failure to object to the testimony during the deposition. Under this rule, the failure to raise a reasonable objection to the testimony during the deposition constitutes a waiver of errors and irregularities in the testimony. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Unsigned Deposition: A deposition from Arizona was received by counsel the morning of the trial. The deposition was not signed. After reading of the deposition was underway, counsel for defendants objected to it because of the lack of signature. No evidence of prejudice due to the irregularity was introduced. The court held the deposition was admissible, as the irregularity should have been discovered prior to commencing its reading and a motion to suppress made accordingly. Adams v. Cheney, 203 M 187, 661 P2d 434, 40 St. Rep. 383 (1983).

When No Notice: When notice of deposition was not given, this section did not require that opposing counsel make written objection. Groves v. Groves, 173 M 291, 567 P2d 459 (1977).

Waiver of Objections: Where counsel took part in taking of depositions, but raised no objection prior to their introduction in evidence, defendant had waived the objection by failure to move suppression of the depositions prior to commencement of the trial. The party taking deposition is entitled to settlement of admissibility in advance and to remove objections by retaking. Best v. London Guar. & Accident Co., 100 M 332, 47 P2d 456 (1935), explained in Zachariasen v. Meeks, 133 M 278, 322 P2d 1115 (1958).

Former Rule 33. Interrogatories to parties

Dismissal After Failure to Comply With Discovery — Sanction Proper: Linn was injured in a pedestrian accident and sued for damages. Defendant sent interrogatories and requests for production of Linn's medical records and accident history, but Linn failed to timely respond. Defendant moved to compel, but Linn's responses were at best incomplete. At a deposition, Linn was able to provide only vague answers and little of the requested medical information.

Defendant filed a second motion to compel. The District Court recognized Linn's difficulties in recalling specific information and stated that although it did not appear that Linn was willfully disrupting the discovery process, it was necessary to set a deadline for response to the long-standing discovery requests and noted that failure to comply could result in dismissal of the action. No further information from Linn was forthcoming. After more than 2 years of failed discovery attempts, the District Court dismissed the case with prejudice, and Linn appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), to determine whether the consequence inflicted by the sanction related to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse, related to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party, and was consistent with any warning issued by the District Court. The court also considered Linn's disregard of the District Court's orders and authority. Here, Linn continuously failed to fully respond to discovery requests and ignored the court orders that gave her the opportunity to do so. Linn's unresponsiveness prejudiced defendant by preventing meaningful discovery and could not be considered insignificant, and dismissal of the complaint sufficiently related to the extent of prejudice suffered by defendant. Last, Linn failed to comply with discovery despite the District Court's patience and understanding of Linn's purported difficulties in responding. Thus, dismissal of the action was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court was affirmed. Linn v. Whitaker, 2007 MT 46, 336 M 131, 152 P3d 1282 (2007), following Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000), and Culbertson Health Care Corp. v. Stevens, 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Failure to Comply With Discovery Order and Sign Discovery Documents — Sanctions for Discovery Abuse Proper: Defendants failed to comply with discovery requests, so the District Court ordered compliance under Rule 37(a), M.R.Civ.P. Defendants then served their answers in a timely manner, but neglected to sign the documents in violation of this rule. The District Court then determined that discovery sanctions were available under Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P., and denied defendants' attempts to introduce additional affidavits not previously submitted through the discovery process. Defendants contended that the District Court erred by imposing sanctions without allowing defendants a second chance to provide signed answers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants' failure to comply with discovery was by no means unintentional, but rather a concerted effort to avoid cooperating with plaintiff and the District Court. Nevertheless, despite defendants' intransigence, the District Court considered defendants' case on the basis of the record, and the sanctions did not prejudice defendants' case. Therefore, the imposition of sanctions was not an abuse of discretion, and the award was affirmed. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002), followed in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2005 MT 217, 328 M 260, 121 P3d 506 (2005).

Failure to Move to Compel Answer to Interrogatories or for Discovery Sanctions — Failure to Respond to Discovery Not Precluding Introduction of Evidence: After being turned down by the County Sheriff, Smith requested that the District Court grant him a permit to carry a concealed weapon. During discovery, Smith requested information from the county regarding his criminal file, but the county failed to answer the interrogatories. Nevertheless, the District Court admitted Smith's criminal file as evidence, which Smith alleged was an abuse of court discretion, contending that because the county failed to answer the interrogatories, it was precluded from using the information sought by the interrogatories at trial. The Supreme Court pointed out that there are remedies other than exclusion of the evidence for the county's omissions. Subsection (a) of this rule requires a party to respond to an interrogatory by either answer or objection, but if the party fails to respond, the opposing party may move for an order to compel discovery pursuant to Rule 37(d), M.R.Civ.P. A party may also move for discovery sanctions under Rule 37(a), M.R.Civ.P. In this case, Smith did not move to compel an answer or move for discovery sanctions, nor was the evidence inconsistent with the information in the Sheriff's correspondence. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the criminal file, despite the county's failure to respond to Smith's discovery request. Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834, 56 St. Rep. 1318 (1999).

Failure to Disclose Identity of Witnesses: Court's refusal to exclude the testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses whose identities had not been disclosed, despite interrogatories requesting their identities, constituted reversible error when testimony was crucial to plaintiffs' case and motion to exclude was supported with a complete statement of the surrounding facts. Sanders v. Mount Haggin Livestock Co., 160 M 73, 500 P2d 397 (1972).

Former Rule 33(a). Availability — procedures for use — limitations

Striking of Defenses as Discovery Sanction and Damages Affirmed — Smith Test for Assessing Discovery Sanctions Clarified: When defendant failed to respond to discovery requests for nearly 1 year and effectively disregarded the District Court's order to supplement insufficient discovery responses, the District Court sanctioned defendant by dismissing defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff on the issue of liability and awarding damages to plaintiff. Defendant appealed on grounds that the sanction was excessively harsh. In assessing the propriety of discovery sanctions imposed pursuant to Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court applies the three-part test set out in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), considering whether the consequence imposed via the sanction: (1) relates to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse; (2) relates to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party that resulted from the discovery abuse; and (3) is consistent with the consequences expressly warned of by the District Court, if a warning was issued. The court clarified that the third prong of the Smith test applies only if the District Court issues a warning. In addition to the test factors, the Supreme Court also considers a party's disregard of the court's authority and orders. If a ready, confident, and accurate determination of a party's good faith compliance with the discovery process cannot be made, the correctness of the District Court's imposition of sanctions will be presumed. In this case, the sanctions related sufficiently to the prejudice suffered by plaintiff, and in light of defendant's unwavering disregard of the District Court's orders and authority, the court did not abuse its discretion by striking defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff. Absent evidence that the court abused its discretion, the award of damages was also proper. Culbertson-Froid-Bainville Health Care Corp. v. JP Stevens & Co., Inc., 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Interrogatories Served After Close of Discovery — Sanctions for Late Response Inappropriate: The District Court's scheduling order provided that the parties' discovery deadline was December 18, 1995, and that the deadline could not be modified without leave of court. Some 6 weeks after the deadline, plaintiff served interrogatories without leave of court. Defendant did not answer the interrogatories within 30 days, as required by this rule. On the first day of trial, plaintiff sought sanctions against defendant pursuant to Rule 37(d)(2), M.R.Civ.P., and requested the court to prohibit defendant from introducing designated matters into evidence. Plaintiff admitted that the interrogatories were late, but asserted that this fact did not excuse defendant from the duty to answer or file objections. However, Rule 37(d)(2), M.R.Civ.P., authorizes sanctions to be applied against a party that fails to serve answers or objections to interrogatories after proper service, which in this case did not occur. Defendant did not abuse discovery procedures or cause unnecessary delay, so, lacking proper service, sanctions were unwarranted. Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999).

Amendment Would Change Legal Theory and Unduly Prejudice Opponent Who Has Moved for Summary Judgment: At a meeting with plaintiff's attorney, the county claimed that a road on plaintiff's land was created by petition and plaintiff's attorney claimed that it was a private road. Plaintiff's attorney did extensive factual and legal research and mailed the research papers and results to the county. The research cost plaintiff $7,478. The County Attorney responded that the county still maintained that the road was created by petition. Plaintiff sued for a judgment declaring the road private. The county's answers to interrogatories were that the road was created by petition and that the county did not contend that the road was legally created through any other means. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment, and the court refused to let the county amend its interrogatory answers to claim creation of the road by prescription. The court's refusal was proper. To allow the amendment would unduly prejudice plaintiff, which spent considerable time and expense to prove its case in the face of continual county claims that the road was created by petition and in the face of a last minute change of the county's legal theory to claim creation by another means. Eagle Ridge Ranch Ltd. Partnership v. Park County, 283 M 62, 938 P2d 1342, 54 St. Rep. 495 (1997).

Allowing Witness Not Listed in Pretrial Order to Testify — Abuse of Discretion: Neither a scheduling order nor a pretrial order listed Goacher as a witness; rather, Stokes was listed as the witness who would provide foundation for the survey of an accident scene. One week before trial, defendant learned it was Goacher who had prepared the survey and would testify, but there was not time to depose Goacher prior to trial. At trial, defendant objected to Goacher's testimony on the grounds of surprise and prejudice. The objection was overruled, and defendant did not request a continuance. Failure to reveal the information regarding witness testimony in a timely fashion resulted in surprise and prejudice to defendant and constituted reversible error, notwithstanding defendant's failure to request a continuance. Bache v. Gilden, 252 M 178, 827 P2d 817, 49 St. Rep. 203 (1992), overruling Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27 (1988), and Sikorski v. Olin & Rolin Mfg., 174 M 107, 568 P2d 571 (1977), to the extent that they held that failure to request a continuance at trial constituted a waiver of the right to claim error on appeal, and followed in Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046, 49 St. Rep. 503 (1992).

Late Disclosure — Evidence Improperly Excluded: The District Court abused its discretion by excluding evidence on the basis of late disclosure of new witnesses by defendant, given the fact that defendant supplemented its interrogatory answers 24 days before trial, plaintiff refused to depose the new witnesses at defendant's expense, and plaintiff failed to request a continuance. Defendant's alleged knowledge of the witnesses before the discovery deadline also did not warrant exclusion, and plaintiff's claim of prejudice by the late discovery did not justify an exclusion that substantially affected defendant's rights. Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 1865 (1988), overruled in Bache v. Gilden, 252 M 178, 827 P2d 817, 49 St. Rep. 203 (1992), to the extent that Barrett held that failure to request a continuance at trial constituted a waiver of the right to claim error on appeal. Bache was followed in Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046, 49 St. Rep. 503 (1992). Plaintiff's claim that defense attorneys defrauded the court by obtaining a reversal of this decision by representing that six named witnesses would testify to specific acts of misconduct was properly dismissed through summary judgment because plaintiff chose not to use the means available to him to investigate the truth of the representations made to him. Barrett v. Holland & Hart, 256 M 101, 845 P2d 714, 49 St. Rep. 1156 (1992), and 50 St. Rep. 63 (1993).

Reference to Allegations Insufficient Answer: Mere reference back to complaint allegations is insufficient to answer an interrogatory. Pipinich v. Battershell, 232 M 507, 759 P2d 148, 45 St. Rep. 1237 (1988).

Sanctions Not Applicable to Interrogatories Propounded by Other Party Absent Order: When a party failed to correctly provide answers to a continuing interrogatory propounded by the other party, the sanctions of Rule 37(b) do not apply because that rule relates to the failure to comply with a court order compelling discovery. Thibaudeau v. Uglum, 201 M 260, 653 P2d 855, 39 St. Rep. 2096 (1982).

Amended Answer: The court did not err in allowing amendment of previously answered interrogatories, even though on the eve of trial, because defendants were well aware of the theory broadened by the amended answer and did not request a continuance. Sikorski v. Olin & Rolin Mfg., 174 M 107, 568 P2d 571 (1977), overruled in Bache v. Gilden, 252 M 178, 827 P2d 817, 49 St. Rep. 203 (1992), to the extent that Sikorski held that failure to request a continuance at trial constituted a waiver of the right to claim error on appeal.

Privileged Matter — P.S.C.: Interrogatories which sought privileged material and were irrelevant were not required to be answered by the Public Service Commission. P.S.C. v. District Court, 162 M 225, 511 P2d 334 (1973).

Unreasonable Requests — Annoyance and Expense: In action by insured against insurance company seeking damages for breach of contract and punitive damages for alleged violations of the insurance code, trial court abused its discretion by ordering answer to interrogatory requesting names and addresses of all persons within the State of Montana who had made a claim against the insurance company and whose claims the insurance company had either refused to pay or had not paid in full during the last 3 years. Even if relevant material to issues was pleaded, the interrogatory was unreasonable since the value of the information sought did not bear a reasonable relationship to the annoyance and expense involved in answering the interrogatory. State ex rel. Bankers Life & Cas. Co. v. Miller, 160 M 256, 502 P2d 27 (1972).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Proper Use: This rule cannot be used by a party as a weapon for punishment or forfeiture or an instrument for avoidance of a trial on the merits. Wolfe v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 29, 409 P2d 528 (1966), followed in Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 1865 (1988).

Former Rule 33(b). Scope — use at trial

Language of Court Order Following That of Special Interrogatories Not Erroneous: The jury found in answer to special interrogatories that certain money transfers from estate accounts did not constitute undue influence and were thus valid. Plaintiff argued that the court went beyond the jury's verdict in stating in its judgment that the transfers were valid. However, the language in the court's order followed that used in the special interrogatories agreed to by the parties and upon which the jury rendered its verdict; thus, the court did not err in its judgment. Hauck v. Seright, 1998 MT 198, 290 M 309, 964 P2d 749, 55 St. Rep. 838 (1998).

Failure to Impose Sanctions Proper — Information Requested in Interrogatories Available in Other Court Documents: Plaintiff union failed to answer some of defendants' interrogatories because the union objected to the defendants seeking discovery of the legal theories of the complaint. Defendants' motion to dismiss the action on this basis was denied by the District Court. The District Court did not err since the legal theories were readily available to the defendants in earlier documents and briefs. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Former Rule 34(a). Scope

Discovery Abuse — Failure to Follow Through: The defendant sought discovery of income tax returns that the plaintiff had never filed. The plaintiff repeatedly promised to file the tax returns and provide copies to the defendant but failed to do so over a period of 2 years. Rule 34(a), M.R.Civ.P., does not require parties to produce nonexistent documents, but a party may commit discovery abuse that is subject to sanctions by making repeated assurances to provide discovery and then failing to do so. Peterman v. Herbalife Intl., Inc., 2010 MT 142, 356 Mont. 542, 234 P.3d 898.

Dismissal of Case Permissible Sanction for Unexplained Discovery Abuse — No Duty of Court to Warn: When a plaintiff committed discovery abuse for the unexplained failure to file and provide income tax returns despite repeated assurances over 2 years that it would be done, the Supreme Court approved dismissal of the case as an appropriate sanction. The Supreme Court declared it has a low-tolerance approach to discovery abuse and further stated that a District Court has no responsibility to explicitly warn that sanctions may be imposed, including that a case may be dismissed as a sanction. Peterman v. Herbalife Intl., Inc., 2010 MT 142, 356 Mont 542, 234 P.3d 898.

Dismissal After Failure to Comply With Discovery — Sanction Proper: Linn was injured in a pedestrian accident and sued for damages. Defendant sent interrogatories and requests for production of Linn's medical records and accident history, but Linn failed to timely respond. Defendant moved to compel, but Linn's responses were at best incomplete. At a deposition, Linn was able to provide only vague answers and little of the requested medical information. Defendant filed a second motion to compel. The District Court recognized Linn's difficulties in recalling specific information and stated that although it did not appear that Linn was willfully disrupting the discovery process, it was necessary to set a deadline for response to the long-standing discovery requests and noted that failure to comply could result in dismissal of the action. No further information from Linn was forthcoming. After more than 2 years of failed discovery attempts, the District Court dismissed the case with prejudice, and Linn appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), to determine whether the consequence inflicted by the sanction related to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse, related to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party, and was consistent with any warning issued by the District Court. The court also considered Linn's disregard of the District Court's orders and authority. Here, Linn continuously failed to fully respond to discovery requests and ignored the court orders that gave her the opportunity to do so. Linn's unresponsiveness prejudiced defendant by preventing meaningful discovery and could not be considered insignificant, and dismissal of the complaint sufficiently related to the extent of prejudice suffered by defendant. Last, Linn failed to comply with discovery despite the District Court's patience and understanding of Linn's purported difficulties in responding. Thus, dismissal of the action was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court was affirmed. Linn v. Whitaker, 2007 MT 46, 336 M 131, 152 P3d 1282 (2007), following Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000), and Culbertson Health Care Corp. v. Stevens, 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Discovery of Medical Records Upon Commencement of Action for Damages Placing Mental and Physical Condition at Issue — Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege as to Condition in Controversy: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Plaintiff brought damage claims related to the child's injuries and claims related to plaintiff's own emotional distress, loss of consortium, and posttraumatic stress disorder. The state moved to compel production of all of plaintiff's health care records from before and after the fall. The District Court denied the motion, holding that the records were constitutionally protected and irrelevant to the case and therefore not discoverable. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted plaintiff's constitutional right to confidentiality of medical records, but cited State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91 (1991), for the holding that that right must be balanced against a defendant's right to defend itself in an informed manner and that records of prior physical or mental conditions are discoverable only if they relate to currently claimed damages. Here, plaintiff commenced an action for damages that placed in issue the mental and physical condition arising from the accident, thus waiving any physician-patient privilege as to the condition in controversy, and the state had the right to discover evidence related to prior medical conditions that was possibly connected to plaintiff's current damages. Denial of the discovery motion prejudiced the state's right to defend itself in an informed manner, constituting reversible error. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Financial Documents, School Transcripts, and Personnel Records Irrelevant to Medical Damages Claim — Discovery Properly Disallowed: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Plaintiff brought damage claims related to the child's injuries and claims related to plaintiff's own medical problems stemming from trauma associated with the fall. The state moved to compel production of plaintiff's financial documents, school transcript, and personnel records. The District Court denied the motion, finding that plaintiff's statement of damages was sufficient and that the requested documents were unlikely to lead to discovery of any relevant information. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff did not claim lost earnings or lost earning capacity. Only plaintiff's mental and emotional conditions were at issue, and the documents were irrelevant to those legitimate issues, so absent a showing of prejudice to the state's case, denial of discovery was proper. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Unreasonable and Vexatious Multiplication of Court Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: First Interstate Bank was Bayers' court-appointed conservator. McGimpsey claimed to be Bayers' private attorney and began expressing an interest in matters involving Bayers' estate, at which point the conservator became concerned about the extent of McGimpsey's involvement in Bayers' affairs and requested in writing copies of any legal documents that McGimpsey had that may have been executed by Bayers. McGimpsey ignored the request. The conservator moved in District Court to compel production of the requested information and included a request for attorney fees necessitated by the motion. McGimpsey responded with a letter threatening the conservator's counsel with sanctions and listing complaints and criticisms of the conservator's handling of Bayers' estate. McGimpsey then moved to strike scandalous, immaterial, and irrelevant content in the conservator's motion and brief, but the motion was denied. The court instead granted the conservator's motion to compel and for attorney fees. McGimpsey filed another motion to alter or amend the order granting attorney fees. That motion was also denied, and the court ordered a hearing on the amount of sanctions to be awarded unless the parties agreed to the amount of attorney fees being assessed. The conservator agreed to the court's suggestion, but McGimpsey did not, so a hearing on the amount of fees was scheduled. McGimpsey filed another motion to vacate the hearing and to establish a discovery schedule regarding attorney fees. That motion was denied at the beginning of the hearing, and the conservator's counsel testified as to reasonable attorney fees incurred because of McGimpsey's conduct. The court issued an order requiring McGimpsey to pay Bayers' estate $1,500 in attorney fees pursuant to 37-61-421, but McGimpsey filed another motion to alter or amend the order. That motion was also denied, and McGimpsey appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that in a civil action such as this, all discovery and discovery disputes, including sanctions, should be governed by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and not by 37-61-421. Rules 34 and 37, M.R.Civ.P., anticipate the existence of a dispute between opposing parties, but the underlying conservatorship proceeding in this case was not an adversarial proceeding. Formal discovery proceedings were not required for the conservator to obtain documents considered relevant to Bayers' estate. McGimpsey could have provided a straightforward answer as to whether he had any of the requested documents, but instead he chose to force a needless multiplication of proceedings and the pointless involvement of the District Court in the dispute. The court's conclusion that McGimpsey unreasonably and vexatiously prolonged the litigation was not in error. Because McGimpsey continued to force the matter to the Supreme Court, he was also held responsible under 37-61-421 for the conservator's expenses and attorney fees incurred in the appeal. Termination of Parental Rights — Father Not Allowed "In Camera" Inspection of Entire File: In proceedings to terminate a father's parental rights, when the father moved for an "in camera" inspection of the entire Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) file and the Department objected to disclosure of reports prepared by the foster parents, it was not clearly erroneous for the District Court to deny disclosure of evidence in view of failure on the part of the father's counsel to attempt to limit or specify in any manner the information requested. In re M.A.W. & K.M.W., 256 M 296, 846 P2d 985, 50 St. Rep. 64 (1993).

Equitable Bill of Discovery Allowable Under Limited Circumstances: While modern rules of pleading and practice virtually eliminated the need for an equitable bill of discovery, it is cognizable under the following limited circumstances: (1) it is available only against a person or entity that cannot be a defendant in subsequent litigation; (2) it is available for the names and addresses of potential defendants and for onsite visits to inspect specific items that may have caused a documented injury; and (3) plaintiff in an equitable action must show that the discovery requested cannot be obtained otherwise and has been requested of and denied by the person or entity that, for whatever reason, cannot be a defendant in subsequent litigation. An equitable bill of discovery that did not meet these narrow criteria was properly dismissed under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Temple v. Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 254 M 455, 840 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 661 (1992), distinguishing State ex rel. Pitcher v. District Court, 114 M 128, 133 P2d 350 (1943), and Japp v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389 (1981).

Relevancy of Real Estate Appraisals: In proceeding to condemn strip of land in front of leased building, Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) could not be compelled by lessee to produce appraisals containing no opinion as to damages to or value of leasehold. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 149 M 384, 427 P2d 49 (1967).

Inspection of Land: In eminent domain proceeding, the State was improperly denied the right to inspect the condemned land to gather evidence on the issue of lack of water. State ex rel. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 147 M 348, 412 P2d 832 (1966).

Inspection of Land — Drilling of Wells: State's motion for inspection to drill wells on condemnee's property should have been allowed. State ex rel. Highway Comm'n v. District Court, 147 M 348, 412 P2d 832 (1966).

Relevance of Evidence — Criminal Cases: Even if the discovery statute is made applicable to criminal cases by 46-16-201, defendant was not entitled to the inspection of written materials, where there was no showing as to what the material consisted of, whether it was relevant to the defense or that it was admissible in evidence. State ex rel. Keast v. District Court, 135 M 545, 342 P2d 1071 (1959).

Production as Unreasonable Search and Seizure: A compulsory production of private books and papers by means of a subpoena duces tecum constitutes a violation of the constitutional protection against unreasonable searches and seizures under Art. III, sec. 7, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 11, 1972 Mont. Const.), unless the books and documents have first been shown to be material or relevant to the issues in a cause and the court is apprised of the nature of the action and the necessity for their production. Where petitioner made no request or showing, the order violated constitutional guaranty. State ex rel. Smith v. District Court, 112 M 506, 118 P2d 141 (1941).

Work Product of Attorney: The former discovery provision (section 93-8301, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 34, M.R.Civ.P.)), assuming it to be applicable to criminal cases by 46-16-201, referred only to such matters as might be introduced in evidence and not to ex parte statements of a prosecuting witness touching the facts and circumstances surrounding the commission of a crime, reduced to writing by and in possession of the County Attorney. St. v. Hall, 55 M 182, 175 P 267 (1918).

Alternative Sources of Evidence: Where on an application for inspection of books and papers it appeared that the evidence sought was desired for use in a pending action, and that it was in defendant's possession, and related to the merits of the action stated by plaintiff, it was not a prerequisite to the granting of such application that plaintiff should also show that the evidence could not be obtained from other sources. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 30 M 206, 76 P 206 (1904).

Copies of Original Documents Not Included: Where an order directed defendant to permit plaintiff to inspect original letters in defendant's possession, a further provision that plaintiff should also be entitled to examine "letter-press copies of such letters" was erroneous. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 30 M 206, 76 P 206 (1904).

Fraud — Scope of Examination to Be Limited: Where, in an action to have defendant declared a constructive trustee of a certain interest in mining property, plaintiff claimed that he had been deprived of the same by reason of a fraudulent conspiracy by defendant and certain others, by means of which defendant acquired title to the property, an order for inspection of defendant's books and papers with reference to such property should have been limited to such of the correspondence between defendant's executive officers and its agents through whom the purchase of the property was made as related to the acquisition of the title to such property. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 30 M 206, 76 P 206 (1904).

Inherent Power of Courts to Order Discovery: In the absence of any statute, the District Court, in the exercise of its inherent powers as a court of equity, could upon a sufficient showing make an order for discovery which would furnish plaintiff all the relief which he could obtain under section 93-8301, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 34, M.R.Civ.P.). The legislative enactment added nothing to the power of the court as a court of equity, but on the contrary apparently sought to confer on law courts the authority long exercised by courts of equity independent of statutory authority. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 27 M 441, 71 P 602 (1903).

Former Rule 34(b). Procedure

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Striking of Defenses as Discovery Sanction and Damages Affirmed — Smith Test for Assessing Discovery Sanctions Clarified: When defendant failed to respond to discovery requests for nearly 1 year and effectively disregarded the District Court's order to supplement insufficient discovery responses, the District Court sanctioned defendant by dismissing defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff on the issue of liability and awarding damages to plaintiff. Defendant appealed on grounds that the sanction was excessively harsh. In assessing the propriety of discovery sanctions imposed pursuant to Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P., the Supreme Court applies the three-part test set out in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), considering whether the consequence imposed via the sanction: (1) relates to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse; (2) relates to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party that resulted from the discovery abuse; and (3) is consistent with the consequences expressly warned of by the District Court, if a warning was issued. The court clarified that the third prong of the Smith test applies only if the District Court issues a warning. In addition to the test factors, the Supreme Court also considers a party's disregard of the court's authority and orders. If a ready, confident, and accurate determination of a party's good faith compliance with the discovery process cannot be made, the correctness of the District Court's imposition of sanctions will be presumed. In this case, the sanctions related sufficiently to the prejudice suffered by plaintiff, and in light of defendant's unwavering disregard of the District Court's orders and authority, the court did not abuse its discretion by striking defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff. Absent evidence that the court abused its discretion, the award of damages was also proper. Culbertson-Froid-Bainville Health Care Corp. v. JP Stevens & Co., Inc., 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Failure of State to Respond to Discovery Requests During Driver's License Reinstatement Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: Responding to a 9-1-1 emergency dispatch, an officer found Patterson slumped over the steering wheel of a running vehicle, fast asleep. Patterson refused to take a Breathalyzer test, so he was arrested for DUI, and his license was seized. Patterson challenged the suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403 and through discovery requests sought a copy of the 9-1-1 report, but no copy was provided. The hearing was continued twice because of the absence of the report, and the District Court warned the state that if it failed to produce the report, Patterson's license would be reinstated and the suspension would be dismissed. On the day of the hearing, the state informed the court that it was unable to obtain the 9-1-1 report, so Patterson's motion for reinstatement of his driver's license was granted. The state appealed on grounds that the District Court erred by reinstating the license based on the state's failure to comply with an order compelling production of the report. The Supreme Court affirmed. To determine whether the sanction for the discovery abuse constituted an abuse of the District Court's discretion, the Supreme Court applied the factors in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124 (2000). The 9-1-1 report was treated as relevant information absent a timely objection by the state to Patterson's request for production, and the state's failure to produce the report compromised Patterson's ability to prepare and present a defense, suspended the progress of the case, and prejudiced Patterson. The state was warned that reinstatement would result from failure to produce the report, and reinstatement was an appropriate sanction for the state's repeated failure to comply with discovery. Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002).

Conversion of Motion In Limine Into Motion to Compel Discovery — No Error: During an initial deposition, a witness in a contested will case asserted the attorney-client privilege and refused to answer questions or to produce requested files. The will contestants then filed a motion in limine to prohibit the witness from testifying at trial, based on their inability to explore the files or the witness's knowledge of the files. The District Court treated the motion in limine as a motion to compel discovery and ordered the witness to produce the files. Eight files were produced, and six were found to be relevant. Thereafter, the deposition was reconvened and completed. The contestants alleged District Court error in implicitly denying their motion in limine. The usual procedure following a party's objection or refusal to respond to discovery is a motion to compel, and failure to comply may result in sanctions. Here, the court did not abuse its discretion by converting the motion in limine into a motion to compel, followed by an in camera inspection, and then compelling production of most of the documents. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 162, 295 M 160, 983 P2d 308, 56 St. Rep. 642 (1999).

Order Without Time Limits for Inspection Void: An order for the examination of defendant's books and papers, containing no limitation on the time within which inspection shall be made, is void. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 27 M 441, 71 P 602 (1903).

Former Rule 34(c). Persons not parties

Failure to Order Release of Prerelease Center Records Reversible Error in Victim's Negligence Case Against County: Prindel requested the records of a county prerelease center where his assailant Russell had resided, contending that the records may have been relevant to the question of foreseeability in the context of causation or have led to evidence relevant to the issue. Without ever seeing the records, the District Court denied the request for the records on grounds that the information could not have had a bearing on the foreseeability of Russell's act of violence against Prindel. The District Court impermissibly conjectured that the information was irrelevant and abused its discretion by refusing Prindel access to the confidential criminal justice information. The individual right to privacy in the records by Russell, who was serving a life sentence for attempting to kill Prindel, did not outweigh the merits of disclosing the records to Prindel, who was seeking legal redress against the county. Failure to disclose the prerelease center records was reversible error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Failure to Release County Attorney's Files Concerning Attempted Homicide Assailant Reversible Error in Victim's Negligence Case Against County: Prindel requested the records of the County Attorney in order to prepare a case against the county for negligently failing to lawfully incarcerate Russell, even though Russell had been ordered to report to jail but was turned away, after which Russell attempted to kill Prindel. Although the parties had stipulated to the production of the files and the District Court had twice ordered production of the files, the District Court determined after in camera review that the files were not relevant to Prindel's case or admissible at trial. The District Court abused its discretion in declining to order release of the County Attorney's files containing criminal justice information, and to the extent that Prindel's request covered more than criminal justice information, the District Court should have weighed the demands of individual privacy against the merits of public disclosure and ordered the release of the County Attorney's files on Russell, except those that failed to satisfy statutory criteria. The District Court therefore committed reversible error by making an ad hoc, ex parte assessment of relevance of the contents of the files and deciding that they were not relevant and abused its discretion by employing the admissibility standard in lieu of criminal justice information, discovery, or work product standards. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Equitable Bill of Discovery Allowable Under Limited Circumstances: While modern rules of pleading and practice virtually eliminated the need for an equitable bill of discovery, it is cognizable under the following limited circumstances: (1) it is available only against a person or entity that cannot be a defendant in subsequent litigation; (2) it is available for the names and addresses of potential defendants and for onsite visits to inspect specific items that may have caused a documented injury; and (3) plaintiff in an equitable action must show that the discovery requested cannot be obtained otherwise and has been requested of and denied by the person or entity that, for whatever reason, cannot be a defendant in subsequent litigation. An equitable bill of discovery that did not meet these narrow criteria was properly dismissed under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Temple v.

Chevron U.S.A. Inc., 254 M 455, 840 P2d 561, 49 St. Rep. 661 (1992), distinguishing State ex rel. Pitcher v. District Court, 114 M 128, 133 P2d 350 (1943), and Japp v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389 (1981).

Former Rule 35. Physical and mental examination of persons

Independent Medical Examination Denied as Response to Disregard of Scheduling Order Absent Good Cause: Three days after the deadline for disclosing rebuttal experts but prior to the close of discovery, defendant moved to compel plaintiff to undergo an independent medical examination by an undisclosed expert. The District Court denied the motion, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that defendant asserted no surprise or other good cause for not complying with the scheduling order. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the request for the examination in response to defendant's disregard of the scheduling order, and the District Court was affirmed. Pumphrey v. Empire Lath & Plaster, 2006 MT 99, 332 M 116, 135 P3d 797 (2006).

Denial of Defendant's Timely Request for Independent Medical Examination Improper: An independent medical examination (IME) is a valid form of discovery when a plaintiff places mental or physical injury in controversy, but the request for an IME must be timely. Here, plaintiff's medical records indicated suffering from emotional distress resulting from her son's injury as early as September 1997, but plaintiff did not indicate that she suffered from posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) until October 2001 or assert through expert witness disclosure that she suffered from PTSD until November 2001, 1 month before the discovery deadline on December 15, 2001. As soon as the November disclosure was made, the state reserved the right to conduct an IME of plaintiff and requested that plaintiff undergo an IME 2 weeks later. However, plaintiff did not submit to an IME, so the state requested that the District Court order an emergency IME because the state had not been previously informed of plaintiff's PTSD. The District Court denied the request because it came too late in the proceedings. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The mere existence of the medical records provided insufficient notice that plaintiff was planning to use PTSD as a basis for damages in the suit; yet as soon as the state found out, it filed a timely request for an IME, and the District Court abused its discretion in denying one. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Good Cause Required for Court-Ordered Medical Examination — Scope of Medical Examination Rule: Pursuant to this rule, the District Court ordered plaintiff to undergo an extensive independent medical examination by an expert 750 miles away. The examination would have subjected plaintiff to burdensome, painful, invasive, elective, and potentially harmful procedures. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court reversed. This rule does not permit any proposed examination simply because a plaintiff puts the plaintiff's physical or mental condition at issue. A District Court must consider whether good cause for a proposed examination has been demonstrated because of the constitutional protections afforded to a person's right to privacy, safety, health, and happiness. Good cause for an examination may not constitute good cause for a specific examination requested by a defendant. Further, bringing a suit to recover for personal injury may place a plaintiff's physical or mental condition at issue, but it does not waive the inalienable right to the integrity of and personal control over the plaintiff's body. In determining whether there is good cause, the court should consider both the location and the nature of the examination. Requiring a party to travel any farther than necessary is an abuse of discretion, and out-of-state examinations should be viewed with disfavor when an adequate examination can be conducted in Montana. Here, the District Court abused its discretion in ordering plaintiff to undergo a potentially invasive, painful, and burdensome examination at a distant location when the same test was available in Montana. Simms v. District Court, 2003 MT 89, 315 M 135, 68 P3d 678 (2003).

Supervisory Control Proper to Determine Scope of Court-Ordered Medical Examination: Pursuant to this rule, the District Court ordered plaintiff to undergo an extensive independent medical examination by an expert 750 miles away. The examination would have subjected plaintiff to burdensome, painful, invasive, elective, and potentially harmful procedures. Plaintiff requested that the Supreme Court assume supervisory control, asserting that the District Court was proceeding on a mistake of law that posed a risk of gross injustice to plaintiff. The Supreme Court agreed. The extent to which this rule permits an individual to be subjected to extensive and potentially harmful procedures is an issue of statewide importance, and an appeal from a mistake of law compelled by the rule would be an inadequate remedy. Therefore, the Supreme Court determined that supervisory control was appropriate to determine whether the District Court was proceeding under a mistake of law in ordering the examination. Simms v. District Court, 2003 MT 89, 315 M 135, 68 P3d 678 (2003). See also Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001).

Independent Claim for Infliction of Emotional Distress Sufficient to Satisfy Good Cause Requirement for Ordering Medical Evaluation: Winslow contended that the District Court improperly ordered him to submit to a psychiatric evaluation pursuant to this rule after finding that the good cause requirement under this rule was satisfied by the fact that Winslow had asserted an independent claim for intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress. The Supreme Court affirmed. The independent claim placed Winslow's mental condition in controversy, and under Schlangenhauf v. Holder, 379 US 104 (1964), the pleadings themselves can establish good cause for ordering a mental examination. Further, under Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), an independent cause of action for intentional infliction of serious or severe emotional distress will arise when the distress was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the negligent act or omission. The pleading of Winslow's independent Sacco claim was sufficient to satisfy the good cause requirement of Rule 35. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), distinguishing In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889 (1995).

Tactical Decision to Forego Independent Examination — Reopening of Discovery Denied: Although the plaintiff truck driver, injured in an accident, may have had a duty to disclose the change in his employment status when questioned, the defendant made a tactical decision to attack the plaintiff's credibility in cross-examination rather than to conduct an independent examination and secure its own vocational expert. The District Court did not err in denying a motion to reopen discovery for an examination because of surprise or prejudice since the plaintiff continually asserted an inability to work as a truckèr throughout the litigation and defendants had ample time to secure a vocational expert before the close of discovery. Anderson v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 1998 MT 333, 292 M 284, 972 P2d 806, 55 St. Rep. 1350 (1998).

Presence of Attorney During Psychiatrist's Interview of Client: The plaintiff, Mapes, appealed the lower court's order that his attorney could not be present while he was being interviewed by the defendant's psychiatrist. The Supreme Court held that the attorney could be present to ensure that his client did not make any statements adverse to his position. State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91, 48 St. Rep. 954 (1991).

Doctor-Patient Privilege as Precluding Physician Private Interviews in Workers' Compensation Case: The doctor-patient privilege set out in 26-1-805 prevents the defendant from conducting private interviews with a claimant's physician. Linton v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 230 M 122, 749 P2d 55, 45 St. Rep. 68 (1988), citing Japp v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Presence of Counsel at Physical Examination: During the discovery phase of a personal injury suit, defense counsel filed a motion to obtain an order compelling a neurological examination of the plaintiff. Plaintiff responded by asking for a protective order allowing plaintiff's counsel to be present during the examination or to have the examination videotaped. The trial court granted the motion for the examination but denied plaintiff's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that the common-law rule allows a party to have his attorney present at any court-ordered physical examination. This has not always been adhered to in the jurisdictions adopting the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The court held that a workable interpretation of Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P., is to allow the attorney's presence as a matter of right during the history-taking part of the examination but to exclude the attorney from the examining room while the physician is actually conducting the examination. The physical examination does not require the presence of counsel to safeguard its objectivity, because in most instances it is nonadversarial. Mohr v. District Court, 202 M 423, 660 P2d 88, 40 St. Rep. 185 (1983).

Former Rule 35(a). Order for examination

Discovery of Medical Records Upon Commencement of Action for Damages Placing Mental and Physical Condition at Issue — Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege as to Condition in Controversy: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Plaintiff brought damage claims related to the child's injuries and claims related to plaintiff's own emotional distress, loss of consortium, and posttraumatic stress disorder. The state moved to compel production of all of plaintiff's health care records from before and after the fall. The District Court denied the motion, holding that the records were constitutionally protected and irrelevant to the case and therefore not discoverable. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted plaintiff's constitutional right to confidentiality of medical records, but cited State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91 (1991), for the holding that that right must be balanced against a defendant's right to defend itself in an informed manner and that records of prior physical or mental conditions are discoverable only if they relate to currently claimed damages. Here, plaintiff commenced an action for damages that placed in issue the mental and physical condition arising from the accident, thus waiving any physician-patient privilege as to the condition in controversy, and the state had the right to discover evidence related to prior medical conditions that was possibly connected to plaintiff's current damages. Denial of the discovery motion prejudiced the state's right to defend itself in an informed manner, constituting reversible error. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Order Precluding Counsel From Attending and Recording of Independent Medical Examination Affirmed: The District Court in an automobile accident negligence case ordered Hegwood to obtain an independent medical examination pursuant to Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P., but denied Hegwood's motion to allow her attorney to attend the examination and to allow a court reporter and video recorder to document the entire examination on grounds that the discovery request was overbroad. Hegwood appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A medical examination ordered under Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P., is a nonadversarial proceeding, but when an examinee sufficiently demonstrates subjective predilections or the likelihood of prejudice, the examination shifts from independent in nature to adversarial. Courts and litigants should thus rely on the protective measures in Rule 26(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule to negate the inequities. Here, the record did not support the desired intrusion into the examination room, nor did a demonstration that the examiner performed examinations for the insurance industry inherently establish the degree of prejudice or potential for abuse necessary. A District Court has discretion to control discovery to administer trials in order to ensure a fair trial for all concerned and is in a better position than the Supreme Court to supervise day-to-day discovery operations, so an order affecting discovery will not be overturned unless it amounts to an abuse of discretion. Prohibiting attendance by Hegwood's attorney and the recording of the examination was not an abuse of discretion. Hegwood v. District Court, 2003 MT 200, 317 M 30, 75 P3d 308 (2003), clarifying Mohr v. District Court, 202 M 423, 660 P2d 88 (1983).

Supervisory Control Denied to Address Discovery Issues: Petitioner sought a writ of supervisory control to address a District Court order directing petitioner to submit to discovery through an independent medical examination in an automobile accident negligence case. The Supreme Court declined to exercise supervisory control. Typically, orders pertaining to discovery are interlocutory in nature and are not generally reviewable in an original proceeding. Original jurisdiction will be exercised when an order places a party at a significant disadvantage in litigating a case. Supervisory control should issue when a District Court proceeds under a mistake of law, causing a gross injustice for which an appeal is not an adequate remedy, but supervisory control is an extraordinary remedy exercised only in extraordinary circumstances. Absent a showing that procedural protections were inadequate to control discovery in an independent medical examination, supervisory control was inappropriate. Hegwood v. District Court, 2003 MT 200, 317 M 30, 75 P3d 308 (2003).

General Scope of Examination to Be Specified in Order for Examination: The District Court properly ordered that Winslow submit to a psychiatric examination pursuant to this rule, but neglected to specify the scope of the examination. However, the rule requires that the court, at least in a general sense, define the scope of the examination to determine the existence and extent of the asserted injury without invading the province of the jury by opining whether the claimant is being truthful. The Supreme Court reversed for entry of an order specifying the time, place, manner, conditions, and scope of the examination. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), following Schlangenhauf v. Holder, 379 US 104 (1964), and State ex rel. Mapes v. District Court, 250 M 524, 822 P2d 91 (1991).

Husband's Request for Mental Examination of Wife in Divorce Case Properly Denied: The husband, in a dissolution action, requested an order that his wife submit to a mental examination. After holding a hearing on the issue, the lower court denied the motion. The Supreme Court, in adopting the test set forth in Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 US 104 (1964), held that the husband, by relying solely on speculative testimony, had failed to demonstrate that his wife's mental competency was "in controversy" and that "good cause" existed for issuing the order. In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889, 52 St. Rep. 16 (1995), distinguishing In re Marriage of Tesch, 199 M 240, 648 P2d 293 (1982), and St. v. Little, 260 M 460, 861 P2d 154 (1993), and distinguished in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001).

No Right to Require Psychiatric or Medical Examination of Witness Not a Party: Little was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault. During trial, Little moved for psychiatric and medical examinations of one of the complaining witnesses, which was denied by the District Court. Citing St. v. Crist, 253 M 442, 833 P2d 1052 (1992), the Supreme Court held that Little had no right to force the psychiatric examination of a child victim of a sexual crime. Citing St. v. Goodwin 249 M 1, 813 P2d 953 (1991), the Supreme Court held that Little had no right to require a medical examination of one of the complaining witnesses. Citing St. v. Liddell, 211 M 180, 685 P2d 918 (1984), the Supreme Court also noted that this rule allows the mental or physical examination of a party not a witness. St. v. Little, 260 M 460, 861 P2d 154, 50 St. Rep. 1124 (1993).

Refusal to Require Mental Examination of Rape Victim — Not Error — Prosecution Use of Rape-Trauma Syndrome: It was not error to refuse to compel the victim of the crime of sexual intercourse without consent to be examined by the defendant's psychologist even though the prosecution used expert witnesses to show that the victim suffered from rape-trauma syndrome as evidence that the intercourse was committed without her consent. Rule 35(a), M.R.Civ.P., allows mental or physical examination of a party when the party's mental or physical condition may be in controversy; but no such examination is provided regarding a witness, and in this case the witness' mental condition was not in issue. The issue involved was an act, i.e., whether there was consent to sexual intercourse. St. v. Liddell, 211 M 180, 685 P2d 918, 41 St. Rep. 1293 (1984), followed in St. v. Gilpin, 232 M 56, 756 P2d 445, 45 St. Rep. 863 (1988), St. v. Goodwin, 249 M 1, 813 P2d 953, 48 St. Rep. 539 (1991), and in St. v. Crist, 253 M 442, 833 P2d 1052, 49 St. Rep. 525 (1992).

Former Rule 35(b). Report of examiner

Defense Communication With Plaintiff's Physician: It was not error to allow defense counsel to communicate with the plaintiff's treating physician during the trial. As the plaintiff stated he did not intend to call the physician as a witness and because the inquiry was made during the course of the trial, normal discovery limitations did not apply. Ostermiller v. Alvord, 222 M 208, 720 P2d 1198, 43 St. Rep. 1180 (1986).

District Court Without Authority to Order "Interviews" of Witnesses — Supervisory Control: In a personal injury case, the defendant obtained a court order stating that the plaintiff had waived her physician-patient privilege and that the plaintiff's doctors were to be treated as any other witnesses in the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the order on its face but held that the District Court did not have the power under the rules of discovery to order private interviews between counsel for one party and possibly adverse witnesses, expert or not. The Supreme Court noted that other rules of discovery serve to supplement Rule 26(a), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court must relate discovery it allows and enforces to one of the methods provided for in that rule. A Writ of Supervisory Control was issued in this case. Jaap v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Waiver of Physician-Patient Privilege — Extent: By filing medical malpractice suit and submitting attending physicians for deposition purposes, patient permanently waived any privilege concerning her eye which was subject matter of suit. An order that defense counsel be allowed private conference with physicians was proper. A waiver of the privilege extends to all communications regarding the whole transaction and cannot be limited to a particular purpose or person. Callahan v. Burton, 157 M 513, 487 P2d 515 (1971), overruled in Jaap v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389 (1981).

Former Rule 36. Requests for admissions

Failure to Respond to Requests for Admissions — Summary Judgment Proper: Defendant sought to have the Supreme Court relieve it of the effect of Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P., that considers matters in requests for admission that are not responded to as admitted and conclusively established. Defendant argued that, since it had already denied the matter in question in its answer to the complaint, it should not be required to deny the matter again. The court affirmed the order granting summary judgment, finding ample opportunity for defendant to respond to the request for admissions. Holmes & Turner v. Steer-In, 222 M 282, 721 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 1266 (1986).

Failure to Answer Request for Admissions — Invalidity of Unserved Lien: On a question of validity of mechanics' lien, appellant failed to respond to a request for admissions. Under Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P., all unanswered requests for admissions are admitted for all purposes. By failing to answer, appellant admitted that he had not served or billed respondent, so the requirement of 71-3-513 that a copy of a lien must be served on the property owner in order to be valid was not met. The District Court properly found the unserved lien invalid as a matter of law. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986).

Admission of Genuineness of Documents — Privilege: A request for admission of genuineness of documents under Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P., is limited by Rule 26, M.R.Civ.P., to the genuineness of documents that are not privileged and that are discoverable under Rule 26. Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694, 38 St. Rep. 1288 (1981).

Former Rule 36(a). Request for admission

Error in Denial of Opportunity to Respond to Amended Requests for Admission — Late Discovery Responses Properly Denied: Defendant neglected to respond to requests for admission within 30 days. On defendant's motion for summary judgment, the District Court amended two requests for admission, which nullified the matter contained in the requests as being conclusively established. Plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to respond to the amended requests and the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing plaintiff the chance to respond. The Supreme Court reversed the portions of the summary judgment that corresponded to the amended requests for admission, but, in accord with Easton v. Cowie, 247 M 181, 805 P2d 573 (1991), the portions of the summary judgment based on admissions demonstrating no genuine issue of material fact were affirmed because plaintiff did not respond in a timely manner to the discovery requests. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641, 57 St. Rep. 674 (2000).

Notice Required When Counsel Withdraws — Discovery Deadline Tolled: Only 3 days before the deadline for answers to discovery requests, Holms's counsel moved to withdraw, citing irreconcilable personal and professional differences with Holms regarding handling of the case and a breakdown in attorney-client communication. Four days after the discovery deadline, Stanleys moved for summary judgment based to a great extent on matters considered admitted by Holms's failure to respond to requests for admissions pursuant to this rule. Twelve days after the motion for summary judgment, the court heard and granted counsel's motion to withdraw. On the same day, Stanleys served Holms with confirmation of the court's oral instruction to Holms regarding Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), and with a notice of the hearing on the motion for summary judgment. Seven days before the hearing, Holms's new counsel agreed to undertake representation and the following day moved to amend the pleadings, to file amended responses to Stanleys' first discovery requests, and to continue Stanleys' motion for summary judgment. On the date set for hearing on the summary judgment, the court heard oral argument and granted Stanleys' motion about 3 months later. In its order, the court concluded that the 30-day deadline in this rule, was not tolled because Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R., did not apply. However, pursuant to Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R., and 37-61-405, the opposing party with notice of the withdrawal of counsel has a duty to provide adequate notice to the unrepresented party when that party's attorney ceases to act as such, not just when the attorney dies or is removed, suspended, or actually withdraws, before taking advantage of a default on the part of the other side. The purpose of this notice requirement is to prevent a represented party from taking unfair advantage of the situation of the opposing party who has actually or effectively lost representation and to ensure that the unrepresented party receives a fair trial. The case was remanded for consideration of the motion to amend the pleadings and reconsideration of the summary judgment motion in light of the amended pleadings, the discovery responses, and the state of the record at the time that the motion for summary judgment is heard. Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196, 54 St. Rep. 195 (1997), following McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978). On remand, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in conducting the summary judgment hearing and ruling on Stanley's motion for summary judgment without allowing Holms the opportunity to conduct further discovery. Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 975 P2d 1242, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999), following Howell v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 240 M 383, 785 P2d 1018, 46 St. Rep. 2216 (1989).

Refusal to Allow Filing of Discovery Response After Sixteen-Day Delay — No Abuse of Discretion: Filing a late response is not a matter of right, but lies within the court's discretion. It was not a manifest abuse of discretion for a District Court to grant summary judgment for defendant and deny plaintiff's motion for an extension of time to answer a request for admission 16 days after the response was due. Easton v. Cowie, 247 M 181, 805 P2d 573, 48 St. Rep. 154 (1991), followed in Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641, 57 St. Rep. 674 (2000).

Failure to Respond in Timely Manner — District Court's Refusal to Accept Response Proper: Defendants tendered a written response to plaintiff's request for admission of facts and genuineness of documents approximately 1½ years after service of the request. They offered no explanation or justification for their failure to respond in a timely manner. The District Court refused to accept the response. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the District Court had properly exercised its discretion in the matter. Detert v. Lake County, 207 M 460, 674 P2d 1097, 41 St. Rep. 76 (1984).

Failure to Answer — Facts Deemed True — Basis for Summary Judgment: Summary judgment was properly granted plaintiff suing for delinquent payments under lease of bar and lounge equipment where all issues of material fact were resolved when a request for admissions relating to those facts was sent defendants by plaintiff and was not answered for 15 months and the trial court deemed the facts in the request for admissions as true for failure to answer the request within the required 30-day period after service of the request and where defendants did not give any evidence to raise an issue of material fact. All-States Leasing Co. v. Top Hat Lounge, 198 M 1, 649 P2d 1250, 39 St. Rep. 425 (1982), followed in Wight v. Gonzales, 249 M 268, 815 P2d 598, 48 St. Rep. 745 (1991).

No Absolute Right to File Late Answers: A party has no absolute right to file late answers to requests for admissions. The matter rests within the discretion of the trial court, and the court's decision will not be disturbed in the absence of a manifest abuse of discretion. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Delay in Filing Answer to Request for Admissions — Justification: The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to allow the late filing of answers to requested admissions. The court noted the rule failure to take any action within the period stated in the request results in an admission of the facts stated therein, although the court may permit a late filing of an answer when the delay is not caused by a lack of good faith or in the absence of any prejudice to the party requesting the admission. In view of the fact that 3 months passed after the requests for admission were filed, during which time the appellant could have replied, and considering that no request for an extension of time to answer was filed for 5 months after the request for admission was made, the court affirmed the denial of the request for the time extension. N. Dak. v. Newberger d.b.a. Amusement Conspiracy, 188 M 323, 613 P2d 1002 (1980).

Evasive Answer Treated as Failure to Answer: Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires a denial of a request for admission to fairly meet the substance of the requested admission. The responder must admit or deny with particularity if the truth can be ascertained by reasonable inquiry. Under Rule 37(a), M.R.Civ.P., an evasive answer is to be treated as a failure to answer and, thus, an admission. Massaro v. Dunham, 184 M 400, 603 P2d 249 (1979). See also Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Request to Admit Genuineness of Documents — Attachment of Copy Required: Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires the attachment of a copy of a document to a request for admission when the genuineness of that document is the matter sought to be admitted. The purpose of this requirement is to give the responding party an opportunity to compare the copy with the original to determine its validity. Massaro v. Dunham, 184 M 400, 603 P2d 249 (1979). See also Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Failure to Answer Request for Admission: When a party fails to answer within 30 days and is not granted an extension by the court, the matter is considered admitted. Rogers v. Relyea, 184 M 1, 601 P2d 37 (1979).

Expected Denial — Requests Not to Be Ignored: Request for admissions could not be ignored simply because it dealt with central issues which might in good faith be considered controverted. Morast v. Auble, 164 M 100, 519 P2d 157 (1974).

Failure to Respond — No Abuse of Discretion: Where defendants in action for wrongful death stemming from automobile accident failed to answer requests for admissions from plaintiffs over period of 8 ½ months, with intervening admonition during pretrial conference, there was no abuse of discretion by District Court in striking response and considering requested facts admitted. Morast v. Auble, 164 M 100, 519 P2d 157 (1974).

Refusal to Permit Late Filing of Response: Refusal to permit late filing by plaintiffs of responses to request for admissions in wrongful death action was not an abuse of discretion where there was an 8 ½-month delay in filing with an intervening admonition to respond made during pretrial conference and where names of an eyewitness and an investigating highway patrolman had been furnished to plaintiffs through answers to their interrogatories. Morast v. Auble, 164 M 100, 519 P2d 157 (1974).

Failure to Make Timely Response: Although party did not make timely response to request for admissions, delay was not in bad faith and judge did not abuse discretion in allowing the filing of answers or in denying motion for summary judgment. Heller v. Osburnsen, 162 M 182, 510 P2d 13 (1973), followed in Aldrich & Co. v. Donovan, 238 M 431, 778 P2d 397, 46 St. Rep. 1393 (1989).

Demand for Admissions — No Response — Summary Judgment: Because plaintiff failed to reply to the demand for admissions within the time stated, the court was bound to grant the motion for summary judgment. Naegli v. Daniels, 145 M 323, 400 P2d 896 (1965), followed in Garrett v. PACCAR Financial Corp., 245 M 379, 801 P2d 605, 47 St. Rep. 2185 (1990).

Compliance With Rule — Discretion of Trial Court: Where defendant failed to file admissions on plaintiff's request and was not permitted to file them later or to reopen hearing on summary judgment, whether defendant's admissions, which were signed and verified by defendant's counsel as being made from a letter received from the defendant, met the intent of this rule was a matter within the discretion of the trial court. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Failure to Respond — Action Against Attorney: In suit by client against his attorney for money which attorney failed to forward to client, request for admissions was considered admitted where attorney failed to answer. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Intent of Rule: The intent of this rule is that the party served shall make a sworn statement of the truth of any relevant matters of fact set forth in the request for admissions. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Orders Regarding Admissions — Not Necessary: There is no necessity for a court to make specific orders regarding admissions. They are before the court for such consideration as the court considers necessary. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Former Rule 36(b). Effect of admission

Error in Denial of Opportunity to Respond to Amended Requests for Admission — Late Discovery Responses Properly Denied: Defendant neglected to respond to requests for admission within 30 days. On defendant's motion for summary judgment, the District Court amended two requests for admission, which nullified the matter contained in the requests as being conclusively established. Plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to respond to the amended requests and the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing plaintiff the chance to respond. The Supreme Court reversed the portions of the summary judgment that corresponded to the amended requests for admission, but, in accord with Easton v. Cowie, 247 M 181, 805 P2d 573 (1991), the portions of the summary judgment based on admissions demonstrating no genuine issue of material fact were affirmed because plaintiff did not respond in a timely manner to the discovery requests. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641, 57 St. Rep. 674 (2000).

Failure to Answer — Facts Deemed True — Basis for Summary Judgment: Summary judgment was properly granted plaintiff suing for delinquent payments under lease of bar and lounge equipment where all issues of material fact were resolved when a request for admissions relating to those facts was sent defendants by plaintiff and was not answered for 15 months and the trial court deemed the facts in the request for admissions as true for failure to answer the request within the required 30-day period after service of the request and where defendants did not give any evidence to raise an issue of material fact. All-States Leasing Co. v. Top Hat Lounge, 198 M 1, 649 P2d 1250, 39 St. Rep. 425 (1982).

Amendment of Admission by Court After Trial Held Proper Where No Showing of Prejudice to Opposing Party: In a suit on a sales contract in which the date the contract had been made was at issue, seller submitted requests for admission to buyer, including a request concerning the date of the contract. Buyer did not respond within 30 days. Several months later, seller filed a notice of admission of facts. Subsequently, buyer filed a response to the requests in which he denied that the contract had been made on the date alleged by the seller. Buyer had also denied this date in his answer and counterclaim. After trial, the District Court granted buyer's motion to amend the admissions. Seller appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that it was within the trial court's discretion to amend, because there was no showing of prejudice to seller and he had been on notice of buyer's denial for more than 2 years prior to the trial. Ag Sales v. Klose, 199 M 400, 649 P2d 447, 39 St. Rep. 1482 (1982).

Grounds for Denying Motion to Amend: Where (1) defendant had previously been granted a motion to amend his answer to requests for admissions and a lengthy delay resulted; (2) defendant had failed to timely argue the substance of the requested admission; (3) grant of a second motion to amend answers would cause further lengthy delay; (4) defendant gave no justification for the second motion; (5) the lower court concluded that witnesses from outside the region were involved; (6) the subjects of the motion went to the foundation of the plaintiffs' case and had been relied upon by the plaintiffs; (7) the motion was due to insufficient and untimely investigation of the facts and issues by defendant; and (8) rules of procedure and orderly disposition of cases would be subverted by granting the motion, denial of the motion was not a manifest abuse of the District Court's discretion and was affirmed. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Demand for Admissions — No Response — Summary Judgment: Because plaintiff failed to reply to the demand for admissions within the time stated, the court was bound to grant the motion for summary judgment. Naegli v. Daniels, 145 M 323, 400 P2d 896 (1965).

Orders Regarding Admissions — Not Necessary: There is no necessity for a court to make specific orders regarding admissions. They are before the court for such consideration as the court considers necessary. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Former Rule 37. Failure to make discovery: sanctions

Sanction for Discovery Abuse — Default Judgment Affirmed: The plaintiff sued the defendants for breach of contract related to a failed business transaction and served discovery in February 2008. In May 2010, after the defendants provided inadequate responses to discovery, the court granted the plaintiff's motion to compel. After the defendants ignored the order on the motion to compel, the court entered default judgment against the defendants as a discovery sanction. The defendants appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the sanction because the defendants had willfully disregarded the court's orders and caused prejudice to the plaintiff by delaying discovery. Kraft v. High Country Motors, Inc., 2012 MT 83, 364 Mont. 465, 276 P.3d 908.

Fifth Amendment — Adverse Inferences Against Party Invoking in Civil Action: The board of pharmacy brought an action against the defendant for the unlicensed practice of pharmacy. The defendant refused to respond to discovery requests by invoking the fifth amendment privilege against self-incrimination. The Supreme Court stated that other jurisdictions, including the federal Ninth Circuit Court, had adopted the position that in civil actions the refusal of a person to respond to discovery requests, even when based upon the fifth amendment, could be construed in a manner adverse to that person. The Supreme Court went on to state that while the doctrine is widely accepted, it declined to explicitly adopt the doctrine since much the same result could be achieved under Montana's Rules of Civil Procedure. Bd. of Pharmacy v. Kennedy, 2010 MT 227, 358 Mont. 57, 243 P.3d 415.

Insurer's Late Disclosure of Insured's Recorded Statement — Discovery Sanctions Against Insured Not Warranted: One week before a second trial, defendant Jackson's counsel produced a copy of a statement that Jackson had given to his insurer 2 years after an accident. Plaintiff Schuff had requested the recorded statement more than 7 years earlier in discovery requests sent to Jackson prior to the first trial. At that time, Jackson had responded that, to the best of his knowledge, no tape or recording of the statement existed; however, the insurer apparently had possession of the recorded statement but did not turn it over until just prior to the second trial. Schuff moved for default judgment or for attorney fees and costs as a sanction for the insurer's late disclosure of the statement. The trial court denied the motion for sanctions on grounds that: (1) Jackson was not subject to sanctions for the insurer's misconduct because under In re Rules of Professional Conduct & Insurer Imposed Billing Rules & Procedures, 2000 MT 110, 299 M 321, 2 P3d 806 (2000), the insurer was not a party to the litigation and the violation was the fault of the insurer, not Jackson or his attorney; and (2) the recorded statement was not substantially different from Jackson's previous statements and any inconsistencies could be explored during cross-examination, so any prejudice to Schuff was minimal. Schuff appealed. The Supreme Court held that the trial court improperly concluded that In re Rules precluded sanctions against the insurer for discovery-related misconduct because, in fact, sanctions could be imposed against the insurer without running afoul of the attorney-client obligations set forth in In re Rules. However, sanctions were nevertheless inappropriate in this case because any potential prejudice to Schuff was accounted for by admitting the statement as evidence and allowing Schuff to use the statement to impeach Jackson's credibility. Denial of sanctions was therefore not an abuse of discretion, and the trial court was affirmed. Schuff v. Jackson, 2008 MT 81, 342 M 156, 179 P3d 1169 (2008).

Sanction Proper for Discovery Fraud Regarding Inconsistent Financial Statements: As part of pretrial discovery, defendants stated that they had not filed any financial statements, but plaintiff discovered that such statements had in fact been filed and the District Court allowed evidence of the statements, which defendants asserted was error. The Supreme Court affirmed.

Defendants opened the door with questions concerning the financial impact of the lawsuit on defendants and even suggested that particular sanction for defendants' discovery abuses. Thus, the District Court did not err in allowing the inconsistent financial evidence as a sanction for discovery abuses. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007).

Appeal Filed Within Four Days of Final Judgment Timely: Plaintiff prevailed on a wrongful discharge claim and also claimed that defendant abused discovery. A few days following judgment, plaintiff filed for attorney fees and for sanctions against defendant for discovery abuses. The District Court held that sanctions would be addressed after trial. Defendant filed various posttrial motions, which were subsequently considered denied because the District Court failed to rule on them within 60 days. Two days later, the court approved plaintiff's requested fees and costs in securing judgment, but did not address fees and costs that plaintiff requested as sanctions, and 35 days later, plaintiff requested a ruling on discovery sanctions. Five days later, the court held a hearing on sanctions and awarded plaintiff fees and costs as discovery sanctions. Defendant appealed. Plaintiff asserted that the appeal should be dismissed as untimely because it was filed more than 30 days after defendant's posttrial motions were denied. However, even though the court held during trial that defendant would be liable for sanctions, there was no final judgment on sanctions until the court actually awarded plaintiff fees and costs as discovery sanctions, and defendant's filing of the appeal within 4 days of final judgment on that issue was timely. Harding v. Garcia, 2007 MT 120, 337 M 274, 159 P3d 1083 (2007).

Sanctions for Discovery Abuses Proper — Motion to Compel Properly Granted: Despite defendant's repeated discovery requests over a 3-year period, 11 letters from defendant's counsel following up on requests for discovery information, and plaintiffs' assurances that the information would be provided, plaintiffs never provided the requested information or responded to counsel's letters. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions for discovery abuse or in granting defendant's motion to compel discovery. Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Failure to Order Release of Prerelease Center Records Reversible Error in Victim's Negligence Case Against County: Prindel requested the records of a county prerelease center where his assailant Russell had resided, contending that the records may have been relevant to the question of foreseeability in the context of causation or have led to evidence relevant to the issue. Without ever seeing the records, the District Court denied the request for the records on grounds that the information could not have had a bearing on the foreseeability of Russell's act of violence against Prindel. The District Court impermissibly conjectured that the information was irrelevant and abused its discretion by refusing Prindel access to the confidential criminal justice information. The individual right to privacy in the records by Russell, who was serving a life sentence for attempting to kill Prindel, did not outweigh the merits of disclosing the records to Prindel, who was seeking legal redress against the county. Failure to disclose the prerelease center records was reversible error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Failure to Release County Attorney's Files Concerning Attempted Homicide Assailant Reversible Error in Victim's Negligence Case Against County: Prindel requested the records of the County Attorney in order to prepare a case against the county for negligently failing to lawfully incarcerate Russell, even though Russell had been ordered to report to jail but was turned away, after which Russell attempted to kill Prindel. Although the parties had stipulated to the production of the files and the District Court had twice ordered production of the files, the District Court determined after in camera review that the files were not relevant to Prindel's case or admissible at trial. The District Court abused its discretion in declining to order release of the County Attorney's files containing criminal justice information, and to the extent that Prindel's request covered more than criminal justice information, the District Court should have weighed the demands of individual privacy against the merits of public disclosure and ordered the release of the County Attorney's files on Russell, except those that failed to satisfy statutory criteria. The District Court therefore committed reversible error by making an ad hoc, ex parte assessment of relevance of the contents of the files and deciding that they were not relevant and abused its discretion by employing the admissibility standard in lieu of criminal justice information, discovery, or work product standards. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Absence of Prejudice or Material Effect on Substantial Rights — Discovery Sanctions Properly Denied: Winslow contended that defendant should be sanctioned for discovery abuses for persistently delaying the proceedings, preventing a fair trial, and precluding the admission of relevant evidence. The District Court denied sanctions, holding that defendant properly responded to discovery and did not obstruct witnesses, conceal information, or improperly state objections. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed each of the numerous motions to compel, for protective orders, and for sanctions, concluding that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and that Winslow failed to establish that the District Court's discovery rulings caused prejudice or materially affected Winslow's substantial rights. Denial of sanctions was affirmed. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2005 MT 217, 328 M 260, 121 P3d 506 (2005).

Dismissal of Complaint as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Although Xu received timely notice of the need to respond in writing to defendants' discovery requests within 30 days, Xu filed incomplete, inappropriate, and unacceptable responses, and ultimately defendants sought an order compelling Xu's responses. Then, after defendants' unsuccessful attempts to schedule a deposition, defendants timely notified Xu of their intent to take Xu's deposition on May 11, 2004. Without response or explanation, Xu did not attend the deposition, so defendants sought an order compelling Xu's deposition and requesting sanctions, including dismissal of Xu's claims for failure to attend the May deposition. At a hearing, the District Court carefully explained to Xu the obligation to answer discovery and attend depositions. The court gave Xu an additional 3 weeks to provide discovery answers and be deposed. In response, Xu filed a pleading to reschedule the deposition, but failed to complete discovery or to attend the court-ordered deposition. On defendants' motion, the court then dismissed Xu's action with prejudice for failing to attend the depositions. Xu appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding from the record that Xu knowingly and repeatedly refused to cooperate with discovery request, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Xu's claim as a sanction. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Default Proper as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Alleging that she was defrauded out of nearly $1 million, Cass properly served defendants with a complaint, summons, and discovery requests. Defendants failed to respond to the discovery requests, and the District Court held defendants in default, awarding Cass $1,736,547.20. Defendants moved to set the judgment aside, but the request was denied, and defendants appealed, arguing that the default judgment should have been set aside pursuant to Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., when Cass filed an amended pleading. However, the record clearly showed that the District Court dismissed the case pursuant to this rule, based on defendants' failure to comply with discovery requests and a court order to answer discovery, rather than on Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., for defendants' failure to defend. Although default could have been applied under either rule, the District Court obviously faced a litigant who simply was not going to respond to properly served discovery, so entry of default under this rule was not an abuse of discretion, and the judgment was affirmed. Cass v. Composite Indus. of Am., Inc., 2002 MT 226, 311 M 406, 56 P3d 322 (2002).

Failure of State to Respond to Discovery Requests During Driver's License Reinstatement Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: Responding to a 9-1-1 emergency dispatch, an officer found Patterson slumped over the steering wheel of a running vehicle, fast asleep. Patterson refused to take a Breathalyzer test, so he was arrested for DUI, and his license was seized. Patterson challenged the suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403 and through discovery requests sought a copy of the 9-1-1 report, but no copy was provided. The hearing was continued twice because of the absence of the report, and the District Court warned the state that if it failed to produce the report, Patterson's license would be reinstated and the suspension would be dismissed. On the day of the hearing, the state informed the court that it was unable to obtain the 9-1-1 report, so Patterson's motion for reinstatement of his driver's license was granted. The state appealed on grounds that the District Court erred by reinstating the license based on the state's failure to comply with an order compelling production of the report. The Supreme Court affirmed. To determine whether the sanction for the discovery abuse constituted an abuse of the District Court's discretion, the Supreme Court applied the factors in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124 (2000). The 9-1-1 report was treated as relevant information absent a timely objection by the state to Patterson's request for production, and the state's failure to produce the report compromised Patterson's ability to prepare and present a defense, suspended the progress of the case, and prejudiced Patterson. The state was warned that reinstatement would result from failure to produce the report, and reinstatement was an appropriate sanction for the state's repeated failure to comply with discovery. Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002).

Unreasonable and Vexatious Multiplication of Court Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: First Interstate Bank was Bayers' court-appointed conservator. McGimpsey claimed to be Bayers' private attorney and began expressing an interest in matters involving Bayers' estate, at which point the conservator became concerned about the extent of McGimpsey's involvement in Bayers' affairs and requested in writing copies of any legal documents that McGimpsey had that may have been executed by Bayers. McGimpsey ignored the request. The conservator moved in District Court to compel production of the requested information and included a request for attorney fees necessitated by the motion. McGimpsey responded with a letter threatening the conservator's counsel with sanctions and listing complaints and criticisms of the conservator's handling of Bayers' estate. McGimpsey then moved to strike scandalous, immaterial, and irrelevant content in the conservator's motion and brief, but the motion was denied. The court instead granted the conservator's motion to compel and for attorney fees. McGimpsey filed another motion to alter or amend the order granting attorney fees. That motion was also denied, and the court ordered a hearing on the amount of sanctions to be awarded unless the parties agreed to the amount of attorney fees being assessed. The conservator agreed to the court's suggestion, but McGimpsey did not, so a hearing on the amount of fees was scheduled. McGimpsey filed another motion to vacate the hearing and to establish a discovery schedule regarding attorney fees. That motion was denied at the beginning of the hearing, and the conservator's counsel testified as to reasonable attorney fees incurred because of McGimpsey's conduct. The court issued an order requiring McGimpsey to pay Bayers' estate $1,500 in attorney fees pursuant to 37-61-421, but McGimpsey filed another motion to alter or amend the order. That motion was also denied, and McGimpsey appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that in a civil action such as this, all discovery and discovery disputes, including sanctions, should be governed by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and not by 37-61-421. Rule 34, M.R.Civ.P., and this rule anticipate the existence of a dispute between opposing parties, but the underlying conservatorship proceeding in this case was not an adversarial proceeding. Formal discovery proceedings were not required for the conservator to obtain documents considered relevant to Bayers' estate. McGimpsey could have provided a straightforward answer as to whether he had any of the requested documents, but instead he chose to force a needless multiplication of proceedings and the pointless involvement of the District Court in the dispute. The court's conclusion that McGimpsey unreasonably and vexatiously prolonged the litigation was not in error. Because McGimpsey continued to force the matter to the Supreme Court, he was also held responsible under 37-61-421 for the conservator's expenses and attorney fees incurred in the appeal. In re Estate of Bayers, 2001 MT 49, 304 M 296, 21 P3d 3 (2001).

Imposition of Liability as Matter of Law as Sanction for Discovery Abuse: Following extensive discovery requests, plaintiffs moved to compel discovery and for sanctions. The District Court imposed liability as a matter of law upon defendants as a sanction for discovery abuse. The court based its decision on findings that defendants: (1) misrepresented their corporate ownership and control; (2) falsely represented in briefs and at hearing that all pertinent documents had been provided; (3) knowingly withheld and concealed significant information; (4) falsely represented their involvement with equipment design and construction standards; and (5) falsely represented that certain investigation documents had been prepared for purposes of litigation. Citing In re Adoption of R.D.T., 239 M 33, 778 P2d 416 (1989), defendants contended on appeal that the court's use of deposition testimony solicited subsequent to defendants' discovery responses invoked the wisdom of hindsight, resulting in a Kafkaesque nightmare. After examining the record and noting sufficient evidence supporting the District Court's findings of defendants' repeated and willful concealment and misrepresentation of facts during discovery, the Supreme Court held that defendants had misconstrued both R.D.T. and Franz Kafka, noting that if anyone in the case were guilty of creating a nightmare, it was defendants through their refusal to comply with rules of discovery and civil procedure and to disclose information necessary for the proper presentation of plaintiffs' case. Imposition of liability as a matter of law as a sanction for discovery abuses was affirmed. Bulen v. Navajo Refining Co., Inc., 2000 MT 222, 301 M 195, 9 P3d 607, 57 St. Rep. 912 (2000), following First Bank v. Heidema, 219 M 373, 711 P2d 1384 (1986).

Criteria Used in Review of Sanction — Sanction Proper for Dilatory Tactics: The District Court accepted a judgment for damages and sanctions determined by a special master for defendant's discovery violations and tortious interference with plaintiff's right to buy a parcel of land, and defendant appealed. Under this rule, a party's dilatory tactics in responding to discovery requests may result in sanctions. The Supreme Court set out the following criteria to be used in reviewing whether a sanction is an abuse of discretion or too severe: (1) whether the consequences imposed by the sanctions relate to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse; (2) the extent of the prejudice to the opposing party that resulted from the discovery abuse; and (3) whether the court expressly warned the abusing party of the consequences. In this case, defendant's intransigent approach to resolving the dispute satisfactorily fulfilled all three criteria, and in light of the continuous pattern of noncompliance, which resulted in the issuance of three separate compliance orders prior to the District Court's final order determining liability, there was no abuse of discretion in ordering sanctions. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002), and Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Sanction Too Severe in Relation to Abuse: Defendant's agent failed to present photographs at his deposition, in violation of a discovery order. The District Court responded by enjoining defendant from any further discovery until 10 days after compliance with the order. The Supreme Court vacated the order enjoining further discovery after concluding that the order was too severe in relation to the abuse and after noting that there were no other significant discovery abuses or egregious conduct by defendant warranting such extreme sanctions. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989).

Notice of Application for Judgment — Not Required: In a dissolution proceeding, appellant continually failed to respond to interrogatories or make an appearance. Plaintiff requested sanctions under Rule 37(d), M.R.Civ.P. When appellant failed to appear at the sanctions hearing the District Court entered a default judgment for plaintiff. On appeal appellant alleged that the judgment should be set aside as he was not given proper notice of the application for judgment as required by Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P. The court held that notice under Rule 55 is not required. The authority provided to courts under Rule 37 is independent of the authority provided under the other Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. If default is entered as a sanction under Rule 37, no other notice is required. In re Marriage of Massey and Reiser, 225 M 394, 732 P2d 1341, 44 St. Rep. 344 (1987).

Hearing Held Fourteen Months After Interrogatories Received — Dilatory Actions Not Cured by Last Minute Presentation: A party could not cure his dilatory actions by the last minute tender of requested answers and documents at a hearing on a motion to dismiss when the hearing was held 14 months after the interrogatories and request for production were received. Dismissal of the action was a permissible sanction. Dassori v. Roy Stanley Chevrolet Co., 224 M 178, 728 P2d 430, 43 St. Rep. 2113 (1986), followed in Landauer v. Kehrwald, 225 M 322, 732 P2d 839, 44 St. Rep. 271 (1987), and distinguished in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91, 53 St. Rep. 421 (1996). See also McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168, 54 St. Rep. 1277 (1997).

Discovery Not "Cut Off" Prematurely by Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended defendants resisted taking of depositions of witnesses favorable to plaintiffs' cause and thus the court's granting defendants' motion for summary judgment "cut off" discovery prematurely. The court held that plaintiffs failed to present an affidavit as required by Rule 56(f), M.R.Civ.P., stating why depositions could not be taken; nor did plaintiffs exercise their prerogative under Rules 30, 31, or 37, M.R.Civ.P., at any time during the year or more after the complaint was filed. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Private Interviews of Plaintiff's Physicians Beyond Scope of Discovery — Supervisory Control: In a personal injury case, the defendant obtained a court order stating that the plaintiff had waived her physician-patient privilege and that the plaintiff's doctors were to be treated as any other witnesses in the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the order on its face but held that the District Court did not have the power under the rules of discovery to order private interviews between counsel for one party and possibly adverse witnesses, expert or not. The Supreme Court noted that other rules of discovery serve to supplement Rule 26(a), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court must relate discovery it allows and enforces to one of the methods provided for in that rule. A Writ of Supervisory Control was issued in this case. Jaap v. District Court, 191 M 319, 623 P2d 1389, 38 St. Rep. 280 (1981).

Former Rule 37(a). Motion for order compelling discovery

Defendant's Failure to Offer Calculation of Compensation Owed Plaintiff in Employment Termination Action — Sanction Limiting Defendant's Argument on Damages Issue Proper: West sued his employer for failure to pay commissions due to West for the sale of the employer's resort property after West's employment was terminated. The employer was repeatedly ordered to supply West with its calculation of what compensation would have been owed to West if his employment had not been terminated, but the employer failed to do so. At trial, the District Court sanctioned the employer by preventing the employer from disputing West's estimated damage amount in the event that the jury determined that West's employment contract was breached. The employer appealed on grounds that the sanction was an abuse of discretion, but the Supreme Court affirmed. If the employer had intended to present its own calculations to the jury, it should have provided that information to West as requested. Therefore, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to limit the employer's ability to dispute the damage amount proposed by West. West v. The Club at Spanish Peaks, LLC, 2008 MT 183, 343 M 434, 186 P3d 1228 (2008).

No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Motion to Compel Discovery Absent Compliance With Order to State How Discovery Answers Deficient: Plaintiffs filed a motion to compel discovery on grounds that defendants' initial discovery answers were deficient. However, because plaintiffs failed to comply with the District Court's order stating that plaintiffs must list the discovery questions and answers that they considered deficient so that defendants would know what information was desired, the court did not abuse its discretion by subsequently denying the motion to compel discovery. Lynes v. Helm, 2007 MT 226, 339 M 120, 168 P3d 651 (2007).

Sanctions for Discovery Abuses Proper — Motion to Compel Properly Granted: Despite defendant's repeated discovery requests over a 3-year period, 11 letters from defendant's counsel following up on requests for discovery information, and plaintiffs' assurances that the information would be provided, plaintiffs never provided the requested information or responded to counsel's letters. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing sanctions for discovery abuse or in granting defendant's motion to compel discovery. Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Attorney Fees Properly Awarded for Pretrial Discovery Litigation: Plaintiff sought a protective order during discovery to avoid the costs associated with searching for and producing a voluminous drafting history related to a policy pollution exclusion in defendant's policy. The protective order was denied, but plaintiff nevertheless refused to produce the drafting history. The court ordered plaintiff to pay defendant's fees in litigating the motion. Plaintiff moved for reconsideration of the award after the District Court found that the policy language was unambiguous, rendering extrinsic evidence inadmissible. The District Court concluded that plaintiff's concern for costs was not an appropriate matter for a protective order during discovery and denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that defendant should have been allowed to discover the drafting history and that plaintiff, in seeking protection from the discovery order, failed to show good cause for the omission. Although the issues were ultimately adjudged in its favor, plaintiff was not substantially justified in seeking the protective order during discovery. The District Court fairly administered the discovery process and exercised appropriate discretion in controlling discovery and awarding fees, and the award was affirmed. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005).

Failure to Comply With Discovery Order and Sign Discovery Documents — Sanctions for Discovery Abuse Proper: Defendants failed to comply with discovery requests, so the District Court ordered compliance under this rule. Defendants then served their answers in a timely manner, but neglected to sign the documents in violation of Rule 33, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court then determined that discovery sanctions were available under Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P., and denied defendants' attempts to introduce additional affidavits not previously submitted through the discovery process. Defendants contended that the District Court erred by imposing sanctions without allowing defendants a second chance to provide signed answers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants' failure to comply with discovery was by no means unintentional, but rather a concerted effort to avoid cooperating with plaintiff and the District Court. Nevertheless, despite defendants' intransigence, the District Court considered defendants' case on the basis of the record, and the sanctions did not prejudice defendants' case. Therefore, the imposition of sanctions was not an abuse of discretion, and the award was affirmed. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002), followed in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2005 MT 217, 328 M 260, 121 P3d 506 (2005).

Failure to Move to Compel Answer to Interrogatories or for Discovery Sanctions — Failure to Respond to Discovery Not Precluding Introduction of Evidence: After being turned down by the County Sheriff, Smith requested that the District Court grant him a permit to carry a concealed weapon. During discovery, Smith requested information from the county regarding his criminal file, but the county failed to answer the interrogatories. Nevertheless, the District Court admitted Smith's criminal file as evidence, which Smith alleged was an abuse of court discretion, contending that because the county failed to answer the interrogatories, it was precluded from using the information sought by the interrogatories at trial. The Supreme Court pointed out that there are remedies other than exclusion of the evidence for the county's omissions. Rule 33(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires a party to respond to an interrogatory by either answer or objection, but if the party fails to respond, the opposing party may move for an order to compel discovery pursuant to Rule 37(d), M.R.Civ.P. A party may also move for discovery sanctions under this rule. In this case, Smith did not move to compel an answer or move for discovery sanctions, nor was the evidence inconsistent with the information in the Sheriff's correspondence. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the criminal file, despite the county's failure to respond to Smith's discovery request. Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834, 56 St. Rep. 1318 (1999).

Conversion of Motion In Limine Into Motion to Compel Discovery — No Error: During an initial deposition, a witness in a contested will case asserted the attorney-client privilege and refused to answer questions or to produce requested files. The will contestants then filed a motion in limine to prohibit the witness from testifying at trial, based on their inability to explore the files or the witness's knowledge of the files. The District Court treated the motion in limine as a motion to compel discovery and ordered the witness to produce the files. Eight files were produced, and six were found to be relevant. Thereafter, the deposition was reconvened and completed. The contestants alleged District Court error in implicitly denying their motion in limine. The usual procedure following a party's objection or refusal to respond to discovery is a motion to compel, and failure to comply may result in sanctions. Here, the court did not abuse its discretion by converting the motion in limine into a motion to compel, followed by an in camera inspection, and then compelling production of most of the documents. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 162, 295 M 160, 983 P2d 308, 56 St. Rep. 642 (1999).

Discretion of Court to Determine Discovery Compliance: It is within the discretionary power of the trial court to control discovery and determine from the circumstances of the case whether a discovery request has or has not been complied with. That determination will be reversed only if substantial rights of the appellant have been so materially affected as to allow a possible miscarriage of justice. In re H.D., 256 M 70, 844 P2d 114, 49 St. Rep. 1141 (1992).

Denial of Sanctions Without Stating Grounds: The defendant appealed the lower court's refusal to impose sanctions on the plaintiff for failing to comply in a timely manner with discovery requests. The Supreme Court stated that although the lower court did not state the grounds for the denial, the record revealed evidence to justify the decision. Granite County v. Komberec, 245 M 252, 800 P2d 166, 47 St. Rep. 2061 (1990).

Appropriateness of Writ of Supervisory Control Regarding Motion to Compel Discovery — Discovery of Potentially Privileged Material: Although a discovery order is interlocutory and normally not appealable, the Supreme Court accepted supervisory control in a case involving the discovery of potentially privileged material when it was apparent that the discovery order would place the defendant at a significant disadvantage in litigating the merits of the case. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989), followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997).

Award of Expenses After Opportunity for Hearing: Defendant contended that an award of expenses under subsection (4) of this rule can only be made after a hearing on the issue. However, the subsection does not require a hearing but merely an opportunity for a hearing. Because defendant made no request for a hearing, the award of attorney fees and costs was affirmed. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989).

Motion to Compel Made in Response to Failure of Timely Discovery — Fees and Costs Appropriate: When a motion to compel and the District Court's subsequent order were largely in response to defendant's failure to produce photographs in a timely manner, the award of attorney fees and costs to plaintiff was appropriate. State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 239 M 207, 779 P2d 885, 46 St. Rep. 1625 (1989).

Motion for Protective Order Not Granted — Motion In Limine Granted — Attorney Fees Appropriate: A motion for a protective order filed under Rule 26(c), M.R.Civ.P. (see Title 25, ch. 20), seeking court guidance as to requested discovery, was never actually granted; however, attorney fees were appropriate under Rule 37(a)(4), M.R.Civ.P. (see Title 25, ch. 20), when the line of discovery was disposed of as irrelevant by the granting of a motion in limine, which in effect granted the motion for the protective order. In re Marriage of Cole, 224 M 207, 729 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 2136 (1986).

Motion to Retake Deposition Denied — No Relevancy — Improper Motion: Denial of motion to retake a deposition was not an abuse of discretion when the subject of the deposition was totally irrelevant to the issues and when movant claimed the other side improperly withheld, during discovery, information that would have made movant's deposition more valuable. Movant, however, failed to use the exclusive remedy of moving for an order compelling discovery. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Interlocutory Review of Interrogatories Rulings — Exhaustion of Remedies Required: Applicant for a Writ of Supervisory Control seeking reversal of lower court's order denying applicant's objections to interrogatories failed to exhaust its remedies in lower court where it did not apply there for a protective order under Rule 26(c), M.R.Civ.P., or for an order under this rule assessing costs and attorney fees against its opponent should the lower court order be reversed on appeal. State ex rel. Guarantee Ins. Co. v. District Court, 194 M 64, 634 P2d 648, 38 St. Rep. 1682 (1981).

Evasive Answer Treated as Failure to Answer: Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires a denial of a request for admission to fairly meet the substance of the requested admission. The responder must admit or deny with particularity if the truth can be ascertained by reasonable inquiry. Under Rule 37(a), M.R.Civ.P., an evasive answer is to be treated as a failure to answer and, thus, an admission. Massaro v. Dunham, 184 M 400, 603 P2d 249 (1979).

Failure to Regulate Discovery as Grounds for Reversal: Massaro failed to respond to written interrogatories, a request to produce documents, and requests for admissions, although he asked for additional time and his counsel gave assurance that a response would be forthcoming. Dunham did not move for an order compelling discovery but at trial objected to and sought restriction of certain expected proof that he had not had an opportunity to inspect. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the District Court because it failed to regulate the discovery process and accorded an unfair advantage to Massaro. Massaro v. Dunham, 184 M 400, 603 P2d 249 (1979). See also In re Marriage of Deichl, 239 M 425, 781 P2d 254, 46 St. Rep. 1801 (1989), and Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Failure to Disclose Witness — Testimony Admitted: It was not an abuse of discretion for trial judge to allow witness for oil refinery to testify as to condition of ground about railroad tracks where plaintiff-switchman crushed his hand beneath wheel of oil tank car when he allegedly slipped in oil or grease on concrete walkway of refinery in trying to mount the train, even though railroad had not included witness' name in its answer to plaintiff's interrogatories, since witness was the oil refinery's and plaintiff, knowing oil refinery had been joined as a third-party defendant, had failed to seek disclosure from it, or a pretrial conference, and had allowed other witnesses to testify to the same matter at trial. Wolfe v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 29, 409 P2d 528 (1966).

Failure to Order Sanctions — Standard of Appellate Review: An appellate court will reverse a trial court judge, who has refused to invoke the sanctions of this section, only when his judgment may materially affect the substantial rights of the parties and allow a possible miscarriage of justice. Wolfe v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 29, 409 P2d 528 (1966), followed in In re Marriage of Rada, 263 M 402, 869 P2d 254, 51 St. Rep. 110 (1994).

Use of Sanctions: The use of sanctions lies within the authority of the judge and he will be reversed only when his judgment may materially affect the substantial rights and allow a possible miscarriage of justice. Wolfe v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 29, 409 P2d 528 (1966), followed in Barrett v. ASARCO Inc., 234 M 229, 763 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 1865 (1988). See also Melotz v. Scheckla, 245 M 327, 801 P2d 593, 47 St. Rep. 2165 (1990).

Former Rule 37(b). Failure to comply with order

Motion for Default Judgment Properly Denied — No Error: In a negligence and strict liability case concerning a Ford Explorer's safety designs, the defendant timely produced 17 gigabytes of electronic data in response to a discovery request, and shortly before trial, produced an additional 300 gigabytes of data. The plaintiff requested default sanctions under former Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because of the late discovery response, but although the District Court expressed frustration with the defendant, it declined to impose sanctions because of the defendant's attempts to comply with discovery orders, considerations concerning the company's size and the amount of other ongoing litigation, and a lack of evidence that the defendant was wantonly disregarding the discovery order. Because there was no clear evidence that the defendant was acting in bad faith, the Supreme Court affirmed. Stokes v. Ford Motor Co., 2013 MT 29, 368 Mont. 365, 300 P.3d 648.

Repeated Failure to Comply With Rules of Civil Procedure — Default Judgment and Sanctions Proper: As a sanction against West, the District Court dismissed West's answer to Watson's complaint, entered default judgment against West, and awarded attorney fees and costs to Watson for preparing a pretrial order and a motion for sanctions. West appealed on grounds that the sanctions were too harsh. However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in imposing the sanctions based on West's substantive failures to comply with procedural rules and the scheduling order, failure to seek a timely continuance of a status conference, failure to attend a status conference scheduled at West's request, failure to submit a timely proposed pretrial order, failure to prepare for the pretrial conference, failure to communicate with the District Court regarding the missed status conference or to seek a continuance of deadlines in the third amended trial preparation order, and failure to respond to Watson's request for sanctions. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009), following McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168 (1997).

Finding of Liability Establishing Causation of Injury — No Need for Jury to Consider Evidence of Cause: Plaintiff sued the city of Bozeman for lost profits and alleged constructive fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage related to a real estate purchase and development issue. During the course of litigation, the District Court, as a sanction for discovery abuse, ordered that the city was liable for interfering with the property purchase and development, resulting in injury to plaintiff. The city appealed on grounds that the sanction establishing the city's liability included the element of causation. The Supreme Court affirmed. Once liability was settled through the sanction order, causation of the injury was also established, and the jury did not need to consider evidence of the cause of the injury. The only question left for the jury was the amount of damages, and the District Court did not err when it instructed the jury that some damages must be awarded. Once the city's liability was established, an expert's estimate of the loss, based on a reasonable computation and the best evidence available under the circumstances, was sufficient to support the amount of damages fixed by the jury. Delaney & Co. v. Bozeman, 2009 MT 441, 354 M 181, 222 P3d 618 (2009), following Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990).

Dismissal After Failure to Comply With Discovery — Sanction Proper: Linn was injured in a pedestrian accident and sued for damages. Defendant sent interrogatories and requests for production of Linn's medical records and accident history, but Linn failed to timely respond. Defendant moved to compel, but Linn's responses were at best incomplete. At a deposition, Linn was able to provide only vague answers and little of the requested medical information. Defendant filed a second motion to compel. The District Court recognized Linn's difficulties in recalling specific information and stated that although it did not appear that Linn was willfully disrupting the discovery process, it was necessary to set a deadline for response to the long-standing discovery requests and noted that failure to comply could result in dismissal of the action. No further information from Linn was forthcoming. After more than 2 years of failed discovery attempts, the District Court dismissed the case with prejudice, and Linn appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), to determine whether the consequence inflicted by the sanction related to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse, related to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party, and was consistent with any warning issued by the District Court. The court also considered Linn's disregard of the District Court's orders and authority. Here, Linn continuously failed to fully respond to discovery requests and ignored the court orders that gave her the opportunity to do so. Linn's unresponsiveness prejudiced defendant by preventing meaningful discovery and could not be considered insignificant, and dismissal of the complaint sufficiently related to the extent of prejudice suffered by defendant. Last, Linn failed to comply with discovery despite the District Court's patience and understanding of Linn's purported difficulties in responding. Thus, dismissal of the action was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court was affirmed. Linn v. Whitaker, 2007 MT 46, 336 M 131, 152 P3d 1282 (2007), following Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000), and Culbertson Health Care Corp. v. Stevens, 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Striking of Defenses as Discovery Sanction and Damages Affirmed — Smith Test for Assessing Discovery Sanctions Clarified: When defendant failed to respond to discovery requests for nearly 1 year and effectively disregarded the District Court's order to supplement insufficient discovery responses, the District Court sanctioned defendant by dismissing defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff on the issue of liability and awarding damages to plaintiff. Defendant appealed on grounds that the sanction was excessively harsh. In assessing the propriety of discovery sanctions imposed pursuant to this rule, the Supreme Court applies the three-part test set out in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), considering whether the consequence imposed via the sanction: (1) relates to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse; (2) relates to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party that resulted from the discovery abuse; and (3) is consistent with the consequences expressly warned of by the District Court, if a warning was issued. The court clarified that the third prong of the Smith test applies only if the District Court issues a warning. In addition to the test factors, the Supreme Court also considers a party's disregard of the court's authority and orders. If a ready, confident, and accurate determination of a party's good faith compliance with the discovery process cannot be made, the correctness of the District Court's imposition of sanctions will be presumed. In this case, the sanctions related sufficiently to the prejudice suffered by plaintiff, and in light of defendant's unwavering disregard of the District Court's orders and authority, the court did not abuse its discretion by striking defendant's defenses and granting summary judgment to plaintiff. Absent evidence that the court abused its discretion, the award of damages was also proper. Culbertson-Froid-Bainville Health Care Corp. v. JP Stevens & Co., Inc., 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

Dismissal of Complaint With Prejudice Unwarranted When Delay Reasonable and No Prejudice Shown: The District Court set a scheduling conference, but plaintiff's counsel did not attend because of a computer problem. The District Court then dismissed the complaint with prejudice and denied a motion to reopen the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, applying the factors in Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 M 1, 798 P2d 1011 (1990), and Hobble-Diamond Cattle Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531 (1995), to determine whether the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the action for failure to prosecute. In this case, plaintiff's delay in prosecuting the case was reasonable, and defendant suffered no actual prejudice, so the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. Vermeer of Wash., Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 77, 320 M 435, 87 P3d 516 (2004), distinguishing E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931 (1997).

Failure to Comply With Discovery Order and Sign Discovery Documents — Sanctions for Discovery Abuse Proper: Defendants failed to comply with discovery requests, so the District Court ordered compliance under Rule 37(a), M.R.Civ.P. Defendants then served their answers in a timely manner, but neglected to sign the documents in violation of Rule 33, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court then determined that discovery sanctions were available under this rule and denied defendants' attempts to introduce additional affidavits not previously submitted through the discovery process. Defendants contended that the District Court erred by imposing sanctions without allowing defendants a second chance to provide signed answers. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants' failure to comply with discovery was by no means unintentional, but rather a concerted effort to avoid cooperating with plaintiff and the District Court. Nevertheless, despite defendants' intransigence, the District Court considered defendants' case on the basis of the record, and the sanctions did not prejudice defendants' case. Therefore, the imposition of sanctions was not an abuse of discretion, and the award was affirmed. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002), followed in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2005 MT 217, 328 M 260, 121 P3d 506 (2005).

Default Proper as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Alleging that she was defrauded out of nearly $1 million, Cass properly served defendants with a complaint, summons, and discovery requests. Defendants failed to respond to the discovery requests, and the District Court held defendants in default, awarding Cass $1,736,547.20. Defendants moved to set the judgment aside, but the request was denied, and defendants appealed, arguing that the default judgment should have been set aside pursuant to Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., when Cass filed an amended pleading. However, the record clearly showed that the District Court dismissed the case pursuant to Rule 37,

M.R.Civ.P., based on defendants' failure to comply with discovery requests and a court order to answer discovery, rather than on Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., for defendants' failure to defend. Although default could have been applied under either rule, the District Court obviously faced a litigant who simply was not going to respond to properly served discovery, so entry of default under Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., was not an abuse of discretion, and the judgment was affirmed. Cass v. Composite Indus. of Am., Inc., 2002 MT 226, 311 M 406, 56 P3d 322 (2002).

Failure of State to Respond to Discovery Requests During Driver's License Reinstatement Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: Responding to a 9-1-1 emergency dispatch, an officer found Patterson slumped over the steering wheel of a running vehicle, fast asleep. Patterson refused to take a Breathalyzer test, so he was arrested for DUI, and his license was seized. Patterson challenged the suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403 and through discovery requests sought a copy of the 9-1-1 report, but no copy was provided. The hearing was continued twice because of the absence of the report, and the District Court warned the state that if it failed to produce the report, Patterson's license would be reinstated and the suspension would be dismissed. On the day of the hearing, the state informed the court that it was unable to obtain the 9-1-1 report, so Patterson's motion for reinstatement of his driver's license was granted. The state appealed on grounds that the District Court erred by reinstating the license based on the state's failure to comply with an order compelling production of the report. The Supreme Court affirmed. To determine whether the sanction for the discovery abuse constituted an abuse of the District Court's discretion, the Supreme Court applied the factors in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124 (2000). The 9-1-1 report was treated as relevant information absent a timely objection by the state to Patterson's request for production, and the state's failure to produce the report compromised Patterson's ability to prepare and present a defense, suspended the progress of the case, and prejudiced Patterson. The state was warned that reinstatement would result from failure to produce the report, and reinstatement was an appropriate sanction for the state's repeated failure to comply with discovery. Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002).

Failure to Show Excessiveness of Sanctions — Reasonableness of Fees and Costs: Defendant was awarded fees and costs from plaintiff's attorney Palmer, who complained that the sanctions were excessive, citing Rule 1.5 of the Rules of Professional Conduct for the proposition that fees customarily charged in a locality be considered in determining the reasonableness of fees. However, under Rule 1.5, fees customarily charged in a locale are not the sole factor that may be considered. Palmer did not assert specific objections to either the necessity of or the time spent on the work billed by defendant's counsel and thus failed to show that the sanctions were excessive. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000).

Unilateral Cancellation of Deposition by Plaintiff's Attorney — Sanctions Appropriate for Discovery Abuse: Plaintiff's attorney Palmer was directed to appear at a deposition requested by defendant. Palmer objected to the subpoena under Rules 30(d) and 45(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P., and failed to appear for the deposition. The District Court sanctioned Palmer for discovery abuses pursuant to Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., and ordered him to pay defendant's attorney fees and costs. On appeal, Palmer argued that the effect of his objection was to quash the subpoena and suspend the deposition and disclosure of documents until further order of the court. Palmer was mistaken on both issues. Rule 30(d) only contemplates a motion to terminate or limit a deposition during the taking of the deposition. Rule 45(b)(1) provides that a District Court may quash a subpoena, not an attorney. By unilaterally canceling the deposition, Palmer violated the deposition order. When Palmer finally was deposed, he refused to answer any questions unless defendant agreed to his stipulations. The Supreme Court considered the relationship between the sanctions and the extent and nature of the discovery abuse and extent of the prejudice to defendant caused by Palmer's failure to appear at the deposition, in light of Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996). Although the District Court could have taken other actions, such as dismissing the underlying action, the sanctions, though severe, related appropriately to the extent of the discovery abuse and prejudice to defendant and were affirmed absent any showing by Palmer that his failure to comply with the discovery orders was substantially justified. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000). See also Pioche Mines Consol., Inc. v. Dolman, 333 F2d 257 (9th Cir. 1964).

Wait of Thirteen Months to Question Whether Sanctions Should Be Imposed — Adequate Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard: Defendant sought sanctions against Palmer, plaintiff's attorney, under Rules 11 and 37, M.R.Civ.P., for Palmer's defiance of scheduling and pretrial orders, and the District Court awarded sanctions under Rule 37. Palmer alleged that his due process rights were violated because he did not receive notice and an opportunity to be heard, but the due process arguments were not supported in the record. The Supreme Court agreed that when a person is sanctioned with attorney fees and costs under Rule 37, that person is entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard before sanctions are imposed. However, in this case, Palmer waited more than 13 months after defendants moved for sanctions to question whether they should be imposed. Notice was adequate, and Palmer also was allowed to argue the appropriateness of sanctions at a hearing. Palmer's argument on appeal, that Rule 37 did not apply to him because he was a nonparty deponent, was not addressed because the issue was raised for the first time on appeal. The Supreme Court noted that Rule 16(f), M.R.Civ.P., clearly allows sanctions in cases like this one, in which an attorney defies a District Court's scheduling and pretrial orders. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000).

Attorney's Busy Schedule No Excuse for Failure to Answer Interrogatories — Sanctions Warranted: Defendant contended that it should have not been sanctioned when its response to plaintiff's interrogatories was late because of the rush of the Christmas season and the crunch of counsel's schedule. The Supreme Court has consistently stated that a party's abuse of discovery procedures resulting in unnecessary delay of a case should not be dealt with leniently and that those who abuse the discovery rules should be punished rather than encouraged repeatedly to cooperate in the discovery process. An attorney's busy schedule is not substantial justification for failing to comply with a District Court order, nor is it a circumstance that makes an imposition of sanctions unjust under this rule. As set out in McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168 (1997), a party should be sanctioned for an attitude of unresponsiveness to the discovery process regardless of the intent behind that attitude. Refusing to provide discovery is the precise reason behind the availability of sanctions under this rule, and in this case, they were properly imposed. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Testimony Regarding Presence of Defect Even Though Failed Part Missing — Request to Dismiss Properly Denied: In their brief in support of summary judgment, defendants requested dismissal because the failed section of an allegedly defective product was missing as a result of plaintiffs' failure to preserve the evidence, rendering defendants unable to examine and evaluate the failed section and prejudicing their ability to present a defense. However, both sides offered testimony through experts' affidavits on the presence of a defect and when it occurred, even though the failed part was missing. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to dismiss because of the missing evidence. Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997), following Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 162 M 506, 513 P2d 268 (1973).

Dismissal With Prejudice Proper Sanction For Actively Withholding Relevant Information: In a personal injury suit, the plaintiff and her attorney purposely withheld information concerning the plaintiff's prior medical history. The lower court, relying on Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., dismissed the plaintiff's case with prejudice. The Supreme Court held that the dismissal was not proper under Rule 37(b) or (d), M.R.Civ.P., but was justified under Rule 26(g), M.R.Civ.P., and therefore upheld the dismissal. Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919, 46 St. Rep. 2042 (1989). See also Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006).

Failure to Appear Following Notice — Dismissal Proper: Because plaintiff was properly served with notice of his deposition but deliberately and intentionally failed to appear at the time and place set for taking the deposition, the District Court properly sanctioned him by dismissing his cause of action under subsection (2)(C) of this rule. Huffine v. Boylan, 239 M 515, 782 P2d 77, 46 St. Rep. 1877 (1989), followed in McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168, 54 St. Rep. 1277 (1997).

Default Judgment on Issue of Liability Not Appealable: The District Court, as a discovery sanction, granted a default judgment for plaintiffs on the issue of liability but reserved determination of the amount of damages, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that an order which grants a default judgment on the issue of liability, reserving determination of the amount of damages for a later hearing, is not a final, appealable order under former Rule 1, M.R.App.Civ.P. (M.R.App.P., now superseded). The appeal was dismissed. Stevens v. Abbott, 220 M 61, 712 P2d 1347, 43 St. Rep. 173 (1986).

Sanctions Not Applicable to Interrogatories Propounded by Other Party Absent Order: When a party failed to correctly provide answers to a continuing interrogatory propounded by the other party, the sanctions of Rule 37(b) do not apply because that rule relates to the failure to comply with a court order compelling discovery. Thibaudeau v. Uglum, 201 M 260, 653 P2d 855, 39 St. Rep. 2096 (1982).

Interview of Unnamed Witness — Consent to Alleged Noncompliance With Duty to Supplement: On appeal, a father suing for injury to his son found submerged in defendant's swimming pool alleged pretrial discovery abuse by defendant in that defendant was allowed to add a witness the day before trial and had known the location of the witness but failed to inform the father of the address, in violation of defendant's duty to supplement its interrogatory answers. It was not reversible error to allow the witness to testify. The testimony was probative on important fact issues, and the father interviewed the witness before trial and rejected an offered continuance. The father was not entitled to have his cake and eat it too. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

Discovery of Documents — Time Allowance on Remand: Husband failed to comply with court's order allowing shorter time for him to respond to interrogatories, and wife had complained of insufficient time to examine one of his tax returns, which contained information regarding a piece of property over which there was a dispute as to whether it should be included in the marital estate for property disposition purposes. Since the Supreme Court was returning the case to the District Court for reconsideration of the marital estate assets, the Supreme Court directed that wife be allowed to pursue examination of the disputed piece of property. Hill v. Hill, 197 M 451, 643 P2d 582, 39 St. Rep. 723 (1982).

Impeding Discovery — Sanctions: Plaintiff sued defendant as the distributor of Revson cosmetics in Montana, alleging severe allergic reaction to the application of certain cosmetics. The District Court found that Revson had repeatedly failed to sufficiently comply with plaintiff's discovery requests. The District Court issued a series of orders to compel discovery and impose sanctions. The District Court eventually precluded Revson from introducing evidence contrary to the admitted facts. The District Court found that Revson's failure to comply with discovery and court orders was willful disobedience. On appeal, Revson contended that the District Court abused its discretion. The Supreme Court held that when litigants use willful delay, evasive response, and disregard of court direction as part and parcel of their trial strategy, they must suffer the consequences. Deterrence of such actions is no longer envisioned as a merely incidental effect of remedial sanctions but as an affirmative instrument in the judicial arsenal to be used in providing the "just, speedy, and inexpensive determination of every action". Owen v. F.A. Buttrey Co., 192 M 274, 627 P2d 1233, 38 St. Rep. 714 (1981), followed in First Bank v. Heidema, 219 M 373, 711 P2d 1384, 43 St. Rep. 22 (1986), McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168, 54 St. Rep. 1277 (1997), and Bulen v. Navajo Refining Co., Inc., 2000 MT 222, 301 M 195, 9 P3d 607, 57 St. Rep. 912 (2000).

Default Judgment Against Disobedient Party: The District Court did not err in failing to set aside a default judgment entered under Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P., against appellants for failure to answer interrogatories. Although appellants allege that the District Court issued an unduly harsh sanction and that default judgments should be set aside under a generally liberal standard, the District Court properly found that appellants' behavior was so abusive of procedural requirements that imposition of a default judgment was warranted. Here, appellants delayed in answering interrogatories for over 8 months; appellants failed to appear and defend at a hearing to compel discovery; after appellants were given notice of withdrawal of their attorney, they failed to obtain another one, thus delaying the proceedings even more; after the District Court issued an order giving appellants 20 days to answer or else a default would be entered, appellants failed to answer the interrogatories; and finally, after appellants were given notice of a hearing on respondent's application for a default judgment, appellants again did not appear. Quoting Gallegos v. Franklin, 59 NM 118, 547 P2d 1160, certiorari denied 549 P2d 284 (1976), appellants halted "the adversary process and endlessly delay[ed] the rights of plaintiff". Audit Serv., Inc. v. Kraus Constr., Inc., 189 M 94, 615 P2d 183 (1980), followed in Eisenmenger v. Ethicon, Inc., 264 M 393, 871 P2d 1313, 51 St. Rep. 296 (1994). However, see Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91, 53 St. Rep. 421 (1996).

Sanctions Ordered Under Federal Rules: Under authority of Rule 37(b), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the federal District Court entered an order designating that certain facts supporting plaintiff's claim for liability are considered established for purposes of this action. Stanton v. Iver Johnson's Arms, Inc., 88 FRD 290, 37 St. Rep. 1823 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Former Rule 37(c). Expenses on failure to admit

Sanctions Against Parties and Not Attorney for Multiple Abuses Upheld — No Abuse of Discretion by District Court: The District Court ordered Rule 11 and discovery sanctions against Hiltens and not their attorney for a variety of abuses in litigation involving Bragg. The sanctions consisted of Bragg's attorney fees and costs. The Hiltens appealed their Rule 11 sanctions based upon their slander claim against Bragg and appealed the discovery sanctions, claiming they were not timely sought. Because Hiltens failed to challenge the District Court's factual findings, the Supreme Court upheld the Rule 11 sanctions and the discovery sanctions. The court also held that the sanctions were valid because Hiltens brought the litigation for an improper purpose, brought a claim for slander that was frivolous, submitted a false affidavit, refused to admit they suffered no actual damages, altered an audio file before releasing it through discovery, and made irrelevant and burdensome discovery demands for use in other potential litigation but not the current litigation. Because the facts showed that their attorney was not culpable to the extent that Hiltens were, the Supreme Court affirmed the lack of sanctions against Hiltens' attorney. Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Failure of Taxpayers to Produce Tax Assessment-Related Documents — Tax Appeal Properly Dismissed With Prejudice: After additional tax, interest, and penalties were assessed on plaintiffs for several tax years, plaintiffs contested the assessment and were referred to a Department of Revenue hearings examiner, who requested but did not receive a number of documents from plaintiffs pertaining to the tax years in question. Some 15 months and two additional requests later, the hearings examiner sent a letter to plaintiffs' counsel requesting the materials, but no response was received, so the Department moved to dismiss. The hearings examiner dismissed the matter, and plaintiffs immediately appealed the dismissal to the State Tax Appeal Board. The Department then sent its discovery request to plaintiffs' counsel but again received no response and no documents, so the Department requested that the Board dismiss the case, which the Board dismissed pursuant to Rule 37(d), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to prosecute. Plaintiffs appealed to District Court, but the Board's dismissal was affirmed. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. At each level of the proceedings, plaintiffs and their counsel blatantly ignored and failed to respond to discovery requests for information related to the case. One sanction for failure to comply with discovery requests is dismissal of the case, and it was well within the discretion of the District Court to affirm the Board's dismissal of the case for plaintiffs' failure to prosecute and to abide by rules for discovery. Menholt v. Dept. of Revenue, 2009 MT 38, 349 M 239, 203 P3d 792 (2009), following Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Improper Award of Joint and Several Sanctions Under Rule 37(c) — Award of Fees and Costs Proper as Sanction Under Rule 11: Pursuant to this rule, the trial court held both plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel jointly and severally liable for attorney costs and fees associated with a dilatory discovery action. Plaintiff's attorney correctly argued that the language of this rule only allows a court to order that sanctions be paid by a party, so it was error to order that sanctions be paid by the party and the party's attorney under that rule. However, although this rule was unavailable as a source of authority for imposing sanctions under this scenario, Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P., did provide a basis for discipline for dilatory discovery. The District Court reached the right result but for the wrong reason. The error was harmless, and the Supreme Court affirmed the award of sanctions pursuant to Rule 11. Morris v. Big Sky Thoroughbred Farms, Inc., 1998 MT 229, 291 M 32, 965 P2d 890, 55 St. Rep. 957 (1998). See also Robertus v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 207, 344 M 157, 189 P3d 582 (2008).

Note: The Supreme Court amended this rule to reflect the Morris holding by order dated September 15, 1998, published at 55 St. Rep. 979 (1998).

Improper Denial of Attorney Fees Necessary to Prove Truth of Denied Requests for Admission: The District Court abused its discretion when it failed to award plaintiff attorney fees necessitated to prove the truth of requests for admission that defendant denied. The case was remanded for calculation of the amount of attorney fees to which plaintiff was entitled pursuant to this rule. Springer v. Becker, 284 M 267, 949 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 876 (1997).

Failure to Admit Genuineness of Documents: A judge properly awarded attorney fees and witness expenses to plaintiff for defendant's failure to admit the genuineness of documents submitted by plaintiff that supported plaintiff's claim and that later proved to be genuine. Credit Associates, Inc. v. Mogan, 255 M 307, 843 P2d 321, 49 St. Rep. 1021 (1992).

Dilatory Discovery Tactics: In an action by plaintiff bank to recover certain sums of principal and interest owing on a note, the defendant debtors refused to attend their own deposition, refused to produce documents, and ignored court orders directing them to comply with requests for information. In view of the defendants' bad faith in failing to comply with rules of discovery and court orders enforcing the rules, the trial court's judgment in favor of the bank was well within the boundaries of its discretion. First Bank v. Heidema, 219 M 373, 711 P2d 1384, 43 St. Rep. 22 (1986).

Notice of Order Requesting Attorney Fees: When a party requested attorney fees pursuant to Rule 37(c), M.R.Civ.P., and failed to apply by motion with notice to opposing party, but incorporated it within proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, there was insufficient notice. Luppold v. Lewis, 172 M 280, 563 P2d 538 (1977).

Former Rule 37(d). Failure of party to attend at own deposition or serve answers to interrogatories or respond to request for inspection

Sanctions Against Parties and Not Attorney for Multiple Abuses Upheld — No Abuse of Discretion by District Court: The District Court ordered Rule 11 and discovery sanctions against Hiltens and not their attorney for a variety of abuses in litigation involving Bragg. The sanctions consisted of Bragg's attorney fees and costs. The Hiltens appealed their Rule 11 sanctions based upon their slander claim against Bragg and appealed the discovery sanctions, claiming they were not timely sought. Because Hiltens failed to challenge the District Court's factual findings, the Supreme Court upheld the Rule 11 sanctions and the discovery sanctions. The court also held that the sanctions were valid because Hiltens brought the litigation for an improper purpose, brought a claim for slander that was frivolous, submitted a false affidavit, refused to admit they suffered no actual damages, altered an audio file before releasing it through discovery, and made irrelevant and burdensome discovery demands for use in other potential litigation but not the current litigation. Because the facts showed that their attorney was not culpable to the extent that Hiltens were, the Supreme Court affirmed the lack of sanctions against Hiltens' attorney. Hilten v. Bragg, 2010 MT 273, 358 Mont. 407, 248 P.3d 282.

Impossibility of Discovery Violation — Default Properly Set Aside: After Young failed to respond to a discovery request, Mill Creek filed a motion for a default judgment. Young then filed a notice of his service of answers to Mill Creek's discovery requests. The District Court granted the motion for default without citing any procedural rule. In his motion to set aside the default judgment, Young claimed Mill Creek had failed to serve him with the discovery requests and that as soon as Young received a copy of the motion for default, he responded with the answers to the discovery requests. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly set aside the default because the District Court was unaware that Young had responded to the discovery requests, so there could have been no default judgment pursuant to former Rule 37(d), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Mill Creek Ltd. Partnership v. Lodge, 2010 MT 65, 355 Mont. 478, 228 P.3d 1144.

Misapplication of Rule in Imposing Sanctions: After denying plaintiff's claim for accrued interest in overdue production revenue payments, the District Court, without a hearing, imposed sanctions against plaintiff in the form of attorney fees incurred by defendant. The court cited this rule as authority for the sanctions, but never ruled on what amount of fees should be awarded before relinquishing jurisdiction of the case to another District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court addressed several issues and remanded. The court agreed that this rule was misapplied in imposing sanctions and ordered that the appropriateness of sanctions against plaintiff be determined on remand following a hearing. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P3d 580 (2009).

Dismissal After Failure to Comply With Discovery — Sanction Proper: Linn was injured in a pedestrian accident and sued for damages. Defendant sent interrogatories and requests for production of Linn's medical records and accident history, but Linn failed to timely respond. Defendant moved to compel, but Linn's responses were at best incomplete. At a deposition, Linn was able to provide only vague answers and little of the requested medical information. Defendant filed a second motion to compel. The District Court recognized Linn's difficulties in recalling specific information and stated that although it did not appear that Linn was willfully disrupting the discovery process, it was necessary to set a deadline for response to the long-standing discovery requests and noted that failure to comply could result in dismissal of the action. No further information from Linn was forthcoming. After more than 2 years of failed discovery attempts, the District Court dismissed the case with prejudice, and Linn appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996), to determine whether the consequence inflicted by the sanction related to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse, related to the extent of prejudice to the opposing party, and was consistent with any warning issued by the District Court. The court also considered Linn's disregard of the District Court's orders and authority. Here, Linn continuously failed to fully respond to discovery requests and ignored the court orders that gave her the opportunity to do so. Linn's unresponsiveness prejudiced defendant by preventing meaningful discovery and could not be considered insignificant, and dismissal of the complaint sufficiently related to the extent of prejudice suffered by defendant. Last, Linn failed to comply with discovery despite the District Court's patience and understanding of Linn's purported difficulties in responding. Thus, dismissal of the action was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court was affirmed. Linn v. Whitaker, 2007 MT 46, 336 M 131, 152 P3d 1282 (2007), following Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000), and Culbertson Health Care Corp. v. Stevens, 2005 MT 254, 329 M 38, 122 P3d 431 (2005).

No Showing of Prejudice in Discovery — Sanctions Properly Limited: During discovery, plaintiff moved for production of a relevant insurance policy and other documents related to the policy. Defendant insurer responded that it had no additional information about the policy, but at the deposition, plaintiff learned of a database that referenced the location and identifying number of a storage box that might contain the policy. A search was conducted, but the policy was not found; however, the policy number in the database matched the number on a cancellation notice, thus evidencing the existence of a policy. Also at deposition, plaintiff learned of a loss history that was in defendant's possession, showing six different claims made under the policy number. Plaintiff sought discovery sanctions, claiming that the information, if provided earlier, might have led to additional discoverable materials. The District Court nevertheless limited sanctions to attorney fees and costs, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff's contention of possible additional information was purely speculative, and plaintiff did not move to reopen discovery when it had the opportunity to do so. The discovery request related to the existence of a policy, and the District Court ultimately found that a policy did exist, so plaintiff suffered no prejudice. Given that one of the companies involved had been merged out of business and that the papers in question were in a remote storage location, defendant to an extent had done its best to provide the requested materials, and the District Court properly limited sanctions to attorney fees and costs. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Dismissal of Complaint as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Although Xu received timely notice of the need to respond in writing to defendants' discovery requests within 30 days, Xu filed incomplete, inappropriate, and unacceptable responses, and ultimately defendants sought an order compelling Xu's responses. Then, after defendants' unsuccessful attempts to schedule a deposition, defendants timely notified Xu of their intent to take Xu's deposition on May 11, 2004. Without response or explanation, Xu did not attend the deposition, so defendants sought an order compelling Xu's deposition and requesting sanctions, including dismissal of Xu's claims for failure to attend the May deposition. At a hearing, the District Court carefully explained to Xu the obligation to answer discovery and attend depositions. The court gave Xu an additional 3 weeks to provide discovery answers and be deposed. In response, Xu filed a pleading to reschedule the deposition, but failed to complete discovery or to attend the court-ordered deposition. On defendants' motion, the court then dismissed Xu's action with prejudice for failing to attend the depositions. Xu appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding from the record that Xu knowingly and repeatedly refused to cooperate with discovery request, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Xu's claim as a sanction. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Second Suit Based on Same Facts as Case Dismissed With Prejudice Properly Dismissed as Res Judicata: While a first employment termination claim was pending, Xu filed another claim based on the same facts. The first claim was ultimately dismissed with prejudice for Xu's failure to comply with discovery, and the District Court then summarily dismissed the second case based on res judicata and collateral estoppel. Xu appealed on grounds that it was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss the second case because the second case contained a new claim of defamation and because there was no final adjudication on the merits of the first claim. The Supreme Court disagreed. Res judicata applied not only to the issues that were raised in the first claim, but also to issues that could or should have been raised in the first litigation. Collateral estoppel applied because a dismissal with prejudice constituted an adjudication on the merits. Summary dismissal of the second case was therefore affirmed. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Sanction for Discovery Abuse Proper for Dilatory Tactics and Withholding Information Crucial to Damage Case: Only 5 days before trial, defendant discovered during a deposition with plaintiff's physician that a large portion of plaintiff's medical file consisting of 75 to 80 pages of documents had not been identified or produced in response to discovery requests. Defendant then moved to dismiss the complaint with prejudice as a sanction for discovery violations. Plaintiff's response was to fire his attorney and avoid going to trial. The District Court subsequently dismissed plaintiff's complaint with prejudice, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The sanction was appropriate given plaintiff's dilatory tactics calculated to hide his weak case and his demonstration of little interest or ability in adjudicating the case on the merits. Smart v. Molinario, 2004 MT 21, 319 M 335, 83 P3d 1284 (2004).

Award of Attorney Fees Associated With Motion to Compel Discovery: When the Mularonis did not respond to requests for depositions, the Bings moved to compel discovery pursuant to this rule and requested attorney fees associated with the motion. The District Court granted the motion, but declined to award attorney fees. The Bings appealed. The Supreme Court noted that in Del. v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818 (1999), a strict rule was applied to sanction the abuse of discovery rules, which included the award of attorney fees. Although the question of whether attorney fees were to be awarded pursuant to a successful motion to compel was not specifically discussed in Delaware, the Supreme Court applied the same rationale with equal force. The Court held that upon motion, a District Court is required to assess reasonable expenses, including attorney fees, against a party that fails to appear for a duly noticed deposition unless the court finds substantial justification or circumstances that make the award of those expenses unjust. In this case, the District Court erroneously neglected to state any findings as to why attorney fees were unjustified, so the Supreme Court remanded with directions to assess the proper award of attorney fees or to recite why the award was not justified. Mularoni v. Bing, 2001 MT 215, 306 M 405, 34 P3d 497 (2001).

When Recovery of Deposition Expenses Allowed — Use of Deposition at Trial Required: The Bings argued that their costs associated with deposing Mularoni were associated with expenses related to a motion to compel discovery and were thus recoverable under this rule. The District Court declined to award deposition costs, and the Bings appealed. Pursuant to 25-10-201, a party to whom costs are awarded is entitled to include the costs of taking depositions. However, the Supreme Court has allowed deposition costs only in limited circumstances—when the deposition was relied on by the District Court or used in a trial setting as evidence or for impeachment or when the deposition is filed with the District Court and used by the court in a dispositive summary judgment motion. Deposition costs are not allowed when the purpose of the deposition is merely to assist the requesting party in compiling its case and is taken only for the convenience of counsel. A deposition that is not used at trial is considered to be for the convenience of counsel. In the present case, the deposition was not used at trial, nor was it used by the District Court in its ruling on the motion to compel, which was not a dispositive motion. Thus, the District Court did not err in declining to award deposition costs to the Bings. Mularoni v. Bing, 2001 MT 215, 306 M 405, 34 P3d 497 (2001). See also Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997).

Concealing Information Showing Liability — Misleading Opponent About What Information Contained: Default judgment was proper against defendant who failed to answer interrogatories concerning the scope of defendant's electrical work at the site of an explosion occurring when gasoline fumes in a manhole on top of an underground tank were ignited by a spark created when a relay switch was thrown. The concealment of information for over 3 ½ years after the first service of interrogatories was willful and in bad faith. Defendant claimed that it did no work on the wiring in question, but documents finally discovered revealed that it had. Plaintiff discovered the concealed information just days before trial and was prejudiced by defendant's tactics. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Test for Review of Sanction Imposing Default Judgment: A trial court's imposition of a default judgment sanction under this rule is reviewed under the abuse of discretion test. The question is not whether the reviewing court agrees with the trial court, but rather whether, in view of all the circumstances, the trial court, in the exercise of its discretion, acted arbitrarily without the employment of conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason, ignoring recognized principles, resulting in substantial injustice. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Test for Review of Sanctions: The imposition of sanctions for failure to comply with discovery is regarded with favor, and the price for dishonesty must be made unbearable to thwart the inevitable temptation that zealous advocacy inspires. The trial judge is in the best position to know whether a party callously disregarded another party's rights and to determine which sanction is the most appropriate. In reviewing a trial judge's action for abuse of discretion, the Supreme Court may consider: (1) whether a sanction relates to the extent and nature of the discovery abuse; (2) the extent of the prejudice to the other party resulting from discovery abuse; and (3) whether the trial court expressly warned the offending party of the consequences of discovery abuse. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000), followed in Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006).

Criteria Used in Review of Sanction — Sanction Proper for Dilatory Tactics: The District Court accepted a judgment for damages and sanctions determined by a special master for defendant's discovery violations and tortious interference with plaintiff's right to buy a parcel of land, and defendant appealed. Under Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., a party's dilatory tactics in responding to discovery requests may result in sanctions. The Supreme Court set out the following criteria to be used in reviewing whether a sanction is an abuse of discretion or too severe: (1) whether the consequences imposed by the sanctions relate to the extent and nature of the actual discovery abuse; (2) the extent of the prejudice to the opposing party that resulted from the discovery abuse; and (3) whether the court expressly warned the abusing party of the consequences. In this case, defendant's intransigent approach to resolving the dispute satisfactorily fulfilled all three criteria, and in light of the continuous pattern of noncompliance, which resulted in the issuance of three separate compliance orders prior to the District Court's final order determining liability, there was no abuse of discretion in ordering sanctions. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in Patterson v. Dept. of Justice, 2002 MT 97, 309 M 381, 46 P3d 642 (2002), and Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Failure to Move to Compel Answer to Interrogatories or for Discovery Sanctions — Failure to Respond to Discovery Not Precluding Introduction of Evidence: After being turned down by the County Sheriff, Smith requested that the District Court grant him a permit to carry a concealed weapon. During discovery, Smith requested information from the county regarding his criminal file, but the county failed to answer the interrogatories. Nevertheless, the District Court admitted Smith's criminal file as evidence, which Smith alleged was an abuse of court discretion, contending that because the county failed to answer the interrogatories, it was precluded from using the information sought by the interrogatories at trial. The Supreme Court pointed out that there are remedies other than exclusion of the evidence for the county's omissions. Rule 33(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires a party to respond to an interrogatory by either answer or objection, but if the party fails to respond, the opposing party may move for an order to compel discovery pursuant to this rule. A party may also move for discovery sanctions under Rule 37(a), M.R.Civ.P. In this case, Smith did not move to compel an answer or move for discovery sanctions, nor was the evidence inconsistent with the information in the Sheriff's correspondence. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the criminal file, despite the county's failure to respond to Smith's discovery request. Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834, 56 St. Rep. 1318 (1999).

Interrogatories Served After Close of Discovery — Sanctions for Late Response Inappropriate: The District Court's scheduling order provided that the parties' discovery deadline was December 18, 1995, and that the deadline could not be modified without leave of court. Some 6 weeks after the deadline, plaintiff served interrogatories without leave of court. Defendant did not answer the interrogatories within 30 days, as required by Rule 33(a), M.R.Civ.P. On the first day of trial, plaintiff sought sanctions against defendant pursuant to subsection (2) of this rule and requested the court to prohibit defendant from introducing designated matters into evidence. Plaintiff admitted that the interrogatories were late, but asserted that this fact did not excuse defendant from the duty to answer or file objections. However, subsection (2) of this rule authorizes sanctions to be applied against a party that fails to serve answers or objections to interrogatories after proper service, which in this case did not occur. Defendant did not abuse discovery procedures or cause unnecessary delay, so, lacking proper service, sanctions were unwarranted. Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999).

New Trial on Damages for Employer's Failure to Disclose Files Helping Employee's Wrongful Discharge Case: In a wrongful discharge action, an employee was properly granted a new trial on the issue of damages (he had been awarded $70,000 by a jury) as a sanction against the hospital-employer, which failed to give him discovery documents relevant to and favoring the employee on issues of the hospital's liability and employee's damages. The employee was anonymously sent the documents after the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Sanction of $5,500 Against Employer for Failure to Disclose Files Showing Wrongful Discharge: The trial court, in which a wrongful discharge plaintiff was granted a $70,000 jury verdict for damages, properly sanctioned the employer by granting the plaintiff $5,500 for amounts expended for work on summary judgment and, after the verdict, on the basis that documents in the employer's files were requested by the plaintiff and not produced by the employer. The documents, which were anonymously mailed to the plaintiff after the trial, showed that the employer had planned for some time to terminate the plaintiff. The documents would have affected the damages award had they been available for the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Dismissal With Prejudice Proper Sanction For Actively Withholding Relevant Information: In a personal injury suit, the plaintiff and her attorney purposely withheld information concerning the plaintiff's prior medical history. The lower court, relying on Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., dismissed the plaintiff's case with prejudice. The Supreme Court held that the dismissal was not proper under Rule 37(b) or (d), M.R.Civ.P., but was justified under Rule 26(g), M.R.Civ.P., and therefore upheld the dismissal. Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919, 46 St. Rep. 2042 (1989). See also Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006).

Motion to Compel Not Necessary: A motion to compel is not necessary in an action under Rule 37(d). Dassori v. Roy Stanley Chevrolet Co., 224 M 178, 728 P2d 430, 43 St. Rep. 2113 (1986).

Failure to Impose Sanctions Proper — Information Requested in Interrogatories Available in Other Court Documents: Plaintiff union failed to answer some of defendants' interrogatories because the union objected to the defendants seeking discovery of the legal theories of the complaint. Defendants' motion to dismiss the action on this basis was denied by the District Court. The District Court did not err since the legal theories were readily available to the defendants in earlier documents and briefs. Local Union No. 400 v. Bosh, 220 M 304, 715 P2d 36, 43 St. Rep. 388 (1986).

Dilatory Discovery Tactics: In an action by plaintiff bank to recover certain sums of principal and interest owing on a note, the defendant debtors refused to attend their own deposition, refused to produce documents, and ignored court orders directing them to comply with requests for information. In view of the defendants' bad faith in failing to comply with rules of discovery and court orders enforcing the rules, the trial court's judgment in favor of the bank was well within the boundaries of its discretion. First Bank v. Heidema, 219 M 373, 711 P2d 1384, 43 St. Rep. 22 (1986).

Unresponsive Interrogatory Answers — Remedy — Proof Limited to Discovery and Readily Accessible Documents: Plaintiff abused the discovery process by his late filing of interrogatories and unverified, incomplete, and nonresponsive answers, among other things. As a result, the judge limited the plaintiff's proof to evidence contained in discovery documents and documents readily accessible to both parties. The judge acted properly. The trial was limited to facts disclosed as opposed to facts withheld, which is equitable since the limitation was caused by the actions of plaintiff and his attorney in responding to discovery. Vehrs v. Piquette, 210 M 386, 684 P2d 476, 41 St. Rep. 1110 (1984).

Former Rule 38. Jury trial of right

Trial De Novo Allowed in District Court Despite Failure to Request Jury Trial in Justice's Court — No Waiver of Right to Jury Trial: The District Court erred in determining that under 25-33-301, a waiver of the right to a jury trial in Justice's Court waives the right to a jury trial de novo on appeal in District Court. The court disregarded the interplay of Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P., with 25-33-301 and this rule in attempting to harmonize the statute and the rules. The language in 25-33-301, limiting appeals from Justice's Court to the pleadings filed in Justice's Court, does not limit jury trial demands in appeals from Justice's Court because jury trial demands are not pleadings. The plain meaning of Rule 81(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires that Rule 3 and this rule be given meanings that are consistent with 25-33-301 and the right to trial by jury. Thus, when a party makes a jury trial demand under this rule for a trial de novo on appeal in District Court, the action commences when the party serves and files notice of appeal pursuant to 25-33-102 and 25-33-103. In appeals from Justice's Court, jury trial demands must be made within 10 days of the filing of notice of appeal. Further, participation in a bench trial in District Court without objection does not constitute waiver of the right to a jury trial so long as a timely jury trial demand is made in District Court. Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Harrison, 1999 MT 144, 295 M 13, 983 P2d 902, 56 St. Rep. 566 (1999), following U.S. v. Calif. Mobile Home Park Management Co., 107 F3d 1374 (9th Cir. 1997), and Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998).

Denial of Demand for Jury Trial — Interlocutory Order Not Appealable: Defendants, sued to recover money due on promissory notes, did not demand a jury trial in their original answer, but after several delays and withdrawal of counsel, defendants acting pro se filed an amended answer with a request for jury trial. Upon objection by plaintiffs and examination of the pleadings, the District Court denied the demand for jury trial. The Supreme Court dismissed the defendants' appeal of the denial as premature, holding that the denial of a request for a jury trial, whether the request was timely or belated, was not a final judgment appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Such an interlocutory order may be appealable only if specifically provided for in a rule or statute. Heidema v. First Bank, 211 M 178, 682 P2d 1374, 41 St. Rep. 1291 (1984).

Former Rule 38(a). Right reserved

Right to Jury Trial — Equity Claim and Claim for Damages Tried in Single Proceeding: The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new nonjury trial, ruling that an action under Title 49, ch. 2, is equitable in nature and implies no right to a trial by jury in a federal suit under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Act). Plaintiffs contended that the only damages sought were backpay and reinstatement. The Supreme Court found that the record disclosed that plaintiffs submitted evidence of damages other than backpay and reinstatement and concluded that a claim for relief under the Act and a legal claim for damages as a result of unlawful discharge were tried in a single proceeding, each claim arising out of common fact issues. The court held that the right to a jury trial encompassed both the claims under the Act and the legal claims for damages, and that the trial judge was bound by the jury's determination of facts on all issues. The Supreme Court further held that the District Court erred in granting a new nonjury trial, and the case was remanded with instructions to reinstate the jury verdict and enter judgment accordingly. Breese v. Steele Mtn. Enterprises, Inc., 220 M 454, 716 P2d 214, 43 St. Rep. 522 (1986).

Jury Passed for Cause — Partiality Issues Waived: Defendant could not successfully argue that the jury was not fair and impartial when defendant passed the jury for cause. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

All Parties in Equity Court Entitled to Have Their Legal Claims and Counterclaims Tried by Jury: Although, in the past, the court has purported to permit a court of equity to rule on all questions in a case, the court has never held that a court sitting in equity may try those issues of fact raised by plaintiff in a legal cause of action. The modern merger of law and equity courts and the liberal joinder provisions of the Rules of Civil Procedure force reevaluation of the traditional justification for permitting an equity court to decide legal issues. Upon timely demand, all parties are entitled to have their legal claims and counterclaims tried by jury. Gray v. Billings, 213 M 6, 689 P2d 268, 41 St. Rep. 1910 (1984), followed in State ex rel. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. District Court, 267 M 1, 881 P2d 594, 51 St. Rep. 709 (1994). To the extent that Butler Bros. Dev. Co. v. Butler, 111 M 329, 108 P2d 1041 (1941), and its progeny have been interpreted to deny plaintiff a right to jury trial of his legal claims, the cases are overruled.

Right to Jury Trial — Not Applicable to Equity Cases: A June 1976 agreement between the parties provided that plaintiff would advance money for the downpayment in the purchase of real property in Billings and would receive certain benefits, including a 50% interest in the property, in return. Plaintiff was to control any contractual arrangements until defendant had contributed, by payment of the monthly installments, a sum equal to the downpayment. In 1977, prior to the equalization of contributions, plaintiff entered negotiations to sell the property. No agreement between plaintiff and defendant was reached regarding the sale, and plaintiff filed suit seeking specific performance of the agreement. Defendant's demand for a jury trial was denied and plaintiff was granted summary judgment allowing him exclusive control of contractual negotiations concerning the land for 1 year. Defendant contended he was denied his constitutional right to a jury trial. The Supreme Court, relying on decisions under the 1889 Montana Constitution and the transcripts of the 1972 Constitutional Convention, held that the power to enforce specific performance is vested solely in courts having equitable jurisdiction. The right of trial by jury does not extend to equitable actions, and the judge is not bound by any jury's findings. The District Court's denial of a jury trial was upheld. Downs v. Smyk, 200 M 334, 651 P2d 1238, 39 St. Rep. 1786 (1982).

Failure to Object Where Court Sets Trial Without Jury: The plaintiff brought an action to quiet title, or in the alternative, to obtain a decree of specific performance of an oral contract. The defendant's motion for summary judgment on the quiet title action was granted, with the court setting the remaining count for trial without jury. Because no objection was made to trial without jury and because equitable relief was being sought, the plaintiff could not claim that his right to trial by jury was denied. Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399, 39 St. Rep. 835 (1982).

Cases Prior to Rules — Effect: This rule makes it clear that the rules have not altered the substantive right to trial by jury. Therefore, cases antedating the rules have relevance in determining the existence of one's right to trial by jury. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969).

Counterclaim Not Compulsory — No Right to Jury Trial: Counterclaim was not compulsory and accordingly court did not err in denying defendant's request for a jury trial. Also, interposition of a legal issue in an equitable action gives the defendant no right to a jury trial of the case generally or of the issue raised by the counterclaim. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969). To the extent that this case has been interpreted to deny plaintiff a right to jury trial of his legal issues, it is overruled. Gray v. Billings, 213 M 6, 689 P2d 268, 41 St. Rep. 1910 (1984).

Declaratory Judgment — Right to Jury Trial: A party has a right to a jury trial on demand where the suit is for a declaratory judgment and there are triable issues of fact. Mahan v. Hardland, 147 M 78, 410 P2d 156 (1966).

Requirements of "Trial by Jury": Even though a "trial by jury" requires that all material issues of fact be submitted to and determined by the jury, this does not require that a statement of the issues as defined in the pleadings must be given. Dasinger v. Andersen, 136 M 277, 347 P2d 747 (1959).

Former Rule 38(b). Demand

Failure to Request Jury Trial in Answer to Second Amended Complaint — Waiver: Goodover initially filed an action for quiet title and declaratory judgment. In his second amended complaint, Goodover added a prayer for damages of $500 and for "such other and further relief as the court may seem [sic] appropriate". Lindey's failure to demand a jury trial in its answer to the second amended complaint constituted a waiver of the right to jury trial. Lindey's claim of lack of notice of a potentially greater damage award and argument that Goodover should have been required to amend his complaint to request larger damages, thereby giving Lindey's the opportunity to request a jury trial, were without merit. Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Denial of Demand for Jury Trial — Interlocutory Order Not Appealable: Defendants, sued to recover money due on promissory notes, did not demand a jury trial in their original answer, but after several delays and withdrawal of counsel, defendants acting pro se filed an amended answer with a request for jury trial. Upon objection by plaintiffs and examination of the pleadings, the District Court denied the demand for jury trial. The Supreme Court dismissed the defendants' appeal of the denial as premature, holding that the denial of a request for a jury trial, whether the request was timely or belated, was not a final judgment appealable under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Such an interlocutory order may be appealable only if specifically provided for in a rule or statute. Heidema v. First Bank, 211 M 178, 682 P2d 1374, 41 St. Rep. 1291 (1984).

Juvenile Delinquency Proceedings — No Waiver: Where a minor charged with being a delinquent made a demand for a jury trial on the day preceding the trial and at the opening of the trial, the demand was made in time and there was no waiver. Application of Banschbach, 133 M 312, 323 P2d 1112 (1958).

Former Rule 38(d). Waiver

Failure to Request Jury Trial in Answer to Second Amended Complaint — Waiver: Goodover initially filed an action for quiet title and declaratory judgment. In his second amended complaint, Goodover added a prayer for damages of $500 and for "such other and further relief as the court may seem [sic] appropriate". Lindey's failure to demand a jury trial in its answer to the second amended complaint constituted a waiver of the right to jury trial. Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Consent of Both Parties Required to Withdraw Demand for Jury Trial: The insurance agent made several misrepresentations concerning the insured when filling out an application for Safeco insurance. Safeco paid a $300,000 claim and then brought suit against the insurance agency and its agent. The insurance agency initially demanded a jury trial but then over the objection of Safeco was allowed to withdraw its demand for a jury trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in ordering a trial by judge. When one party has made a demand for a jury trial, the other party may rely on it. If at a later date the demanding party waives the demand, the opposing party has the right to determine whether to consent to a trial before a judge or to insist upon a jury trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court directed that judgment be entered in favor of Safeco on the issue of liability but held that the insurance agency was not entitled to a new trial because it had already had its trial. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 200 M 447, 652 P2d 1160, 39 St. Rep. 1861 (1982). See also Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999).

Former Rule 39(a). By jury

Whether Question of Fact Exists Not Question of Fact — No Right to Jury Trial Absent Evidence of Fact Question: Defendants asserted error in the District Court's denial of their request for a trial by jury, claiming that their affirmative defense constituted a breach of contract claim. However, before there was an entitlement to a jury trial, there had to be issues of fact for a jury to decide. Whether or not there is sufficient evidence to raise an issue of fact is a question of law for the court and not an issue of fact. The right of jury trial on any issue of fact presented by the pleadings is provisional, and if the evidence fails to form an issue of fact, the right of jury trial disappears. The Supreme Court cited numerous cases in holding that when, as in this case, insufficient evidence is presented to have the issue raised by an affirmative defense submitted to a jury, denial of a request for a jury trial is not prejudicial. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Snider, 247 M 508, 808 P2d 475, 48 St. Rep. 285 (1991).

Right to Jury Trial — Equity Claim and Claim for Damages Tried in Single Proceeding: The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new nonjury trial, ruling that an action under Title 49, ch. 2, is equitable in nature and implies no right to a trial by jury in a federal suit under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Act). Plaintiffs contended that the only damages sought were backpay and reinstatement. The Supreme Court found that the record disclosed that plaintiffs submitted evidence of damages other than backpay and reinstatement and concluded that a claim for relief under the Act and a legal claim for damages as a result of unlawful discharge were tried in a single proceeding, each claim arising out of common fact issues. The court held that the right to a jury trial encompassed both the claims under the Act and the legal claims for damages, and that the trial judge was bound by the jury's determination of facts on all issues. The Supreme Court further held that the District Court erred in granting a new nonjury trial, and the case was remanded with instructions to reinstate the jury verdict and enter judgment accordingly. Criminal Defendant's Right to Have Note Read to Jury: Because defendant had no right to address the jury personally, he had no right to have a note read to the jury. St. v. Armstrong, 172 M 296, 562 P2d 1129 (1977).

Legal or Equitable Case — Time of Determination of Right to Jury Trial: Where in an action to foreclose a trust deed securing a promissory note the equitable issues were not all admitted by defendant, and his answer and cross-complaint, besides setting up failure of consideration, alleged fraud and breach of contract, also asked equitable as well as legal relief, the trial court did not err in refusing a jury trial. Article III, sec. 23, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 26, 1972 Mont. Const.) applies only to those cases where right to jury trial existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Being equitable in nature, the case at bar cannot be made an action at law by raising an issue of law in the answer. The court must look to the primary right to determine jury question. Butler Bros. Dev. Co. v. Butler, 111 M 329, 108 P2d 1041 (1941).

Forfeiture of Lease — Right to Jury Trial: An action to compel the release of an oil and gas lease of record on the ground that the lessee had failed to commence drilling operations within the time fixed in the lease, by reason of which it became forfeited, and for the recovery of the statutory penalty, damages, and attorney's fees, is one of law entitling plaintiff to a jury trial. Solberg v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 70 M 177, 225 P 612 (1924), distinguished in McNamer Realty Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 76 M 332, 247 P 166 (1926).

Mixed Law and Equity — Right to Jury Trial: Where the primary purpose of an action against a corporation was to recover on promissory notes aggregating the sum of $27,000 and to enforce liability of its directors as comakers and guarantors and for failure to file the annual statements required by statute, and the only equitable relief prayed for was the foreclosure of a mortgage given by one of the directors on two town lots as security for the notes, the answers of defendants consisting of denials and counterclaims which were put in issue by reply, the defendants were entitled to a trial by jury of the strictly legal issues presented by the pleadings, and denial of such jury trial was error. Benson Stabeck Co. v. Farmers' Elevator Co. of Barber, 66 M 395, 214 P 600 (1923), distinguished in Butler Bros. Dev. Co. v. Butler, 111 M 329, 207 P2d 1041 (1941).

Issues Triable by Jury: Where the pleadings present issues of fact, prima facie each party is entitled to have a jury determine them. But, if during the trial it becomes apparent that there are no such issues in the evidence, the decision falls within the province of the court. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Statutory Jury in Equity: The long-established principles relating to the equity functions of the District Courts of this state, respecting the findings of a jury on an issue presented to it in an equitable action, are not changed by the provision of a statute to the effect that "in all cases issues of fact must be tried to a jury", so as to render the verdict of a jury in such cases binding upon the court until formally vacated. Arnold v. Sinclair, 12 M 248, 29 P 1124 (1892).

Former Rule 39(c). Advisory jury and trial by consent

New Trial — Advisory Jury Not Required: In an equity action for specific performance tried before an advisory jury, where the court granted defendant's motion for a new trial, the court was not required to order that the new trial be by jury as had the original proceedings. Waite v. Waite, 143 M 248, 389 P2d 181 (1964).

Advisory Verdict — Court Not Bound: In an equity case brought to determine the priority of water right appropriations, the court is not bound to make its decree in conformity with the verdict of the jury. Kleinschmidt v. Greiser, 14 M 484, 37 P 5 (1894).

Former Rule 40. Assignment of cases for trial

Advancing on Calendar: While the trial court may for good cause shown take up and hear a case out of its regular order, it must not be done to the prejudice of the parties. Counsel has a right to rely on a case not being called for trial until the preceding case on the calendar then in process of trial has been disposed of. Stenner v. Colorado-Montana Mines Ass'n, 116 M 261, 149 P2d 546 (1944).

Pleadings Incomplete — Case Not at Issue: When the parties have filed all their pleadings and pleading has ended, the case is at issue, but where an answer has been filed containing an affirmative defense or new matter, to which a reply has not been filed, the case is not at issue. Roush v. District Court, 101 M 166, 53 P2d 96 (1935).

Former Rule 41. Dismissal of actions

Defendants Immune From Suit — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Steele was a certified public accountant who was reported by a state attorney for the unauthorized practice of law for representing a client in a contested case before a Department of Labor and Industry hearings examiner. Another accountant who also was not authorized to practice law subsequently represented the client. Steele then filed a complaint under 42 U.S.C. 1983 against the hearings examiner and the state attorney for violation of his due process and civil rights. However, the hearings examiner and attorney were entitled to judicial immunity and quasi-judicial immunity, respectively. Therefore, the District Court did not err in dismissing Steele's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Steele v. McGregor, 1998 MT 85, 288 M 238, 956 P2d 1364, 55 St. Rep. 349 (1998).

Involuntary Dismissal of Action in Bankruptcy Estate — Substitution of Parties and Notice of Dismissal of Action Not Required: Plaintiffs filed a lender liability action against several banks after plaintiffs had filed for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. On motion of the plaintiffs' creditors, the Bankruptcy Court involuntarily converted that a proceeding from Chapter 11 to a Chapter 7 liquidation. Pursuant to federal case law, upon the conversion to a Chapter 7 proceeding, the lender liability action in District Court became an asset of the trustee in bankruptcy. The trustee and defendants in the lender liability action reached a stipulated settlement for a dismissal of that action, and plaintiffs appealed the dismissal. Citing Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Reilly, 240 M 147, 783 P2d 917 (1989), the Supreme Court held that it has no authority to substantively review issues that are appropriately before the Bankruptcy Court and that the only issue the Supreme Court could review was the propriety of a lack of notice of the dismissal to the plaintiffs. On this issue, the Supreme Court held that the trustee was not required to give notice because all of plaintiffs' interest in the state court action was transferred to the trustee and held that plaintiffs therefore lacked standing to object to the dismissal. The Supreme Court also held that the trustee was not required to substitute the bankruptcy estate as the real party in interest in the state court proceeding because Rule 25(c), M.R.Civ.P., rather than Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P., governed substitution and because under Rule 17(a), substitution was not mandatory. Reilly v. Citizens St. Bank, 251 M 155, 822 P2d 1088, 48 St. Rep. 1140 (1991).

How Consent Judgment Construed: A judgment by consent is contractual in nature, and therefore it should be construed as a written contract. The meaning of the consent judgment is to be gathered from the terms of the contract, and the judgment should not be extended beyond the clear import of the terms. First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987).

Attempt by Prosecutor to Provoke Defense Motion for Mistrial — Double Jeopardy: When a defendant moves for a mistrial and the motion is granted, the "manifest necessity" standard allowing a court to lift the double jeopardy bar to a second trial does not apply (U.S. v. Tateo, 377 US 463, 12 L Ed 2d 448, 84 S Ct 1587 (1964)). The Montana Supreme Court recognized a narrow exception to this rule, as outlined in Oreg. v. Kennedy, 456 US 667, 72 L Ed 2d 416, 102 S Ct 2083 (1982), holding that the circumstances under which a defendant may invoke the bar of double jeopardy are limited to cases "in which the conduct giving rise to the successful motion for a mistrial was intended to provoke the defendant into moving for a mistrial". In the case at bar, the District Court held and the Supreme Court affirmed that the prosecutor attempted, through a series of overreaching questions, to shift the focus of the trial from a charge of criminal sale of drugs for which there was only weak evidence to sexual crimes initially reported but later denied on cross-examination. The court found that the questions were so prejudicial that the defendant had little choice but to move for a mistrial to avoid a conviction for crimes with which he had not been charged. St. v. Laster, 223 M 152, 724 P2d 721, 43 St. Rep. 1614 (1986).

Substitution of Corporation Rather Than Dismissal of Employee: A suit was brought against several defendants, including "Robert Payne and James Payne, d/b/a Ponderosa Realty". At the time of trial it was disclosed that Ponderosa Realty was a corporation. The parties stipulated that Ponderosa Realty was a proper party and dismissed the suit against the two Paynes. At the end of the plaintiffs' case, Ponderosa Realty moved to dismiss, arguing that the dismissal of the two Paynes, in effect, was a dismissal of Ponderosa Realty, since the corporation could only be liable through the actions of its employees or agents. The court rejected the argument, saying that what occurred was not a substantive dismissal with prejudice of an agent or employee but rather the substitution of a proper party before the court. White v. Fidelity Real Estate, 196 M 156, 638 P2d 1053, 39 St. Rep. 1 (1982).

Former Rule 41(a). Voluntary dismissal — effect thereof

Date of Rendition of Judgment Controlling, Not Date of Filing Complaint — Res Judicata — Effect of Voluntary Dismissal: The plaintiffs filed two complaints within a week of each other that both challenged the county's denial of their request for a zoning change. The complaints named the same parties and addressed the same issues. Ultimately, the plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed the later-filed action with prejudice and the defendants amended their answer to the other complaint to include res judicata as an affirmative defense. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants, concluding that the plaintiffs' claims were barred under res judicata. The court held that the voluntary dismissal of the later-filed case constituted a final judgment that barred the claims set forth in the earlier-filed complaint. Touris v. Flathead County, 2011 MT 165, 361 Mont. 172, 258 P.3d 1.

Second Suit Based on Same Facts as Case Dismissed With Prejudice Properly Dismissed as Res Judicata: While a first employment termination claim was pending, Xu filed another claim based on the same facts. The first claim was ultimately dismissed with prejudice for Xu's failure to comply with discovery, and the District Court then summarily dismissed the second case based on res judicata and collateral estoppel. Xu appealed on grounds that it was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss the second case because the second case contained a new claim of defamation and because there was no final adjudication on the merits of the first claim. The Supreme Court disagreed. Res judicata applied not only to the issues that were raised in the first claim, but also to issues that could or should have been raised in the first litigation. Collateral estoppel applied because a dismissal with prejudice constituted an adjudication on the merits. Summary dismissal of the second case was therefore affirmed. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005). See also Touris v. Flathead County, 2011 MT 165, 361 Mont. 172, 258 P.3d 1.

Modification of Child Support Not Properly Before Trial Court Following Withdrawal of Motion — No Error in Not Considering Modification: As part of an action for contempt of court, the wife moved for a modification of child support but subsequently withdrew the motion before the husband filed a response. The husband did not object to the withdrawal and did not file an independent motion to modify support. When the contempt action came up for hearing, the husband argued that he had experienced a substantial change of circumstances and requested permission to present evidence regarding child support, despite the fact that the wife's motion to consider the issue had been withdrawn. The husband later asserted that the District Court erred in not considering modification of support. The Supreme Court disagreed. A plaintiff may, with proper notice, withdraw a child support modification motion, and absent another specific independent motion for modification, no error is ascribed to the trial court for failing to consider an issue not properly before it. In re Marriage of Crone, 2003 MT 238, 317 M 256, 77 P3d 167 (2003).

Failure to Serve Summons Within Three Years Requiring Dismissal With Prejudice of Same Federal Court Action if Plaintiff Voluntarily Dismisses State Court Action After Three Years: The U.S. District Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the question of whether a plaintiff's failure to serve summons within 3 years as required under former Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. (repealed and replaced with Rule 4E, M.R.Civ.P.), required dismissal with prejudice of the same claim in federal court upon motion of the defendant if the plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the state court action after 3 years pursuant to this rule. In determining which rule prevailed under the facts of the present case, the Supreme Court noted that the plain language of subsection (1) of this rule allows a plaintiff to dismiss without prejudice prior to an appearance by a defendant. However, if a plaintiff was allowed to dismiss a case without prejudice after the 3-year time period for service of summons in former Rule 41(e) had run, then Rule 41(e) would be meaningless and in conflict with the purpose of that rule to require diligent prosecution, because an inactive plaintiff would be thus rewarded by doing nothing for over 3 years even though that plaintiff was evidently pursuing a complaint. Former Rule 41(e) allowed a defendant to know that when a complaint was brought but service of summons was not accomplished within 3 years, the complaint would be dismissed with prejudice. Therefore, if a plaintiff moves to dismiss a complaint without prejudice under subsection (1) of this rule, but does so after the 3-year time period in former Rule 41(e) has passed, the plaintiff's dismissal is with prejudice and must be given res judicata effect. Rich v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 51, 314 M 338, 66 P3d 274 (2003). See also First Call, Inc. v. Capitol Answering Serv., Inc., 271 M 425, 898 P2d 96 (1995).

Absence of Counterclaims — Voluntary Dismissal Proper: Plaintiff filed an action to collect a bill for repair of defendant's pickup truck. The action was dismissed on plaintiff's motion after the repair bill was paid. Defendant appealed on 15 different issues, including a request for sanctions. A review of the District Court file did not reveal any document that could be considered as a counterclaim for purposes of preventing dismissal under this rule. the documents seemed to indicate an intent on the part of defendant to file counterclaims in the future, but did not establish a pleaded counterclaim for purposes of notice to plaintiff that a counterclaim had been filed. Absent the filing of counterclaims, the District Court did not err in dismissing the complaint on grounds that the amount due had been paid. Jim & Tracy's Alignment, Inc. v. Smith, 1998 MT 20, 290 M 368, 966 P2d 731, 55 St. Rep. 865 (1998).

Concurrent State-Tribal Court Jurisdiction — Absence of Special Tribal Issues — No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Motion to Remand to Tribal Court: Plaintiffs were enrolled Blackfeet Tribe members, and the alleged negligence took place on tribal land. The action was initiated in state court. Plaintiffs maintained significant control of the action from the time that they initiated it and chose not to seek tribal jurisdiction until nearly 4 years after its commencement and after considerable discovery and multiple proceedings occurred, at which time their motion to dismiss and remand to tribal court was denied. Because the action did not involve any special issues of Blackfeet sovereignty or issues that required the unique expertise of the tribal court, the state court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to dismiss and remand. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997), following Petritz v. Albertson's, Inc., 187 M 102, 608 P2d 1089 (1980).

Costs and Fees for Voluntary Dismissal — Award Not Proper Under Subsection (1): Plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the case under subsection (1) of this rule before an answer or a summary judgment motion was filed by defendant. It was error for the District Court to award defendant costs for substantial discovery made before dismissal. The District Court erroneously relied on discretionary authority under subsection (2) of this rule to award costs when dismissal was made under that subsection. USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Attorney Fees Not Chargeable After Agreement to Stipulation When No Further Work Necessary: An attorney was paid to accompany clients to a meeting to determine clients' custodial rights in their grandson. At the meeting, an agreement was reached to allow transfer of custody by stipulation, with the documentation to be drawn up by the father's attorney. The clients assumed the agreement resolved the differences between the parties and that no further work needed to be done. However, the clients' attorney refused to enter into any stipulation, continued to prepare documents and do research on behalf of the clients, and initiated a suit for fees and costs for his work after the meeting. The District Court properly dismissed the suit after finding substantial evidence to support the contention that continuing actions by the attorney were unnecessary after the meeting and were therefore unchargeable. Smith v. Fladstol, 248 M 18, 807 P2d 1361, 48 St. Rep. 301 (1991).

Effect of Dismissal With Prejudice of Defendant Employee on Liability of Defendant Employer: The rule that dismissal of a defendant "with prejudice" does not release other defendants who may be liable under respondeat superior, unless the document intends to do so, or the payment is full compensation, or the release expressly so provides, is the better rule. To the extent it is consistent, the Supreme Court overruled State ex rel. Havre v. District Court, 187 M 181, 609 P2d 275, 37 St. Rep. 552 (1980). The force of this ruling applies to this case and to judgments of dismissal entered after the date of this decision. Cantrell v. Henderson, 221 M 201, 718 P2d 318, 43 St. Rep. 745 (1986).

Motion by Plaintiff Did Not Specify Nature of Dismissal — Dismissal With Prejudice Not Erroneous: The District Court did not err in dismissing driver of drilling truck with prejudice. Plaintiffs, in a claim for injuries allegedly caused by driver's negligence, moved for dismissal of driver without specifying whether dismissal should be with or without prejudice. Since that issue was left to the discretion of the trial court in accordance with the provisions of Rule 41(a)(2), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Plaintiffs did not prove facts requiring a limitation upon the court's discretion. Cantrell v. Henderson, 221 M 201, 718 P2d 318, 43 St. Rep. 745 (1986).

Effect of Dismissal on Nonlitigated Pending Claim:
Generally, a compromise agreement, when the basis for a final judgment, operates as a merger and bar of all preexisting claims and causes of action. Webb v. First Nat'l Bank of Hinsdale, 219 M 160, 711 P2d 1352, 42 St. Rep. 1919 (1985), followed in Robinson v. First Sec. Bank of Big Timber, 224 M 138, 728 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 2080 (1986).

At a time when appellant owed First National Bank money, First National refused to lend appellant any more money, so appellant borrowed money from First State Bank of Malta. With the loan from First State Bank of Malta, appellant bought cattle, some of which he later sold to Glasgow Livestock. First National Bank then asked Glasgow Livestock to place First National's name on the check along with those of appellant, First State Bank of Malta, and another bank. First National Bank eventually brought a collection action against appellant. Appellant consulted a lawyer about the possibility of suing First National for wrongfully inducing Glasgow Livestock to place the bank's name on the check. After being informed by the lawyer that a suit of this type in appellant's case would have no merit, appellant settled the collection action and it was dismissed with prejudice. Two years later, after hiring a new lawyer, appellant filed an action against First National Bank alleging tortious interference with the contract. The District Court granted the bank's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that appellant had benefited from the settlement and therefore dismissal with prejudice concluded the preexisting claims between the parties. Webb v. First Nat'l Bank of Hinsdale, 219 M 160, 711 P2d 1352, 42 St. Rep. 1919 (1985).

Notice of Dismissal by Former Guardian Ad Litem Ineffective: A notice of dismissal of an action by the person who originally filed the action as guardian ad litem but who was subsequently removed as guardian ad litem is completely ineffective. That person is not an individual party to the action, nor is he acting in a representative capacity; thus, the action was not "dismissed by the plaintiff" or at "the plaintiff's instance" as required by this rule. State ex rel. Perman v. District Court, 213 M 130, 690 P2d 419, 41 St. Rep. 2002 (1984).

Stipulation of Dismissal of Action Against Police Officer — Application to City and County Under "Respondeat Superior" Doctrine: A man fleeing from police officers was shot by one of them. The man later entered into a stipulation for dismissal with prejudice of the claim against the officer, but later the city and county, also defendants in the suit, were denied their motions for dismissal with prejudice. The Montana Supreme Court held that a stipulation of dismissal with prejudice of a defendant is tantamount to a judgment on the merits, and accordingly such a dismissal with prejudice is res judicata as to every issue reasonably raised by the pleadings. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer defendant's liability is vicarious or derivative and does not arise until an employee acts negligently within the scope of his employment. A dismissal with prejudice of a claim against an employee is equivalent to a finding that the employee was not negligent. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, such a dismissal of an employee operates to exonerate the employer. The Supreme Court will look at the dismissal with prejudice on its face, and will not look behind the words "with prejudice". State ex rel. Havre v. District Court, 187 M 181, 609 P2d 275 (1980), overruled to the extent inconsistent with Cantrell v. Henderson, 221 M 201, 718 P2d 318, 43 St. Rep. 745 (1986), and followed in First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987).

Dismissal by Court Order — Attorney Fees as Curative of Prejudice: Due to the lateness of plaintiff's motion and the extensive preparation on the part of the defense, the award of $85 in attorney fees and costs imposed by the trial court in order to cure prejudice incurred by the defense was unreasonable. In view of the documents and exhibits submitted in the record, a more reasonable award must be determined. Petritz v. Albertsons, Inc., 187 M 102, 608 P2d 1089 (1980), distinguished in Teal, Inc. v. Wiedrich, 259 M 323, 856 P2d 543, 50 St. Rep. 816 (1993), and USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Dismissal by Court Order — Prejudice to Defendant — Curative Conditions: In determining whether a trial court abused its discretion in granting plaintiff's motion for dismissal, the extent to which the defendant was prejudiced and whether, if substantial prejudice did occur, the defendant could have been made reasonably whole by the imposition of curative conditions attached to the dismissal, weigh heavily. Petritz v. Albertsons, Inc., 187 M 102, 608 P2d 1089 (1980), distinguished in USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Federal Interpretations Persuasive: The interpretations under Rule 41(a)(2), Fed.R.Civ.P., have persuasive application to an interpretation of the state rule because of the identical language. Petritz v. Albertsons, Inc., 187 M 102, 608 P2d 1089 (1980), distinguished in USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Appeal From Dismissal: Order granting motion to dismiss is an appealable order, but the right to appeal is lost after the deadline passes, and cannot be revived 17 months later by a motion for appeal and reinstatement of the case. Beach v. Destination Enterprises, Inc., 165 M 152, 526 P2d 1382 (1974).

Dismissal as Affecting Counterclaim — Dismissal Properly Granted: Motion to dismiss complaint was properly granted where counterclaiming defendant did not object to dismissal, where trial was in fact had on defendant's counterclaim, and where defendant in fact obtained judgment against plaintiff on counterclaim. Ratcliff v. Murphy, 150 M 31, 430 P2d 627 (1967).

Nonprejudicial Dismissal: All that is necessary to effectuate a dismissal of complaint by plaintiff before trial is to file a praecipe for dismissal and a formal entry of his dismissal by the clerk in his register. However, an order of court entered in the minutes on motion of plaintiff may accomplish the same result. The dismissal is without prejudice unless, wishing to finally end the matter, he declares that dismissal is with prejudice. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. St. Bank of Townsend, 103 M 260, 62 P2d 677 (1936).

Judgment on Appeal Preventing Dismissal: After Supreme Court had reviewed the cause on supervisory control and directed the trial court to annul its judgment, permit the parties to file further pleadings, hear additional testimony, and revise its findings, which directions the court proceeded to obey when the motion to dismiss was made, the plaintiff was not entitled to a dismissal. State ex rel. Butte-Los Angeles Min. Co. v. District Court, 103 M 140, 61 P2d 828 (1936).

Attorney Fees Payable on Dismissal: Defendant in a suit to foreclose chattel mortgage was entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee upon dismissal of cause by plaintiff before trial, 30-9-511 (now repealed), which provides for attorney fees, being reciprocal and therefore applicable to plaintiff and defendant. Graham v. Superior Mines, 100 M 427, 49 P2d 443 (1935), distinguished in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Motion for Dismissal: While the usual procedure for plaintiff to obtain a dismissal is the filing of a praecipe for dismissal and direction to the clerk to enter it on the register of actions, the same result may be reached by a motion for dismissal and having the order entered on the register. Graham v. Superior Mines, 100 M 427, 49 P2d 443 (1935).

Counsel Dismissing: The provision authorizing dismissal of an action at any time before trial "by the plaintiff himself", meant the plaintiff through his counsel, unless he appears in person and has no counsel. Barbarich v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. Ry., 92 M 1, 9 P2d 797 (1932).

Motion Preventing Dismissal: Where a motion for a judgment on the pleadings has been made by defendant on plaintiff's failure to reply to an answer setting up new matter, which motion has been argued and submitted to the court for decision, the application of plaintiff for dismissal of his action without prejudice comes too late. State ex rel. Mont. Cent. Ry. v. District Court, 32 M 37, 79 P 546 (1905), distinguished in St. v. District Court, 102 M 503, 59 P2d 45 (1936) and Union Bank & Trust Co. v. St. Bank of Townsend, 103 M 260, 62 P2d 677 (1936).

Order Not Judgment of Dismissal: The mere entry in the minutes of the court of an order that an action "is dismissed without prejudice, as per praecipe filed" by plaintiff, is not a final judgment from which an appeal lies, but is simply an order upon which a judgment of dismissal and for costs could have been entered. State ex rel. Mont. Cent. Ry. v. District Court, 32 M 37, 79 P 546 (1905).

No Jurisdiction After Dismissal: A plaintiff may at any time before trial file a praecipe with the clerk for the dismissal of the action and direct the clerk to enter dismissal on the register of actions, and when such acts have been performed the case is dismissed and has passed entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the court, except for the purpose of entering a judgment for costs in favor of the defendant if the defendant so demands. Miller v. N. Pac. Ry., 30 M 289, 76 P 691 (1904), followed in Dew v. Dower, 269 M 286, 888 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1388 (1994).

Payment of Costs Not Prerequisite: The payment of defendant's costs is not a prerequisite to the exercise of plaintiff's right to dismiss the action. Miller v. N. Pac. Ry., 30 M 289, 76 P 691 (1904), overruling State ex rel. Cornue v. Lindsay, 24 M 352, 61 P 883 (1900).

Notation of Stipulation Not Appealable: An entry noting the filing of an agreement to dismiss is not a dismissal from which an appeal can be taken. Kinman v. Scheuer, 30 M 73, 75 P 690 (1904).

Affirmative Relief Sought by Defendant — Effect on Dismissal: A plaintiff may dismiss or discontinue an action where no judgment other than for costs can be recovered against him by the defendant, but when under the pleadings and evidence relevant thereto some other judgment may be recovered, the plaintiff will not be permitted, as of course, to dismiss or discontinue. State ex rel. Cornue v. Lindsay, 24 M 352, 61 P 883 (1900).

Partition Action — Dismissal Not Available: Plaintiff in a partition suit could not dismiss his action after answer filed setting up defendant's interests in lands in question, since such answer sought affirmative relief. State ex rel. Cornue v. Lindsay, 24 M 352, 61 P 883 (1900).

GENERAL

Dismissal of Complaint With Prejudice Unwarranted When Delay Reasonable and No Prejudice Shown: The District Court set a scheduling conference, but plaintiff's counsel did not attend because of a computer problem. The District Court then dismissed the complaint with prejudice and denied a motion to reopen the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, applying the factors in Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 M 1, 798 P2d 1011 (1990), and Hobble-Diamond Cattle Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531 (1995), to determine whether the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the action for failure to prosecute. In this case, plaintiff's delay in prosecuting the case was reasonable, and defendant suffered no actual prejudice, so the District Court abused its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. Vermeer of Wash., Inc. v. Jones, 2004 MT 77, 320 M 435, 87 P3d 516 (2004), distinguishing E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931 (1997).

Defendants Immune From Suit — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Steele was a certified public accountant who was reported by a state attorney for the unauthorized practice of law for representing a client in a contested case before a Department of Labor and Industry hearings examiner. Another accountant who also was not authorized to practice law subsequently represented the client. Steele then filed a complaint under 42 U.S.C. 1983 against the hearings examiner and the state attorney for violation of his due process and civil rights. However, the hearings examiner and attorney were entitled to judicial immunity and quasi-judicial immunity, respectively. Therefore, the District Court did not err in dismissing Steele's complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Steele v. McGregor, 1998 MT 85, 288 M 238, 956 P2d 1364, 55 St. Rep. 349 (1998).

Failure to Replead in Accordance With Rules — Dismissal With Prejudice Warranted — Exhaustion of All Sanctions Not Required: After a contract action against Nystroms was dismissed, Nystroms brought an action against the plaintiffs and their counsel, consisting of 76 paragraphs in 26 pages, alleging malicious fraudulent prosecution, intentional abuse of process, and unlawful intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court determined that the complaint was vindictive, argumentative, and repetitive and directed Nystroms to replead in accordance to Rules 8 and 12, M.R.Civ.P. Nystroms then filed an amended complaint of 130 paragraphs in 43 pages including previous allegations and adding allegations of interference with business relations and conspiracy. The District Court dismissed with prejudice under this rule for failure to comply with the court's order. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that even though there may have been other less severe remedies available to the District Court, that court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing the complaint with prejudice. The Nystroms' counsel had warning that failure to replead in accordance with the Rules of Civil Procedure could result in dismissal. The District Court could have reasonably concluded that there was no other adequate remedy available to the District Court and the defendant under the circumstances. Nystrom v. Melcher, 262 M 151, 864 P2d 754, 50 St. Rep. 1488 (1993).

Attempt by Prosecutor to Provoke Defense Motion for Mistrial — Double Jeopardy: When a defendant moves for a mistrial and the motion is granted, the "manifest necessity" standard allowing a court to lift the double jeopardy bar to a second trial does not apply (U.S. v. Tateo, 377 US 463, 12 L Ed 2d 448, 84 S Ct 1587 (1964)). The Montana Supreme Court recognized a narrow exception to this rule, as outlined in Oreg. v. Kennedy, 456 US 667, 72 L Ed 2d 416, 102 S Ct 2083 (1982), holding that the circumstances under which a defendant may invoke the bar of double jeopardy are limited to cases "in which the conduct giving rise to the successful motion for a mistrial was intended to provoke the defendant into moving for a mistrial". In the case at bar, the District Court held and the Supreme Court affirmed that the prosecutor attempted, through a series of overreaching questions, to shift the focus of the trial from a charge of criminal sale of drugs for which there was only weak evidence to sexual crimes initially reported but later denied on cross-examination. The court found that the questions were so prejudicial that the defendant had little choice but to move for a mistrial to avoid a conviction for crimes with which he had not been charged. St. v. Laster, 223 M 152, 724 P2d 721, 43 St. Rep. 1614 (1986).

Findings and Conclusions Sufficient:

A Workers' Compensation Court order that included a provision stating, "The evidence does not establish that claimant is entitled to further benefits now [sic] [nor?] that the claimant's benefits were wrongfully terminated" is in compliance with this rule since it meets the test set forth in Mondakota Gas Co. v. Becker, 151 M 513, 445 P2d 745 (1968), and Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978). Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985).

Lower court ruling that "no cause of action or claim exists or has been proven" and "the same is hereby dismissed" was sufficient compliance with the rules despite plaintiff's contention that findings of fact and conclusions of law did not meet requirements of rules. Mondakota Gas Co. v. Becker, 151 M 513, 445 P2d 745 (1968).

Procedural Requirements of Workers' Compensation Court Order: The Supreme Court upheld a Workers' Compensation Court order that complied with the substance of Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), but not with the Rule's formal technical requirements. The Supreme Court reasoned that the primary purpose of the Rule's requirement is that of notice for res judicata, estoppel, and appeal and that it is not proper to require an administrative tribunal to conform strictly to technical requirements of the rules of practice. Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985).

Suit for Wrongfully Honoring Checks — Relevance of Evidence and Claims: Plaintiff depositor's partner induced bank to disregard account signature card requiring signature of each partner on a check and to issue a card allowing the partner to make withdrawals on his signature alone. The partner did so, and the depositor sued the bank. The court should not have excluded bank's offered evidence that the partner told bank he had authority to change the card, testimony of the partner, a letter from partner to the bank on this point, and that portion of the partnership agreement authorizing the partner to write checks. However, the court properly refused to dismiss the complaint on the asserted ground that the partnership agreement authorized the bank's action, because a jury could find the bank unauthorized to act as it did. The court also properly refused to dismiss on the asserted ground that the cause of action was a partnership asset, because depositor could show it was not, particularly when the account was opened and the original signature card issued prior to the formation of the partnership. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Motion to Dismiss — Appeal of Denial of Motion Waived: After the plaintiff had rested her case in an action to increase the amount of child support, the defendant made a motion under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., for dismissal upon the ground that the plaintiff failed to make a showing of changed circumstances so substantial and continuing as to make the terms of the child support previously granted unconscionable. The motion was denied, and the defendant then presented his case. By proceeding to offer evidence, the defendant waived any right of appeal as to the denial of his motion to dismiss. If the defendant wished to challenge the decision, his avenue for doing so was to refuse to offer evidence, accept a judgment for plaintiff, and appeal it on the ground that plaintiff's evidence was insufficient. Nicolai v. Nicolai, 193 M 203, 631 P2d 300, 38 St. Rep. 1100 (1981).

Insufficient Complaint: A complaint should not be dismissed for insufficiency unless it appears for certain that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any set of facts that could be proven to support the claim. Varco-Pruden v. Nelson, 181 M 252, 593 P2d 48 (1979).

Ruling on Motion — When: A District Court must rule on a motion to dismiss when made at the close of plaintiff's evidence or reserve its ruling until the close of all evidence, but a specific ruling must be made prior to final decision of the case; however, in this case failure to do so was harmless error. Brown v. Webb, 173 M 275, 567 P2d 450 (1977).

Motion to Dismiss in Jury Trial — Directed Verdict Improperly Given: When a motion to dismiss was inadvertently granted in a jury trial, but both parties recognized the error and treated it as a motion for directed verdict, then the Supreme Court utilized rules for granting a motion for directed verdict in its review. In this case the District Court erred since the evidence clearly presents questions of fact and precludes judgment as a matter of law. Sant v. Baril, 173 M 14, 566 P2d 48 (1977).

Appeal From Dismissal — Burden of Proof: On appeal from dismissal for failure of proof, reviewing court must view evidence in light most favorable to plaintiff, but this does not relieve plaintiff of burden of producing evidence in support of each element essential to recovery. Nixon v. Huttinga, 163 M 499, 518 P2d 263 (1974).

Real Party in Interest — Effect of Assignment of Chose in Action: Court's order denying motion to dismiss when plaintiff had irrevocably assigned his chose in action was without foundation in law and an abuse of discretion. Plaintiff was not real party in interest. State ex rel. Cominco Am., Inc. v. District Court, 147 M 412, 412 P2d 577 (1966).

Amendment After Appeal Dismissing Pleadings: A party may not amend pleadings when appellate court affirmed their dismissal unless the appellate court permits amendment. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Relationship Between Rules 12(b) and 41(b): Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., has no application to a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Adverse Possession — Motion Improperly Denied: Defendants' motion to dismiss should have been granted. Court erred in its denial of motion to dismiss claim of adverse possession. Vennes v. Nollmeyer, 144 M 43, 394 P2d 178 (1964).

Previous Judgment for Codefendant as Bar to Present Action: Where in a prior action motion of dismissal was granted as to defendant and judgment was entered on jury's verdict for codefendant, the judgment on the merits in favor of codefendant was a bar to present action against defendant in whose favor the dismissal was granted. Willoughby v. Flem, 158 F. Supp. 258 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Federal Determination of State Dismissal: In civil action in federal District Court the federal court would not go behind a judgment of dismissal entered in state court and declare that judgment to be without prejudice where both the state court minutes and judgment expressly stated that the judgment was on the merits. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Judgment on Merits as Res Judicata: A judgment of dismissal, which expressly declares on its face that it was rendered on the merits, must be given that effect in a plea of res judicata. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Order of Dismissal as Judgment: In proceedings in Montana state court where in open court the court granted defendant's "motion to have the case dismissed with prejudice, on its merits", and the clerk recorded this action in the court minutes, the order so entered was a judgment. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Reconsideration of Motion for Nonsuit: The District Court may, after erroneously overruling defendant's motion for nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) and hearing the testimony of defendant, reverse its former ruling and sustain the motion before submission of the case to the jury. School District v. Pribyl, 82 M 295, 267 P 289 (1928).

Directed Verdict of Nonsuit Appropriate: When the evidence on the part of the plaintiff does not tend to establish the cause of action stated in the complaint, the court may direct a verdict or take the case from the jury and enter a judgment of nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.). Whether the court pursues one course or the other the result is the same, for though the court directs the return of a formal verdict the result is nothing more than a determination of the case by the court, the jury performing no other office than that of giving form to the court's conclusion. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910); McKay v. Mont. Union Ry., 13 M 15, 31 P 999 (1892).

FAILURE TO PROSECUTE

Reasonable Accommodation of Incarcerated Plaintiff's Opportunity to Prosecute Claim — Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute Affirmed: Following remand of Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2001 MT 160, 306 M 102, 30 P3d 357 (2001), the District Court gave Hauschulz, who was incarcerated out of state, about 1 ½ years to obtain counsel and participate in the proceedings, but Hauschulz was unable to specify when he would be able to prosecute the claim. The District Court subsequently dismissed Hauschulz's claim for failure to prosecute, and Hauschulz appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that although incarceration undoubtedly restricts one's ability to exercise civil liberties, it does not give rise to a right to an indefinite postponement of civil proceedings, particularly over the objection of the other party. Applying the factors in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374 (1993), the Supreme Court found no abuse of the District Court's discretion in balancing the competing public policy interests when dismissing Hauschulz's claim with prejudice. Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2005 MT 189, 328 M 95, 117 P3d 908 (2005).

Party Misled by Attorney's Actions — Extraordinary Circumstances Warranting Relief Under Rule: The trial court granted defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute under this rule. Nearly 13 months later, plaintiffs moved to set aside the dismissal order pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., because their attorney had failed to make them aware that the case had been dismissed. Rule 60(b) is an exception to the doctrine of finality of judgments. In the case of an attorney's mistake, inadvertence, misconduct, or neglect, either Rule 60(b)(1) or 60(b)(6) may be applicable, depending on the facts and the nature and seriousness of the mistake, inadvertence, misconduct, or neglect involved. Under ordinary circumstances, subsection (1) will apply. However, when the moving party can meet the higher burden of demonstrating extraordinary circumstances, gross neglect, or actual misconduct and of demonstrating that the client was blameless and acted to set aside the default within a reasonable time, then subsection (6) is available. In this case, plaintiffs' former attorney intentionally misled them into believing that their case was proceeding and concealed the fact that the case had been dismissed. Conduct of such an egregious nature falls within the "any other reason" clause of subsection (6). The District Court properly granted plaintiffs' motion to set aside the default judgment, and because subsection (6) applied, the motion was considered reasonably timely even though filed 13 months after judgment. Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996), following In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726 (1986), and followed in Bahm v. Southworth, 2000 MT 244, 301 M 434, 10 P3d 99, 57 St. Rep. 1030 (2000).

Time of Lack of Prosecution — Westland Factors Considered — Alternate Sanctions: Hobble-Diamond Cattle, Co. purchased a pivotal irrigation system from Triangle Irrigation Co. in 1983 and filed an action in 1986, alleging that certain pivots were either defective or improperly installed. After a bench trial in 1989, Hobble-Diamond appealed, and remittitur was issued in 1991. Thereafter, Hobble-Diamond moved to substitute the judge, and Triangle then moved to substitute the substituted judge. Counsel for Hobble-Diamond was allowed to withdraw in 1992, and a status conference was scheduled for 1993, but never occurred. In May of 1994, Triangle moved to dismiss for failure to prosecute and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court analyzed the factors discussed in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374 (1993), and noted that the District Court was incorrect in using the total lapse of time since 1983 as a starting point and was incorrect in finding a total lack of activity by Hobble-Diamond since remittitur. Because no actual prejudice to Triangle was established during the proper time period (the 1 year that elapsed between the aborted 1993 conference and the filing of the motion pursuant to this rule), it was important for the District Court to analyze the "availability of alternate sanctions" and "warning" factors discussed in Westland. The Supreme Court held that availability of other sanctions and failure to warn mandated reversal of the dismissal. Hobble-Diamond Cattle, Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531, 52 St. Rep. 596 (1995), followed in Pool v. Butte Pre-Release Center, Inc., 283 M 287, 939 P2d 1011, 54 St. Rep. 603 (1997), and distinguished in McKenzie v. Scheeler, 285 M 500, 949 P2d 1168, 54 St. Rep. 1277 (1997).

Case at Issue — Dismissal Improper: The lower court dismissed the plaintiff's case for failure to prosecute. The Supreme Court reversed, pointing out that during the period of inactivity of court proceedings, the parties had been engaged in settlement negotiations. The Supreme Court also noted that the plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment in response to the motion to dismiss and that therefore another remedy, rather than dismissal, was available to determine the legal issues involved. Doug Johns Real Estate, Inc. v. Banta, 246 M 295, 805 P2d 1301, 47 St. Rep. 2036 (1990), distinguished in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374, 50 St. Rep. 857 (1993), which was followed in Hobble-Diamond Cattle, Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531, 52 St. Rep. 596 (1995). Hobble-Diamond was followed in Pool v. Butte Pre-Release Center, Inc., 283 M 287, 939 P2d 1011, 54 St. Rep. 603 (1997).

Abuse of Discretion — Dismissal Reversed — Factors to Be Considered: When there had been a delay of only 2½ years and there had been no order or other warning from the court to proceed more diligently, it was abuse of the court's discretion to dismiss plaintiff's complaint for failure to prosecute. The elements the Supreme Court will consider when determining whether a District Court has abused its discretion by dismissing an action for failure to prosecute are: (1) plaintiff's diligence in prosecuting his claims; (2) the prejudice to the defense caused by plaintiff's delay; (3) the availability of alternate sanctions; and (4) the existence of a warning to plaintiff that his case is in danger of dismissal. These elements will be considered in light of the competing concerns of plaintiff's right to a hearing on the merits, the trial court's need to manage its docket, and the general policy in favor of prompt disposition of lawsuits. Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 M 1, 798 P2d 1011, 47 St. Rep. 1795 (1990), followed in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374, 50 St. Rep. 857 (1993), which as followed in Hobble-Diamond Cattle, Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531, 52 St. Rep. 596 (1995). Becky was also followed in DeJana v. Oleson, 264 M 62, 869 P2d 785, 51 St. Rep. 147 (1994). Hobble-Diamond was followed in Pool v. Butte Pre-Release Center, Inc., 283 M 287, 939 P2d 1011, 54 St. Rep. 603 (1997).

Dismissal Reversed — Lack of Prejudice to Defendant: When the only prejudice defendants alleged was that they were forced to list the lawsuit as a contingent liability on their financial statements and when plaintiffs proffered a reasonable excuse for their delay in prosecuting the lawsuit, it was reversible error for the District Court to dismiss plaintiffs' complaint for failure to prosecute. Becky v. Norwest Bank Dillon, N.A., 245 M 1, 798 P2d 1011, 47 St. Rep. 1795 (1990).

No Basis for Discretionary Dismissal After Motion Withdrawn — Mistake or Inadvertence in Involuntary Dismissal: In a wrongful discharge action, petitioner filed a complaint on October 24, 1985, and on December 12, 1986, the state moved to dismiss for failure to prosecute, pursuant to this rule. On December 31, 1986, the state withdrew its motion based on an agreement that the claim would be held in abeyance until resolution of a companion case. However, on January 6, 1987, the District Court entered an order of dismissal but failed to serve either party with notice of dismissal. On January 13, 1988, the District Court ignored its own order of dismissal and held a hearing regarding disputed discovery. Both parties proceeded with discovery until counsel for respondent discovered the order of dismissal while reviewing the court file. Petitioner then moved for relief under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings after finding that: (1) this rule provides no basis for a discretionary dismissal after the motion to dismiss is withdrawn; (2) the order of dismissal was either a mistake or inadvertent as contemplated by Rule 60(b) (M.R.Civ.P.); and (3) appellant was not personally notified, so relief was appropriate. Diemert v. St., 242 M 127, 788 P2d 1355, 47 St. Rep. 633 (1990).

Delay Followed by Diligent Prosecution:

The parties separated in 1964, and the petitioner filed for divorce in 1971 with the answer not being filed until 1975. An order of dissolution was entered in 1983, but the question of property settlement was reserved. A second set of interrogatories was served on the respondent in 1987, at which time the respondent successfully moved for dismissal of the action due to lack of prosecution. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the petitioner's serving the second set of interrogatories constituted diligent prosecution of the case after a delay. In re Marriage of Horton, 237 M 99, 771 P2d 973, 46 St. Rep. 652 (1989).

Plaintiff's case proceeded through 8 years and four substituted attorneys without discovery before it was dismissed for failure to prosecute. Defendants filed motion to dismiss 5 days before date set for deposition of defendants by plaintiff's most recent substituted attorney. On appeal from the District Court's dismissal order, plaintiff argued that Brymerski v. Great Falls, 195 M 428, 636 P2d 846 (1981), held that since plaintiff had resumed prosecution of his action prior to the time motion to dismiss was filed by defendants, motion to dismiss should have been denied. The Supreme Court disagreed with that interpretation, holding that Brymerski required plaintiff to diligently prosecute and that only noticing deposition of defendants after 8 years was insufficient. Diversified Realty, Inc. v. Holenstein, 222 M 263, 721 P2d 752, 43 St. Rep. 1249 (1986).

A motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute will be denied if plaintiff is diligently prosecuting his claim when the motion is filed, even if he may have earlier failed to act diligently. Where plaintiff allowed 3 ½ years to pass without prosecuting his case, then prosecuted it for 4 months, at which time defendants filed a motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute, the motion was untimely. The claim that defendants were prejudiced by delay of plaintiff because a defendant died during the delay was to no avail where nearly everyone involved was still available to testify, the records and files involved were available, and decedent died several months before plaintiff resumed prosecution of the case and no objection was made by defendants until 4 months after prosecution was resumed. Brymerski v. Great Falls, 195 M 428, 636 P2d 846, 38 St. Rep. 2001 (1981).

Lack of Excuse, Discovery, and Attempt to Bring Case to Trial Constituting Failure to Prosecute: While no precise rule or formula sets forth the period of inactivity that is necessary to find a failure to prosecute, the Supreme Court affirmed a dismissal with prejudice for failure to prosecute, noting: (1) the conspicuous absence of any reasonable excuse for a lack of prosecution; (2) the lack of activity following the filing of the complaint; (3) delayed response to nearly all discovery attempts; and (4) the lack of a timely attempt to bring the case to trial. Thomas v. Wilson, 236 M 33, 767 P2d 1343, 46 St. Rep. 160 (1989). See also Cook v. Fergus Elec. Co-op, Inc., 235 M 173, 765 P2d 1138, 45 St. Rep. 2285 (1988).

Failure to Resolve Issue: In upholding a dismissal order for plaintiffs' failure to prosecute their claim, the Supreme Court held that courts should refrain from dismissing an action or claim unless there is no other adequate remedy available and the facts sufficiently call for such a result. In this case, the District Court's dismissal was proper because it was caused by plaintiffs' deliberate failure to comply with the court's order to resolve certain property ownership issues. Chisholm v. First Nat'l Bank of Glasgow, 235 M 219, 766 P2d 868, 45 St. Rep. 2333 (1988).

Abuse of Discretion in Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute — Factors to Be Considered: The Supreme Court cited Hamilton v. Neptune Orient Lines, Ltd., 811 F2d 498 (9th Cir. 1987), in setting out the factors to be weighed when determining whether a District Court abused its discretion in dismissing a case for failure to prosecute, including: (1) the plaintiff's diligence; (2) the trial court's need to manage its docket; (3) the danger of prejudice to the party suffering the delay; (4) the availability of alternate sanctions; and (5) the existence of warning to the party occasioning the delay. Cox v. Myllymaki, 231 M 320, 752 P2d 1093, 45 St. Rep. 649 (1988), distinguished in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374, 50 St. Rep. 857 (1993), in which it was held that neither this rule nor Cox mandate dismissal for lack of warning in the absence of a reasonable excuse for the delay, and which was followed in Hobble-Diamond Cattle, Co. v. Triangle Irrigation Co., 272 M 37, 899 P2d 531, 52 St. Rep. 596 (1995). Hobble-Diamond was followed in Pool v. Butte Pre-Release Center, Inc., 283 M 287, 939 P2d 1011, 54 St. Rep. 603 (1997), and Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2005 MT 189, 328 M 95, 117 P3d 908 (2005).

Case Dismissed for Lack of Prosecution After Seventy-Four Months — No Reasonable Excuse: Plaintiff could not demonstrate reasonable excuse for failure to prosecute, and the cause had lingered for 74 months, with no action for more than 5 years except to answer defendant's interrogatories and motions. It was not error to find that plaintiff had not been diligent and to consequently dismiss the case. Timber Tracts, Inc. v. Fergus Elec. Co-op, Inc., 231 M 40, 753 P2d 854, 45 St. Rep. 415 (1988), followed in Cook v. Fergus Elec. Co-op., Inc., 235 M 173, 765 P2d 1138, 45 St. Rep. 2285 (1988) (companion case).

Error to Dismiss Appeal: The District Court erred when it dismissed the appeal of a decision by the Board of Labor Appeals (now the Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board) when the case was fully submitted on briefs and all that remained was a decision by the District Court. The District Court dismissed the appeal 4 days after the motion to dismiss was made and 1 day after the petitioner had received notice of the motion. It was as much the responsibility of the hospital and the Department of Labor as it was the petitioner's to bring to the District Court's attention the fact that the pending motions had not been ruled upon. The policy favoring the resolution of a case on its merits is more compelling than the policy of dismissal for failure to prosecute. The District Court abused its discretion by failing to provide the petitioner with meaningful access to the judicial system. Martin v. Board of Labor Appeals, 227 M 145, 737 P2d 488, 44 St. Rep. 951 (1987).

Delay Not Excused by Subsequent Filings: The District Court did not err in granting motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute when 10 years had elapsed between the filing of a complaint and a motion to dismiss; 6½ years had passed between the time the court ordered appellants to file a more definite statement of their claim and the filing of the dismissal motion; appellants had been advised 2 years earlier of motion; witnesses had become unavailable; files were lost; one of respondents' attorneys had given up practice of law; one corporate party had changed ownership; and appellants had employed eight different attorneys. The fact that appellants had recently filed a second amended counterclaim and answer to amended complaint and an amended counterclaim along with their third-party complaint was not sufficient in light of unreasonable and unjustified delays to prevent dismissal. Chicago Title Ins. Co. v. Wheat, 216 M 98, 699 P2d 597, 42 St. Rep. 671 (1985).

Discretion of Trial Court — Burden of Showing Excuse — Presumption of Injury From Delay: When a tort action based upon swallowing a dental instrument dragged on 11 years after the incident (7 of those years after filing the complaint) with an almost complete lack of affirmative action in prosecuting the complaint, there was no abuse of discretion by the trial court in dismissing the action for failure to prosecute. The plaintiff has the burden of showing excuse for failure to prosecute with due diligence, but there is no burden on the defendant to show injury by the delay because the law presumes injury, specifically that an unreasonable delay raises a presumption of impairment of defendant's defenses. Shackleton v. Neil, 207 M 96, 672 P2d 1112, 40 St. Rep. 1920 (1983), followed in Westland v. Weinmeister, 259 M 412, 856 P2d 1374, 50 St. Rep. 857 (1993), and Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2005 MT 189, 328 M 95, 117 P3d 908 (2005).

Diligent Prosecution at Time Motion Filed — Motion Denied: A complaint was filed in 1971 alleging negligence and lease violations by the defendant, resulting in damages to the plaintiff's land. In 1982, the defendant moved for summary judgment for failure to prosecute. The Supreme Court held that the motion should have been denied because the plaintiff was diligently prosecuting an amended complaint at the time the defendant filed the Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion. Lien v. Murphy Corp., 201 M 488, 656 P2d 804, 39 St. Rep. 2252 (1982).

No Excuse Shown: Absent a sufficient showing of excuse, an action not prosecuted with due diligence may be dismissed for failure to prosecute, dismissal being within the sound discretion of the trial court. Brymerski v. Great Falls, 195 M 428, 636 P2d 846, 38 St. Rep. 2001 (1981).

Unjustified Delay:

The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of a complaint of unlawful detainer. Although pleading was completed and the case set for trial nearly 5 years earlier, the case still had not come to trial. The trial setting was vacated twice. The District Court notified counsel by three separate notices in 3 years of its intention to dismiss the case unless good cause was shown to the contrary. The date for such a showing was continued eight times. The plaintiff bore the burden of showing a reason for inaction. Prejudice to the defendant was presumed. A motion for dismissal for lack of prosecution is within the trial court's sound discretion. No abuse of discretion was found in this case. Peters v. Newkirk, 194 M 223, 633 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 1526 (1981).

The delay occasioned by defendant's (and third-party plaintiff's) inaction was unreasonable. He failed to take any significant action towards a final determination of the case for at least 3 years prior to dismissal, and offered no excuse for the delay. His failure to timely respond to certain interrogatories and failure to appear at a scheduled deposition characterized his inaction regarding furtherance of an ultimate resolution of his claim. Calaway v. Jones, 177 M 516, 582 P2d 756 (1978).

Discretion of Court: It is within the discretion of the court to dismiss an action if it has not been prosecuted with reasonable diligence. It is presumed that the court acted correctly and will not be overturned without a showing of an abuse of discretion. Cremer v. Braaten, 151 M 18, 438 P2d 553 (1968).

Twelve-Year Delay — Dismissal Properly Granted: Case was properly dismissed for failure of plaintiff to prosecute where nothing was done to bring it to trial for over 12 years despite fact that defendant had shown no injury by delay, that attorneys had agreed to get together and try to work out agreement, and that defendant had filed cross-complaint which was defensive in character. Cremer v. Braaten, 151 M 18, 438 P2d 553 (1968).

Failure to Follow Supreme Court Order — No Failure to Prosecute: Trial court abused discretion in dismissing action for failure of plaintiff to prosecute where case was returned by Supreme Court to trial court for new trial but trial court failed to set it for trial at next jury term as per order of Supreme Court. Jangula v. U.S. Rubber Co., 149 M 241, 425 P2d 319 (1967).

Alteration of Time for Prosecution: Where actions were commenced and the summons in each case was issued and served within the period and time limit fixed and allowed by express statutes, the trial court has no "discretion" to disregard the rules of practice and procedure so prescribed and attempt to shorten the time allowed for the performance of the acts. Kujich v. Lillie, 127 M 125, 260 P2d 383 (1953).

Dismissal as Upon Merits: A judgment of dismissal may be said to be on the merits when, after plaintiff has lost the right to a dismissal without prejudice because of the filing of a counterclaim, at the time set for trial he cannot make a case in support of his complaint, and not only fails and refuses to proceed with the presentation of his case but participates in the trial upon defendant's counterclaim. Schuster v. N. Co., 127 M 39, 257 P2d 249 (1953).

Reasonable Diligence Required: Where plaintiff without sufficient cause fails to prosecute his action with reasonable diligence, an application to dismiss for that reason is proper. Smotherman v. Christianson, 59 M 202, 195 P 1106 (1921).

Plaintiff Absent at Trial: Failure of the plaintiff to be present at the trial and offer evidence in support of allegations of the complaint which were traversed by the answer constitutes an abandonment of the cause and authorizes the court to render a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.). Sell v. Sell, 58 M 329, 193 P 561 (1920).

Inherent Power to Dismiss: Independently of the statute, a court has power to dismiss an action whenever it appears that the plaintiff has, without sufficient excuse, failed to prosecute it to final judgment. St. Sav. Bank v. Albertson, 39 M 414, 102 P 692 (1909).

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE

Failure to List Amount of Loss in Pretrial Order — Hearsay Insufficient to Prove Costs — Dismissal for Failure to Prove Damages: Plaintiff alleged that because a title company failed to disclose a sanitary restriction, she was entitled to recover for the cost of a new well. The agreed statement of facts in the pretrial order did not raise any specific contention or agreement as to the cost of the well. Plaintiff did not introduce specific evidence of damages, contending by hearsay as to what the cost would be. She later argued that because the cost of the well was not a factual issue enumerated in the pretrial order, she did not have to present evidence on costs. That the issue was not listed in the pretrial order was immaterial. Damages were listed as a plaintiff's contention, and as part of the pleadings, the question was properly before the court. Because her hearsay statement was insufficient to prove the cost of the well and was inadmissible as proof of costs, the trial court properly concluded that no evidence was presented on the issue and dismissed the case for failure to prove damages. Adlington v. First Mont. Title Ins. Co., 245 M 304, 800 P2d 1051, 47 St. Rep. 2132 (1990).

Hearsay Evidence Presented by Out-of-State Residents Who Failed to Appear — Dismissal Proper: Plaintiffs, who resided in Ohio, sought recovery in a contract dispute but failed to appear in person or by counsel, claiming that the trial court could "fairly judge" the case based on documents submitted to the court. However, an examination of the documents showed they were replete with hearsay and that the unsworn written statements were made out of court and did not afford defendant with the opportunity to confront the writers or question them as to the veracity of the statements. The District Court properly dismissed the complaint with prejudice and awarded costs to defendant. Fields v. Wells, 239 M 392, 780 P2d 1141, 46 St. Rep. 1775 (1989).

Contract Dispute — Involuntary Dismissal Properly Denied: In a dispute between the buyer and seller of property, involuntary dismissal was properly denied after buyer presented evidence that seller failed to reveal at the time the contract was signed that seller did not have clear title and that seller accepted and used all of buyer's payments without providing a warranty deed to the tract. Many elements of the counts against seller could arise as a matter of law; therefore, the evidence was sufficient to support buyer's claims. Schilke v. Bean, 232 M 125, 755 P2d 565, 45 St. Rep. 930 (1988).

General Assertions of Fraud — Defendant Properly Dismissed: The wife of a defendant convicted of fraudulent misrepresentation of income when selling a business was properly dismissed as a defendant when general assertions of fraud revealed only her involvement as co-owner of the business, her performance of some business bookkeeping functions, and her presence at a few meetings where the sale was discussed. None of the elements of fraud were established by evidence. Selvidge v. McBeen, 230 M 237, 750 P2d 429, 45 St. Rep. 168 (1988).

No False Representations by Real Estate Agent — Dismissal Proper: Real estate agent was properly dismissed from an action involving fraudulent misrepresentations of income by the seller of a business when it was found the agent concealed nothing from buyers and had no knowledge of and made no representations to buyers concerning business profitability. Selvidge v. McBeen, 230 M 237, 750 P2d 429, 45 St. Rep. 168 (1988).

Construction Contract — Evidence Admissible to Establish Damages for Breach: A general contractor on a highway project subcontracted the bridge and concrete work to the plaintiff, who in turn subcontracted the concrete work to a specialist. In an action against the general contractor for breach of contract, the specialist's expert opinion evidence was admissible to establish the reasonable cost of the concrete work under the subcontract without regard to whether he was prequalified to perform the concrete work according to state Department of Highways' (now Department of Transportation's) standards. The trial court's dismissal of the case because there was no valid evidence to establish damages was improper. E. F. Matelich Constr. Co. v. Goodfellow Bros., Inc., 198 M 150, 645 P2d 391, 39 St. Rep. 831 (1982).

Fraud in Real Estate Transaction — No Error in Failure to Dismiss: The law imposes an affirmative duty upon a real estate agent not only to refrain from taking advantage of his client but also to act with the utmost good faith and to fully disclose all material facts concerning a transaction that affects the client's decision. Defendant, when he originally negotiated with sellers to purchase their motel, was their real estate agent. Defendant did not advise them of his relationship with purchasers, nor did he reveal that the maker on the second note could not pay off. On those and other grounds, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiffs' claim of fraud at the close of plaintiffs' case in chief. Flemmer v. Ming, 190 M 403, 621 P2d 1038, 37 St. Rep. 1916 (1980).

Dismissal Proper — Negligence Case: Plaintiff failed to establish prima facie case. Therefore dismissal of claim was proper. Knowlton v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968); Hernandez v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R.R., 144 M 585, 398 P2d 953 (1965).

Failure to Prove Prima Facie Case: Defendant was entitled to have motion for involuntary dismissal granted where plaintiff wholly failed to establish prima facie case of negligence. Knowlton v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968).

Denial of Motion to Dismiss as Error: District Court erred in not granting defendant's motions for dismissal and directed verdict where evidence, viewed in light most favorable to plaintiff, did not support verdict for him. MacDonald v. Protestant Episcopal Church, 150 M 332, 435 P2d 369 (1967).

Evidence Susceptible of One Construction: No cause should be withdrawn from the jury unless evidence is susceptible of but one construction by reasonable men and that in favor of the defendant, or the evidence is in such condition that if the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, it would be the court's duty to set it aside. Jackson v. William Dingwall Co., 145 M 127, 399 P2d 236 (1965); Thompson v. Llewellyn, 136 M 167, 346 P2d 561 (1959).

Failure to Prove Negligence: Where plaintiff's property was damaged by the dropping of fire retardant from airplanes and at the trial he failed to show the lack of proper care under the circumstances, the trial court properly nonsuited (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) plaintiff upon defendant's motion. Stocking v. Johnson Flying Serv., 143 M 61, 387 P2d 312 (1963).

No Error in Granting Nonsuit: Trial court did not err in granting a nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) against plaintiff in action by truck driver against automobile owner for injuries arising out of accident when the daughter of the owner of the automobile forced truck off the highway where plaintiff did not prove ownership or the identity of the automobile involved in the accident as belonging to defendant and the record was silent as to any proof upon the question of agency. Castle v. Thisted, 139 M 328, 363 P2d 724 (1961).

Substantial Evidence as Question of Law: Under the provision for a dismissal or nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) for failure of proof, whether there is substantial evidence in support of plaintiff's case is always a question of law for the court. Ahlquist v. Mulvaney Realty Co., 116 M 6, 152 P2d 137 (1944); Flynn v. Poindexter & Orr Livestock Co., 63 M 337, 207 P 341 (1922).

Standard of Care Met — Nonsuit to Be Granted: If under the evidence in a personal injury action the jury could arrive at no other conclusion than that the defendant met the standard of reasonable care, the question may be withdrawn from the jury by an order of nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.). Myles v. Helena Motors, Inc., 113 M 92, 121 P2d 548 (1942).

When Nonsuit Not to Be Granted: A motion for nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) should never be granted when reasonable men may draw different conclusions from the evidence introduced by plaintiff or where it shows a substantial support for his complaint, but only where from the undisputed facts the conclusion necessarily follows, as a matter of law, that recovery cannot be had upon any view which may reasonably be taken from the facts established. Claypool v. Malta Standard Garage, 96 M 285, 30 P2d 89 (1934).

Question of Law Only: A judgment of nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) is proper where the plaintiff fails to prove a case for the jury, and when no substantial evidence has been introduced by the party upon whom rests the burden of proof, a question of law for the decision by the court is presented. Lee v. Stockmen's Nat'l Bank, 63 M 262, 207 P 623 (1922).

Weakness of Testimony: Dismissal or nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) is authorized where the plaintiff has tendered some evidence in support of the complaint, but the evidence is legally insufficient to sustain a verdict, and this insufficiency may arise from the inherent weakness of the testimony itself. McIntyre v. N. Pac. Ry., 56 M 43, 180 P 971 (1919).

Plaintiff Not Entitled to Relief: A motion for a nonsuit (superseded by Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P.) will be sustained where, upon the facts proved, the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief. Hoskins v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 394, 102 P 988 (1909).

Final Disposition as Judgment: The final disposition of an action on a dismissal thereof is accomplished by a judgment. State ex rel. Mont. Cent. Ry. v. District Court, 32 M 37, 79 P 546 (1905).

Former Rule 41(c). Dismissal of counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim Evidence of Malicious Attachment — Motion to Dismiss Properly Denied: In Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641 (2000), it was held that plaintiff admitted no entitlement to any money from a logging agreement or any rental fees associated with defendant's use of a logging skidder. Nevertheless, plaintiff made no attempt to contact defendant to submit a bill, request payment, or discuss the logging contract, but instead, after disabling the skidder, plaintiff filed a lien against and later attached the skidder, with the intent to bid on it at a Sheriff's sale. Defendant presented both direct and circumstantial evidence that, without probable cause, plaintiff wrongfully attached the skidder with an improper motive and with reckless disregard for the facts, constituting a prima facie case of malicious wrongful attachment. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was properly denied. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003).

Counterclaim Premised on Malicious Prosecution or Abuse of Process as Suit in Tort — Necessary Elements: A counterclaim alleging damages for breach of fiduciary duty, constructive fraud, creditor overreaching, and wrongful attachment did not meet the conditions of a counterclaim and third-party complaint on an attachment bond as provided in 27-18-204. The counterclaim was then premised upon the common-law notions of malicious prosecution or abuse of process, which is a suit in tort. To recover on such a suit, the elements of malice and want of probable cause must be present and proved. Absent evidence of these elements, the counterclaim was properly dismissed. Montgomery v. Hunt, 227 M 279, 738 P2d 887, 44 St. Rep. 1081 (1987).

Defendants' Obstruction of Easement Unreasonable — Counterclaim for Damages Stricken: After concluding that the defendants' obstruction were an unreasonable interference with a right-of-way easement granted to plaintiffs, the District Court properly withdrew from the jury's consideration the defendants' counterclaim for damages. The standard of review for removal of an issue from jury consideration is the same as that of a directed verdict, as stated in Dahl v. Petroleum Geophysical Co., 38 St. Rep. 1474 (1981); i.e., an issue should not be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusions from the facts advanced by the moving party follow necessarily, as a matter of law, that recovery cannot be had under any view which can be drawn reasonably from the facts which the evidence tends to establish. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Dismissal of Battery Counterclaim — Sole Evidence Claimant's Self-Contradicted Testimony: Dismissal of battery counterclaim made in personal injury case arising from motor vehicle collision was not reversible error where defendant's only evidence on the alleged battery was his own testimony, his testimony was contradicted by his statements in a deposition, and he had refused a discovery request to produce his physician's medical report and had not called his physician to the stand. The counterclaim was frivolous, fanciful, gauzy, or merely suspicious, even when construed in the light most favorable to defendant. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Counterclaim on Contract — Fulfillment of Preexisting Duties Not Consideration — Effect of Lack of Consideration: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home, structural problems requiring repair occurred. At trial, defendant counterclaimed against the plaintiffs for his expenses in installing tie rods in the walls of the home. The plaintiffs had authorized the installation of the tie rods after a windstorm had shown the home to be unstable. Although noting the ratification of the agreement after the rods were installed, the Supreme Court also noted that the home remained unstable and that the rods may have been improperly installed. It said that defendant had a common-law duty to construct the home in a manner as to assure stability. The duty was not fulfilled even after the installation of the tie rods. Because a promise to perform a preexisting legal or contractual obligation is insufficient consideration for a promise made in return, consideration was lacking in the supplemental (tie rod installation) agreement. Under Rule 41, M.R.Civ.P., a counterclaim may be dismissed where, upon the facts and the law, the claimant has shown no right to relief. With consideration lacking, the contract was unenforceable and the defendant had no right to relief on his counterclaim. Estoppel will not support the defendant's claim without a showing of detrimental reliance, and it has no application when the omissions of the party claiming estoppel brought about the problem. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980), followed in McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986).

Former Rule 41(d). Costs of previously-dismissed action

Costs and Fees for Voluntary Dismissal: Plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the case under Rule 41(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P., before an answer or a summary judgment motion was filed by defendant. It was error for the District Court to award defendant costs for substantial discovery made before dismissal. The District Court erroneously relied on discretionary authority under Rule 41(a)(2) and this rule. Relief under this rule, or its federal equivalent, must be sought from the federal District Court in which the plaintiff commenced the subsequent action. USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Former Rule 42(a). Consolidation

District Court Enforcement of Settlement Agreement in Pending Case: When a case is pending before a District Court, either party is entitled to make a motion to enforce a settlement agreement as long as the existence and terms of the agreement are not in dispute. Hinderman v. Krivor, 2010 MT 230, 358 Mont. 111, 244 P.3d 306.

Improper Consolidation of Two Cases Pending in Separate Courts — Change of Venue Granted: Drew filed an employment discrimination complaint against Yellowstone County and two County Commissioners. The Commission for Human Rights issued its decision, and Drew appealed certain aspects of the decision to the First Judicial District Court in Lewis and Clark County—a proper venue as the county where the Commission for Human Rights had its principal office. Meanwhile, Yellowstone County and the Commissioners appealed other aspects of the decision to the Thirteenth Judicial District Court in Yellowstone County. Drew moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County. Yellowstone County conceded that Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for Drew's petition, but argued in Thirteenth Judicial District Court that Yellowstone County's petition justified a separate appeal in a proper District Court of the county's choice because the issues were different from those presented in Drew's petition. The Thirteenth Judicial District Court disagreed and consolidated the appeals in Lewis and Clark County, and Drew appealed. The Supreme Court cited federal law for the proposition that cases to be consolidated must be pending in the same court, so a cause of action pending in one jurisdiction cannot be consolidated with a cause of action pending in another jurisdiction, even though there may be a disparity in the issues under appeal or cross-appeal. Therefore, even though the practical result was the same, the Thirteenth Judicial District Court's consolidation order was reversed, and the court was ordered to grant Drew's motion for a change of venue. Yellowstone County v. Drew, 2007 MT 130, 337 M 346, 160 P3d 557 (2007).

Common Fund Not Created by Stavenjord I — No Recovery of Attorney Fees From Nonparticipating Claimants: On remand to the Workers' Compensation Court of Stavenjord v. Mont. St. Fund, 2003 MT 67, 314 M 466, 67 P3d 229 (2003) (Stavenjord I), the State Fund paid Stavenjord's additional benefits, and Stavenjord then sought recovery of common fund attorney fees for Stavenjord-type benefits secured by nonparticipating claimants. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that Stavenjord I created a common fund and that Stavenjord's counsel was entitled to collect common fund fees from nonparticipating claimants who benefited from Stavenjord I. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. Applying the elements of a common fund set out in Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001), the court determined that Stavenjord I did not create an identifiable monetary fund or benefit, so the first element in creation of a common fund was not satisfied and Stavenjord's counsel was not entitled to collect common fund fees from nonparticipating claimants. The case was remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of an appropriate procedure by which potential Stavenjord beneficiaries would be identified and notified of their interests related to increased Stavenjord-type benefits. Stavenjord v. Mont. St. Fund, 2006 MT 257, 334 M 117, 146 P3d 724 (2006).

Consolidation of Probate and Guardianship Proceedings Not Abuse of Discretion: A District Court consolidated probate and guardianship proceedings, determining that the collective interests would be better served by consolidating the matters. The original guardian objected to consolidation on grounds that the two actions involved different parties and contemplated entirely different legal and factual issues. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although the proceedings did not contemplate similar issues at their inception, as the arguments developed in the probate proceeding, it became apparent that the ownership interest in the estate property formed a common bond conjoining the proceedings as they related to the accounting of the guardianship. The original guardian was given the opportunity to participate in every proceeding regardless of its origin and thus suffered no injustice in the exercise of judicial economy, nor did the District Court act arbitrarily or exceed the bounds of reason in consolidating the actions. In re Estate of McDermott, 2002 MT 164, 310 M 435, 51 P3d 486 (2002).

Peremptory Challenges to Prospective Jurors — Factors Necessary to Show Purposeful Discrimination in Jury Selection — Waiver of Batson Challenge When Not Timely Raised: Ford contended that the state violated his due process rights by improperly exercising all of its peremptory challenges at trial to exclude women from the jury panel, citing J.E.B. v. Ala. ex rel. T.B., 511 US 127 (1994), as a prohibition against gender discrimination during jury selection. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court applied a de novo review to the trial court's application of the law, deferring to the trial court's findings of fact unless clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court then reviewed the history of the discriminatory use of peremptory challenges as addressed in Batson v. Ky., 476 US 79 (1986), and its progeny, noting that the rules regarding challenges to jury selection no longer apply exclusively to prosecutors striking members of the venire who are the same race as the defendant, but that any racially motivated reason for striking a prospective juror is prohibited whether the juror shares the racial identity of the defendant or not (see Powers v. Ohio, 499 US 400 (1991)). Further, the challenge is no longer limited to the government in criminal actions but has been extended to prevent a defendant in a criminal action from using peremptory challenges to exclude jurors based on race (see Ga. v. McCollum, 505 US 42 (1992)), has been applied to private litigants in civil cases (see Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 US 614 (1991)), and has been used to prohibit gender discrimination in jury selection, as in J.E.B. In order to establish a prima facie case of purposeful discrimination, a defendant must show that: (1) the defendant is a member of a cognizable racial group; (2) the prosecutor exercised peremptory challenges to remove members of the defendant's race from the venire; and (3) these facts and other relevant circumstances raise an inference that the prosecutor used the peremptory jury selection practice to exclude members of the venire from the petit jury on account of their race. In addition, numerous courts have held that the right to be tried by a jury whose members are selected pursuant to nondiscriminatory criteria must be exercised in a timely manner, and failure to raise a Batson challenge before the jury is sworn and before the venire is dismissed results in waiver of the challenge. In Ford's case, his counsel waited until after the jury was sworn and the venire dismissed before raising the Batson challenge. Because the motion was untimely, and therefore waived, the Supreme Court declined to address the merits of Ford's claim of discriminatory use of peremptory challenges. St. v. Ford, 2001 MT 230, 306 M 517, 39 P3d 108 (2001), followed in Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002), St. v. Parrish, 2005 MT 112, 327 M 88, 111 P3d 671 (2005), and Ford v. St., 2005 MT 151, 327 M 378, 114 P3d 244 (2005).

No Error in Failure to Consolidate Promissory Note Issue With Separate Breach of Contract Issue: Plaintiff brought two actions against defendant — one for payment of outstanding promissory notes and one for breach of contract. Defendant contended that it was error to deny a motion to consolidate the matters because: (1) both actions involved common questions of law and fact; (2) consolidation would have been more cost-efficient; and (3) failure to consolidate created the possibility of conflicting and duplicative judgments. After reviewing the promissory notes at issue and the complaints filed in both actions, the District Court properly determined that: (1) the contract and the promissory notes constituted separate and independent obligations, neither referencing or incorporating the terms of the other; (2) the amounts in controversy in each action were different and independent of one another; and (3) although the breach of contract action involved issues of law regarding contract interpretation, the primary issues in this action were simply questions of fact. Thus, the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to consolidate the matters. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

Consolidation, Rather Than Dismissal, of Lien Actions Proper: Having received no payment for installation of an elevator, Lagerquist filed a lien against Devoe's building. At the same time, DeVoe filed a complaint against Lagerquist, alleging breaches of contract and warranty, negligent or fraudulent misrepresentation, and breach of good faith and fair dealing. The following month, Lagerquist filed for lien foreclosure. DeVoe moved that either the lien foreclosure be dismissed or the actions be consolidated, and the court granted the motion to consolidate. On appeal, DeVoe argued that under the doctrine of election of remedies, Lagerquist was precluded from claiming both that the elevator was installed within the time allowed and that the lien was filed in a timely manner. However, the answer to DeVoe's action in tort did not dispose of the issue of when work was last done on the elevator; therefore, the court did not err in consolidating the actions rather than dismissing the lien foreclosure action. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

Refusal to Separate Counterclaim Proper: The plaintiff sued on an alleged personal service contract, and the defendant counterclaimed for intentional interference with his business and for libel. The plaintiff claimed that the lower court's failure to order separate trials led to confusion. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's decision on the basis that the facts surrounding the contract action and the counterclaim were sufficiently intertwined to be tried together. Tindall v. Konitz Contracting, Inc., 240 M 345, 783 P2d 1376, 46 St. Rep. 2182 (1989).

Consolidation of Suits by Partner Against Bank and Partner Denied: Bank depositor sued his partner for wrongful withdrawal of money from the partnership bank account, conversion of partnership property, and fraud in withdrawing the funds and inducing the bank to issue a signature card allowing him to withdraw funds without plaintiff depositor's cosignature. Depositor also sued the bank for negligently issuing the new card and wrongfully honoring his partner's checks without depositor's signature. There were some similar issues in each case, and consolidation may have been appropriate, but the matter rested in the lower court's discretion, which was not abused when the court refused bank's request to consolidate. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Appointment of Lead Counsel for Consolidated Cases Properly Made: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous cases were consolidated for discovery and trial, the District Court did not err in appointing the attorney for one of the parties as lead counsel for all parties in all of the consolidated cases. Had lead counsel not been appointed, 31 different cases would have been prosecuted by 10 separate attorneys, each of whom may have pursued different legal theories. Given this fact, it cannot be said that the District Court abused its discretion, nor would it be proper to allow the appellant to accept the substantial services of lead counsel prior to trial and to avoid the appointment of that counsel on appeal. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Appointment of Lead Counsel for Consolidated Cases — Findings and Hearing Held Unnecessary: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous related cases were consolidated for trial, the District Court did not err in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing prior to the appointment of one attorney as lead counsel for all of the consolidated cases. Because Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., provides that findings are unnecessary on decisions on motions, the court's decision under Rule 42(a), M.R.Civ.P., did not require findings and there was therefore no obligation on the District Court to provide an evidentiary hearing. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Duty of State Agency to Compensate Lead Counsel in Consolidated Cases Upheld: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous cases were consolidated and lead counsel appointed for all consolidated cases, the District Court did not err in requiring the plaintiff state agency to compensate lead counsel. There is no basis, either in Disciplinary Rule 2-107 of the Canons of Professional Ethics or elsewhere, for treating the plaintiff differently from any other beneficiary of the litigation because payment for the litigation is founded upon principles of equity and equity demands that all parties receiving a benefit contribute to payment of the expenses. Disciplinary Rule 2-107, regarding the splitting of fees between two lawyers, has no application to court-appointed lead counsel who is paid under the supervision of the court. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Payment of Lead Counsel for Consolidated Cases — "Common Fund" Exception for Unequal Contributions: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous cases were consolidated and lead counsel appointed for all consolidated cases, the trial court did not err in requiring the plaintiff to compensate lead counsel even in the absence of any contract or statutory authority for the compensation. Where a party through active litigation creates a common fund shared by other parties, those parties must bear a portion of the litigation costs, including reasonable attorney fees, if their contribution to the litigation was unequal to the contribution of the active party. Because the record shows that the plaintiff contributed only half or less of the legal services necessary to the cases, the District Court properly ordered compensation. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981), followed in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III). See also Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001).

Reasonableness of Attorney Fees for Lead Counsel in Consolidated Cases Upheld: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous cases were consolidated and lead counsel appointed for the consolidated cases, the trial court did not err in awarding lead counsel $47,222.22 in attorney fees to be paid by the plaintiff. In determining the reasonableness of a fee, the Supreme Court, in First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), established the guidelines to be considered by the trial court. The fee awarded was 11.1% of the plaintiff's recovery and was awarded only after extensive testimony relating to the guidelines to be considered. Under these circumstances, no abuse of discretion was found. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981), followed in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III).

Common Questions Absent: Because there were no common questions of law or fact in two actions proposed for consolidation, the refusal of the court to consolidate was not an abuse of discretion. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

"Pending Before the Court" Defined: Cases as to which time for appeal had passed were not "pending before the court" so as to make them amenable to consolidation with cases not yet reduced to judgment even though amount of insolvent warehouseman's bond might not be sufficient to satisfy all claims in full. Peavey Co. v. Agri-Services, Inc., 163 M 394, 517 P2d 718 (1973).

Actions by Different Parties — Consolidation Improper: Consolidation of two actions for damages flowing from an automobile collision was error where one action was by the guardian of the infant son of the driver against the bus company and its driver, and the other by the administrator of the passenger's estate against the bus company alone, both plaintiffs being represented by different counsel, both counsel objecting to the consolidation, the two actions not being between the same parties and not involving causes of action which, under section 93-3203, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), could have been properly joined, and motions for new trials of both actions were properly granted. Ferron v. Intermountain Transp. Co., 115 M 388, 143 P2d 893 (1943).

Cases Involving Separate Parties: Under section 93-8705, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 42(a), M.R.Civ.P.), two actions by different plaintiffs could not be consolidated over the objection of two separate plaintiffs represented by separate counsel. Its purpose was to prevent a multiplicity of actions between the same plaintiff and the same defendant where different causes of action could have been incorporated in a single complaint. Ferron v. Intermountain Transp. Co., 115 M 388, 143 P2d 893 (1943).

Statutory Basis of Consolidation as Exclusive: The statutory power of the District Court to consolidate actions is exclusive, and therefore appeal to its "inherent" power to act in that behalf may not be entertained to supply a different mode of procedure. Ferron v. Intermountain Transp. Co., 115 M 388, 143 P2d 893 (1943).

Discretion of Court: A consolidation may not be demanded as a matter of right, but rests in the discretion of the court, the exercise of which will not be interfered with on appeal unless clear abuse is shown, particularly where the consolidation was denied. However, where consolidation will expedite the court's business and the interests of litigants be furthered as well as the expense to them and the public minimized, it should be ordered. St. George v. Boucher, 84 M 158, 274 P 489 (1929).

Appeal of Consolidation Order — Objection Required: The legality of the consolidation of actions will not be reviewed by the Supreme Court unless excepted to at the time and brought to the Supreme Court by the party excepting. Handley v. Sprinkle, 31 M 57, 77 P 296 (1904).

Pleadings Consolidated: The effect of consolidation is to join all causes of action in one suit, the complaint in which should be the same as if the plaintiff had joined all causes of action alleged in the original suits in one action, and the judgment must settle all the issues involved. Handley v. Sprinkle, 31 M 57, 77 P 296 (1904), explained in Ferron v. Intermountain Transp. Co., 115 M 388, 143 P2d 893 (1943).

Former Rule 42(b). Separate trials

Bifurcation of Trial Into Liability and Damages Phases Proper to Avoid Jury Prejudice: Plaintiff was injured when defendant, a runaway juvenile probationer, hit plaintiff with a stolen vehicle while being pursued by law enforcement officers during a high-speed chase through Harlowton. Plaintiff settled with the juvenile and then sued the county and the County Sheriff for damages related to the crash. Immediately preceding the trial on plaintiff's negligence claims, counsel for the county moved to exclude evidence of the juvenile's pretrial settlement. The trial court held that the evidence was admissible but decided to bifurcate liability and damages portions of the trial in an effort to avoid any prejudicial effect of the evidence to the county. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that bifurcation was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion. The trial court had ample reason to believe that evidence of the settlement, if heard by the jury during the liability phase, could easily have prejudiced the jury and improperly influenced a damage award against the county. Eklund v. Trost, 2006 MT 333, 335 M 112, 151 P3d 870 (2006).

Bifurcation of Liability and Damage Claims Proper: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Plaintiff brought liability and damage claims, and the District Court bifurcated the claims. The Supreme Court found that bifurcation in this case was not erroneous because the evidence proving liability and damages was fundamentally different and the claims were not so interwoven that bifurcation would prevent a fair trial or lead to endless litigation. Bifurcation was also warranted because witnesses for the liability phase could be lost or their memories clouded if they were required to wait until the full extent of the child's injuries was known, because a finding of liability might speed the process of enhancing the possibility of a settlement, for court convenience, and to avoid the danger of prejudice. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Bifurcation of Separate Damage Claims Proper: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Plaintiff brought damage claims related to the child's injuries and claims related to plaintiff's own emotional distress, loss of consortium, and posttraumatic stress disorder. The District Court bifurcated the claims, and the Supreme Court held that bifurcation in this case was not erroneous. Although the same facts surrounded the underlying accident, the claims were fundamentally different. Plaintiff's damages were currently assessable, but the full extent of the child's damages would not be known for several years, so forcing plaintiff to wait until the child's damages were known or forcing trial on both issues now would both be prejudicial. Despite the possibility of a slight overlap of witnesses, the witnesses and evidence on each claim would have been different. Judicial economy did not call for a unified trial in this case, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering bifurcation of the damage claims. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004).

Dual Insurance Claims — Supervisory Control Proper to Facilitate Convenience and Judicial Economy: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims, and the couple sought relief from the order on grounds that they would be prejudiced by having to prosecute two separate trials. The Supreme Court concurred with the couple and, in the interests of the convenience of the parties and judicial economy, agreed to exercise supervisory control. State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1238 (1997).

Refusal to Bifurcate Wrongful Discharge Claim From Employer's Counterclaim Proper: Jarvenpaa argued that his employer's counterclaim against him for recovery of retirement benefits should have been bifurcated from his wrongful discharge claim because the counterclaim unnecessarily invited evidence of his election to retire and the retirement benefits that he received, which prejudicially persuaded the jury to find that the discharge was fair instead of wrongful. However, evidence of the retirement election was helpful to the jury to make a well-informed decision, including whether the employer acted with malice, and was relevant to the wrongful discharge action. Therefore, the District Court did not err in refusing to bifurcate the issues for separate trial. Jarvenpaa v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 1998 MT 306, 292 M 118, 970 P2d 84, 55 St. Rep. 1261 (1998).

Bifurcation Necessary to Prevent Further Delay: O'Neal contended that it was error for the trial court to order separate trials because his third-party claims were inextricably interwoven with Eastern Livestock Company's (Eastern) claims against him. On review, the Supreme Court noted that O'Neal had engaged in dilatory tactics to prevent litigation but that Eastern had diligently pursued its claim. The primary consideration in determining the propriety of separate trials is which procedure is most likely to result in a just and final disposition of the litigation. Although certain issues may have arisen in both actions, it was not error to determine that separate trials would permit O'Neal to litigate his third-party claims without causing Eastern further inconvenience or prejudice. E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931, 54 St. Rep. 1058 (1997).

Bifurcation of Breach of Insurance Contract and Bad Faith Claims — Use of Supervisory Control to Require That Both Claims Be Tried to Same Jury: After the District Court bifurcated the Malta school district's insurance contract and bad faith claims, the school district requested by motion that both claims be tried to the same jury, one claim immediately following the other. The District Court denied the motion, and the school district sought a writ of supervisory control. The Supreme Court granted the writ and directed the District Court to try the contract claim and the bad faith claim to the same jury. Because 33-18-242 contains no standards governing whether a bifurcated case should be tried to the same jury, the Supreme Court looked to cases decided under this rule for guidance and, after finding the state and federal versions of this rule sufficiently similar, relied upon Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co., 85 FRD 654 (1980). The Supreme Court held that a two-step process should be used; it should first be determined whether bifurcation is appropriate and then whether the interests of judicial economy, fairness to the parties, clarity of the issues, and convenience require trial of the issues to the same or a different jury. In determining whether to grant the writ of supervisory control, the Supreme Court weighed the same or similar considerations also weighed by the Supreme Court pursuant to Martin v. Bell Helicopter Co. to determine whether separate juries should be used. The Supreme Court reviewed the circumstances of the case and found that the writ of supervisory control should be granted and that the District Court abused its discretion in refusing to try the two claims to the same jury. Malta Pub. School District A & 14 v. District Court, 283 M 46, 938 P2d 1335, 54 St. Rep. 486 (1997), followed in State ex rel. Gadbaw v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003).

District Court Jurisdiction to Determine Unfair Trade Practices Alleged Before Workers' Compensation Settlement Agreement: Poteat brought a District Court complaint alleging unfair trade practices, breach of contract, and actual malice under 33-18-242. Because the underlying claim contained unresolved future workers' compensation medical benefits and the Workers' Compensation Court has exclusive jurisdiction over workers' compensation claims, the District Court determined that it had no jurisdiction to hear an unfair trade practices case until Poteat obtained a judgment or settlement of the entire underlying claim. The Supreme Court determined that counts one and four alleged actual malice and unfair trade practices before the settlement agreement, which were not based on an underlying claim that had not been settled or adjudicated, and that counts two and three alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices after the settlement agreement, which concerned the unresolved issue of future medical benefits not yet adjudicated by the Workers' Compensation Court. The District Court erred in dismissing the entire case on grounds of lack of jurisdiction. The counts regarding unfair practices before settlement had their basis in a valid existing settlement agreement, and Poteat was therefore entitled to pursue the counts regarding presettlement trade practices. However, Poteat was not entitled to pursue the counts regarding unfair practices after settlement until the issue of future medical benefits was adjudicated. The case was thus affirmed regarding counts two and three and reversed regarding counts one and four. Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677, 53 St. Rep. 568 (1996). See also Liberty NW. Ins. Corp. v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 1998 MT 169, 289 M 475, 962 P2d 1167, 55 St. Rep. 684 (1998).

Disposal of Bifurcated Counterclaims Without Hearing — Compromise Agreement Bar to Preexisting Claims and Causes of Action: Parties signed a stipulation that provided for dismissal of an action, which was a compromise agreement that effectively confirmed and satisfied a contract. Defendant also had pending counterclaims, previously bifurcated and reserved for trial by jury, that were dismissed after the stipulation and never addressed by the District Court. By signing the stipulation, defendant waived any further claims of breach of contract occurring prior to judgment, including bad faith claims or breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Settlement of the declaratory action was dispositive of defendant's counterclaims, and a hearing was unnecessary. S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990).

Bifurcation of Question of Common-Law Marriage From Issues of Child Custody, Property Distribution, and Maintenance: Subsection (1)(d) of 40-4-104 did not prohibit bifurcation of proceedings (to determine if parties had a common-law marriage) before hearing evidence on custody, property distribution, and maintenance. The trial court lacked authority to grant the requested relief until a determination of the marital relationship was completed because it could not dissolve or equitably distribute the fruits of that which may not exist. Bifurcation was well within the wide discretion of the court. In re Marriage of Geertz, 232 M 141, 755 P2d 34, 45 St. Rep. 942 (1988).

Applicability of Affirmative Defenses to Question of Separate Trials: Affirmative defenses which do not go to the merits of defendant's claim, for example, a defense of a Statute of Limitations or a lack of jurisdiction, may lend themselves to bifurcation, but affirmative defenses which dispute the merits of a claim on issues of fact do not. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Remedy in Contract or in Tort — Motion for Separate Trials: An insurer requested a separate trial on the affirmative defenses raised by cross-claim and requested that the trial of the remaining issues raised by the insured be postponed until after the final determination of the affirmative defenses. The Supreme Court noted that the insured, having a choice of two remedies, one in contract and one in tort, elected to pursue his claim in tort. Recovery by him on his claim in tort would have the effect of barring his claim for breach of contract. If the motion for separate trials had been granted, it would have converted insured's claim for tort to one for breach of contract. Insured would then have been precluded from presenting any evidence as to consequential damages for the tort, let alone any evidence relating to punitive damages. His right to trial by jury of his tort claim, guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., would have been prejudiced. Denial of the motion to bifurcate was proper. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Separate Trials as Abuse of Discretion — No Written Order or Minute Entry on Motion to Bifurcate: The District Court declined to bifurcate a trial so as to determine separately whether the insured intentionally caused a fire and whether the insurer committed a breach of good faith, based on the mistaken impression that a District Court Judge earlier in jurisdiction had denied bifurcation. Although all the parties assumed such an order was made, the record disclosed no order, and the insurer neither procured a written order granting or denying the motion nor caused a minute entry to be made of the disposition of the motion. The Supreme Court found that under the insured's tort claim, the issues of fact regarding the insurer's violations of the Unfair Claims Settlement Act were so inextricably woven with the insurer's claim of arson that their separation would be an abuse of discretion resulting in extended and needless litigation. A trial court cannot be put in error on matters not brought to its attention by notice or otherwise. Section 33-18-241 was held not to apply, both because of the statutory effective date and because this case involved a first-party rather than a third-party claim. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Purpose to Provide Broad Discretion: The purpose of this rule is to provide broad discretion in the District Court in the handling of trial procedures. State ex rel. McGinnis v. District Court, 673 P2d 1207, 40 St. Rep. 1858 (1983) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Timeliness of Motion to Substitute Judge After Severance of Case: On appeal from his conviction for sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant claimed that the District Judge's refusal to grant his motion for substitution of a judge was error. Although he was on notice that a particular judge would preside over the proceedings both before and after the severance of the codefendants' cases, the defense motion was not filed until 52 days after the defense was informed which judge had been assigned to the case. The substitution motion was clearly untimely. The defense urged that the filing of a separate information after severance of a criminal trial revived the right to peremptorily disqualify the judge. The Supreme Court noted no authority for that argument was cited and said it found none to support it. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Limitation of Issues for Trial: It is an abuse of discretion not to order a separate trial on a specific issue where the separate trial would result in convenience and economy of time to the parties and witnesses and to the court and where a determination on the separate trial would end the matter without further proceedings. In re Estate of Monaco, Monaco v. Cecconi, 180 M 111, 589 P2d 156, 36 St. Rep. 113 (1979), followed in E. Livestock Co., Inc. v. O'Neal, 285 M 90, 945 P2d 931, 54 St. Rep. 1058 (1997).

Abuse of Rule: Where there is no danger of prejudice and the issues are not complex, the necessity of separate trials should be carefully weighed to avoid abuse of the rule. Standard Ins. Co. v. Sturdevant, 173 M 23, 566 P2d 52 (1977).

Severance of Action Into Separate Cases: Judge did not abuse his discretion by severing plaintiff's action into three separate cases. State ex rel. Stenberg v. Nelson, 157 M 310, 486 P2d 870 (1971).

Successor Judge — Power to Grant Severance: Disqualification of District Judge did not render his previous ruling denying severance of claims against different defendants res judicata or the law of the case; successor judge could reconsider and grant severance. State ex rel. Stenberg v. Nelson, 157 M 310, 486 P2d 870 (1971).

Separation Denied — Abuse of Discretion: In wrongful death and survival action trial court abused its discretion by denying motion for separate trial on issue of validity of release where separate trials would result in convenience and economy of time to parties, witnesses, and court and since possible finding that release was valid would end matter, trial of complicated issue of wrongful death and survival would be avoided. State ex rel. N. Pac. Ry. v. District Court, 155 M 91, 467 P2d 145 (1970).

Separate Trials — Insurance Matters: There was a manifest abuse of discretion by court in denying a separate trial for insurance company because otherwise prejudice would result by trying all issues in the same trial. State ex rel. Hereim v. District Court, 154 M 112, 460 P2d 755 (1969).

Separate Trial on Counterclaims — Discretion of Court: Grant of separate trial under this section on counterclaims on matters unrelated to plaintiff's complaint was within discretion of District Judge and was not disturbed since no clear abuse of discretion was apparent. State ex rel. Rooks v. District Court, 153 M 189, 456 P2d 308 (1969).

Insurance Coverage — Issue Severed From Federal Case: Federal court dismissed action for declaratory judgment declaring obligations of casualty insurance company under an automobile insurance policy, which allegedly had been canceled prior to the time of the accident involving the automobile of the insured who was being sued for injuries resulting from the accident in the state court, since the issues, which did not involve federal law, could be solved in the state court wherein third-party complaint under Rule 14(a), M.R.Civ.P., had been filed by the insured against the insurer in which insured sought to hold the insurer to the terms of the policy, where state court could dispose of the coverage problem first under this rule. W. Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Pinson, 255 F. Supp. 624 (D.C. Mont. 1966).

Liberal Joinder — Effect Upon: The provisions of this rule adequately protect defendants. Liberal use of joinder, guided by the discretion of trial courts, should therefore be allowed. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Permissive Joinder: Since this rule allows for separate trials, practically, it seems desirable to give the broadest possible reading to the permissive language of Rule 20. Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965).

Former Rule 43(e). Evidence on motions

Venue Properly Based Solely Upon Allegations in Complaint — Affidavits Not Considered — Venue Found Proper for Both Defendants: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. The complaint alleged that Pegasus owned or controlled the mines and that both Pegasus and ZMI did business in Lewis and Clark County, making that county a proper place for venue. ZMI moved to change venue to Phillips County, alleging that Pegasus did not own or control ZMI, and attached affidavits of Fletcher and Erickson to support its motion. Citing Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly relied upon the allegations in the complaint without considering the two affidavits. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Pegasus was a named defendant at the time of the complaint and did business in Lewis and Clark County, that county was proper for venue. The Supreme Court noted that because the motion for change of venue did not refer to or rely upon the Fletcher affidavit, it was properly not considered by the District Court. The Supreme Court also noted that because the Erickson affidavit did not contradict the allegations in the complaint that Pegasus owned or controlled ZMI, the District Court was correct in focusing on the allegations in the complaint. The Supreme Court held that venue was properly found in Lewis and Clark County for both defendants because under the provisions of 25-2-117, a county that is proper venue for one defendant is proper for both. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

District Court's Use of Affidavits and Discovery Material in Its File to Determine Jurisdiction Upheld: Plaintiffs appealed the use of affidavits and discovery material in the court file in the court's determination of whether an employee was acting within the scope of his employment by a certain defendant. The plaintiffs complained that the court's determination amounted to a decision of the defendant's ultimate tort liability, rather than a factual determination of the court's jurisdiction over some defendants. While agreeing that jurisdiction and ultimate liability in tort are not subject to determination by motion where disputes of fact exist, the Supreme Court held that common collateral issues related to the defendant's connection with the tortious act are jurisdictional issues which may be resolved before trial and the trial court's use of affidavits for the purpose was correct under Rules 12(d) and 43(e), M.R.Civ.P. In so holding, the court noted that the discovery materials and affidavits were extensive and that the plaintiffs were given a sufficient opportunity to examine the nonresident defendants through depositions and interrogatories and thereby to develop their argument regarding jurisdiction. Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 190 M 238, 620 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1910 (1980), followed in Grizzly Sec. Armored Express, Inc. v. The Armored Group, LLC, 2011 MT 128, 360 Mont. 517, 255 P.3d 143.

Oral Testimony Proper: Oral testimony is properly within the matters which the court may consider on motions for summary judgment. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Former Rule 44.1. Determination of foreign law

Burden of Proof — Responsibility of Trial Court: Foreign heirs had the burden of proof in proving reciprocity of heirship between state and foreign countries. The determination of reciprocity was a responsibility for which a trial court was well suited. In re Giurgiu, 155 M 18, 466 P2d 83 (1970).

Former Rule 45(a). Form — issuance

No Duty to Appear if No Subpoena Issued: A physician who failed to appear to testify at his patient's trial was not issued a subpoena compelling his attendance. There is no duty for a physician to testify at the trial of a patient, absent compulsory process. Knight v. Johnson, 237 M 230, 773 P2d 293, 46 St. Rep. 760 (1989).

Former Rule 45(b). Service

No Duty to Appear if No Subpoena Issued: A physician who failed to appear to testify at his patient's trial was not issued a subpoena compelling his attendance. There is no duty for a physician to testify at the trial of a patient, absent compulsory process. Knight v. Johnson, 237 M 230, 773 P2d 293, 46 St. Rep. 760 (1989).

Attorney as Witness: This rule does not distinguish between attorney and the layman; if an attorney would not have attended a hearing except for a subpoena, he is entitled to his statutory witness fee and mileage. United Bank of Pueblo v. Iverson, 164 M 473, 525 P2d 21 (1974).

Former Rule 45(c). Protection of persons subject to or affected by subpoenas

No Duty to Appear if No Subpoena Issued: A physician who failed to appear to testify at his patient's trial was not issued a subpoena compelling his attendance. There is no duty for a physician to testify at the trial of a patient, absent compulsory process. Knight v. Johnson, 237 M 230, 773 P2d 293, 46 St. Rep. 760 (1989).

Attorney as Witness: This rule does not distinguish between attorney and the layman; if an attorney would not have attended a hearing except for a subpoena, he is entitled to his statutory witness fee and mileage. United Bank of Pueblo v. Iverson, 164 M 473, 525 P2d 21 (1974).

Former Rule 45(d). Duties in responding to subpoena

Unilateral Cancellation of Deposition by Plaintiff's Attorney — Sanctions Appropriate for Discovery Abuse: Plaintiff's attorney Palmer was directed to appear at a deposition requested by defendant. Palmer objected to the subpoena under Rules 30(d) and 45(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P., and failed to appear for the deposition. The District Court sanctioned Palmer for discovery abuses pursuant to Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., and ordered him to pay defendant's attorney fees and costs. On appeal, Palmer argued that the effect of his objection was to quash the subpoena and suspend the deposition and disclosure of documents until further order of the court. Palmer was mistaken on both issues. Rule 30(d) only contemplates a motion to terminate or limit a deposition during the taking of the deposition. Rule 45(b)(1) provides that a District Court may quash a subpoena, not an attorney. By unilaterally canceling the deposition, Palmer violated the deposition order. When Palmer finally was deposed, he refused to answer any questions unless defendant agreed to his stipulations. The Supreme Court considered the relationship between the sanctions and the extent and nature of the discovery abuse and extent of the prejudice to defendant caused by Palmer's failure to appear at the deposition, in light of Smith v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 276 M 329, 916 P2d 91 (1996). Although the District Court could have taken other actions, such as dismissing the underlying action, the sanctions, though severe, related appropriately to the extent of the discovery abuse and prejudice to defendant and were affirmed absent any showing by Palmer that his failure to comply with the discovery orders was substantially justified. Dambrowski v. Champion Int'l Corp., 2000 MT 149, 300 M 76, 3 P3d 617, 57 St. Rep. 581 (2000). See also Pioche Mines Consol., Inc. v. Dolman, 333 F2d 257 (9th Cir. 1964).

Former Rule 46. Exceptions unnecessary

General Objection to Judicial Notice Insufficient to Preserve Issue on Appeal: Loh was charged with criminal possession of a controlled substance and sought to have her confession suppressed. The District Court denied the motion to suppress, and Loh was tried on the charge. At the trial, the prosecution requested the District Court to take judicial notice of the testimony of several firefighters given at the suppression hearing. The District Court agreed, over Loh's objection, saying that judicial notice of that former testimony was the very purpose contemplated by Rule 201, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Supreme Court held that the general objection made by Loh's counsel at the suppression hearing was an insufficient objection. The Supreme Court also noted that if there was error, it was harmless error and that Loh failed to make a further objection as to the sufficiency of any evidence offered at trial. St. v. Loh, 275 M 460, 914 P2d 592, 53 St. Rep. 226 (1996).

Issues First Raised on Appeal — Exemption From Execution: Issue whether certain items judgment debtor claimed were exempt from execution as necessary for support of his family were in fact not necessary would not be considered on appeal where not raised below. White v. White, 195 M 470, 636 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 2041 (1981).

One Proceeding With Two Hearings — Failure to Object Again — Waiver of Error: In a child abuse and neglect proceeding to terminate parental rights when the father of the youngest child was to have his rights determined a month after a hearing involving the termination of both parents' rights to the 2 elder children, the father of the youngest child waived his right to complain of error on appeal because he failed to object to questions by the judge at the second hearing involving a prior felony conviction, even though objection was made and overruled in the first hearing. In the Matter of T.J.D., J.L.D., and R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212 (1980).

No Appeal on Issue of Joint Venture Not First Raised in District Court: Appellants cannot assert for a matter of review on appeal that their relationship with respondents was that of joint venturers because this issue was not first presented to the District Court and as such cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Mont. Williams Double Diamond v. Royal Village, Inc., 186 M 359, 607 P2d 1120 (1980).

Objections to the Record: The time for defendant to have lodged his objections to the Justice Court record being made was before the appeal was taken. St. v. Tiedemann, 178 M 394, 584 P2d 1284 (1978).

Objections First Raised on Appeal: The issue of failure to appoint counsel for a dependent minor child lacked merit because it was not raised at trial. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

"Plain Error": In adopting the "plain error" doctrine appellate courts have a duty to determine whether the parties before them have been denied substantial justice by the trial court, and when that has occurred they can within sound discretion consider whether the trial court has deprived a litigant of a fair and impartial trial, even though no objection was made to the conduct during the trial. Such was the case when appellant was denied his day in court by the trial judge's recess and failure to reconvene. Halldorson v. Halldorson, 175 M 170, 573 P2d 169 (1977).

Exceptions to Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law: Counsel must point out exceptions to findings of fact and conclusions of law so that the court will have opportunity to correct them. Otherwise they become final and the Supreme Court will not discuss the issues raised. Turner v. Turner, 157 M 262, 484 P2d 1303 (1971); Sorenson v. Lynch, 157 M 116, 483 P2d 907 (1971); State ex rel. Bennett v. Dowdall, 157 M 11, 482 P2d 572 (1971); Smiley v. Dolezilek, 156 M 224, 478 P2d 278 (1970); Stapp v. Nickels, 150 M 220, 434 P2d 141 (1967); Olsen v. United Benefit Life Ins. Co., 150 M 147, 432 P2d 381 (1967); Rozan v. Rosen, 150 M 121, 431 P2d 870 (1967).

Objections to Evidence — Ruling Reserved: Where a party objects to the introduction of evidence the trial court should rule thereon and the ruling should go into the record. Where the court reserves its ruling or admits it subject to the objection, and thereafter in a cause tried without a jury considers it in arriving at its conclusion, it will be held to have impliedly overruled the objection, which ruling is deemed excepted to, and is subject to review on appeal. Gilcrest v. Bowen, 95 M 44, 24 P2d 141 (1933).

Directed Verdict — Exception Unnecessary: An objection and exception to an order granting a motion for a directed verdict were not necessary to warrant review of the order on appeal. Gen. Fire Extinguisher Co. v. NW. Auto Supply Co., 70 M 1, 223 P 504 (1924).

Criminal Cases — Rule Inapplicable: The rule declared by section 93-5502, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), that every ruling or decision of the District Court on the admissibility of evidence shall be deemed excepted to, had reference to civil, not criminal, cases. St. v. Prouty, 60 M 310, 199 P 281 (1921).

Findings of Court: Section 93-5502, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 46, M.R.Civ.P.), providing for automatic exceptions, did not affect sections 93-5305, 93-5306, and 93-5307, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P.), relating to exceptions to findings. Babcock v. Gregg, 55 M 317, 178 P 284 (1918).

Identification of Refused Instruction: Section 93-5502, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 46, M.R.Civ.P.), providing for automatic exceptions was not designed to do away with the necessity of identifying or authenticating, in the transcript on appeal, an instruction which was refused. Roberts v. Sinnott, 54 M 114, 169 P 49 (1917).

Former Rule 47(a). Examination of jurors

Challenge of Juror for Cause — Standard of Review: In clarifying the standard of review applicable to challenge of a juror for cause, the Supreme Court adopted the standard for findings of fact set out in Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. Because factual determinations of juror appropriateness are being made by the trial court, the "clearly erroneous" standard applies to review of a trial court's decision to deny a challenge for cause. The Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the trial court absent a showing that the lower court's findings are clearly erroneous, even if there is evidence in the record to support contrary findings. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991). This standard was applied to criminal cases in St. v. Cope, 250 M 387, 819 P2d 1280, 48 St. Rep. 949 (1991).

Brief Questioning of Prospective Juror Regarding Insurance Employment — Not Error: Two brief questions to one prospective juror about his past work of selling insurance and a question as to whether this would bias his decision did not prejudice the defendant because there was no suggestion that the defendant had liability insurance and the questioning was done in good faith to allow counsel to look for bias or prejudice on the part of a prospective juror as set forth in the general rule of Haynes v. County of Missoula, 163 M 270, 517 P2d 370 (1973). Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986).

General Animosity Toward Defendant in Personal Injury Action — Not Sufficient Grounds for Challenge to Juror for Cause: In a personal injury action against Burlington Northern, Inc. (BN), it was not error for the trial court to refuse to dismiss for cause a juror who testified that he ships grain on BN each year and believes that BN grossly overcharges for shipping when the juror also testified that his feelings toward BN would not prevent him from being fair in this case. Anderson v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 456, 709 P2d 641, 42 St. Rep. 1738 (1985).

Improper Questioning and Excusing of Prospective Jurors by Court Clerk: In depositor's suit against bank, the court's clerks examined the prospective jurors, using questions given the clerks by depositor's counsel, without notice to bank's counsel. The clerks asked if the prospective jurors had business or transactions with the bank and released some prospective jurors based on their answers to the questions, thus excusing them for cause without notice to bank's counsel or a ruling by the court. This occurred before an initial jury panel was called. This action violated the procedure set out in 25-7-221, 25-7-224, and Rules 47(a) and 47(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20); was outside the type of action permitted by 3-15-313; and constituted reversible error requiring a new trial. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Jury Passed for Cause — Partiality Issues Waived: Defendant could not successfully argue that the jury was not fair and impartial when defendant passed the jury for cause. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Voir Dire — Jurors' Beliefs as Taxpayers — Harmless Error: Although taxpayer status is not a ground for juror disqualification, voir dire as to prospective jurors' beliefs, as taxpayers, concerning the financial outcome of a case in which the state is a defendant should be permitted if requested. Failure of the trial court to permit such voir dire is error. However, the error is harmless when the jury returns a verdict for the defendant and does not reach the question of damages. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

Defendant's Challenge of Jurors — Discretion of Judge in Ruling on Challenges: The defendant in a deliberate homicide case appealed his conviction in part on the basis that the trial court erred in denying his challenge to the jury panel as a whole and to one juror in particular. While noting that the right to a trial by an impartial jury is an unqualified one, the Supreme Court said that the pertinent inquiry was whether or not the jury empaneled was able to render an impartial judgment based solely upon the evidence presented at trial. Considering that each juror gave an assurance of impartiality and that the trial judge made cautionary remarks to the jury that they had a duty to lay aside their opinions and impressions, the Supreme Court held that under the circumstances the trial judge did not abuse his discretion by denying the defendant's challenge to the jury panel. With respect to the individual juror, the court noted that the judge had questioned the juror and that she had made it clear that she could put her emotions aside and judge the defendant fairly and solely upon the evidence presented at trial. St. v. Bashor, 188 M 397, 614 P2d 470 (1980).

Advising Trial Court of Questions to Be Asked: The practice of advising the trial court, in the absence of the jury, of questions to be asked, their purpose, and making a showing of good faith, is definitely preferred. Failure to follow such practice may negate a claim of good faith. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Limits on Examination: Although the trial judge may set reasonable limits on the examination, he should permit liberal and probing examination calculated to discover possible bias or prejudice, with due regard for the interests of fairness to both parties. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Purpose of Voir Dire: The purpose of voir dire is to enable counsel to determine the existence of bias and prejudice on the part of prospective jurors and to enable counsel to exercise his peremptory challenges. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Questions Concerning Insurance in Voir Dire: In appropriate cases an attorney upon voir dire may ask prospective jurors whether they have any business relationship with insurance companies and whether they are policyholders of an insurance company involved in the case. Also, upon a proper showing of possible prejudice, an attorney may ask whether a prospective juror has heard or read anything to indicate that jury verdicts for plaintiffs in personal injury cases result in higher insurance premiums for everyone; if so, whether the belief will interfere with the juror's ability to render a fair and impartial verdict. These rules are subject to a showing that counsel is acting in good faith and is not merely trying to impress on the jury the fact that defendant may be covered by insurance. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Former Rule 47(b). Manner of selection and order of examination of jurors

Irregularities in Court Proceedings and Comment by Defense Counsel Concerning "Black Mark" on Defendant's Reputation Improper — New Trial Warranted: In a medical malpractice trial that resulted in the jury finding no negligence on the part of the defendant physician, the District Court abused its discretion by not granting the plaintiff's motion for a new trial when, during closing arguments, defense counsel made statements that a negligence finding could be a "black mark" on the defendant's reputation. The statement was improper and highly prejudicial and warranted a new trial when considered in conjunction with statements made by jurors during voir dire expressing confusion about the preponderance of the evidence standard and that a negligence finding was similar to a "criminal sentence" for a physician. Cooper v. Hanson, 2010 MT 113, 356 Mont. 309, 234 P.3d 59.

Voir Dire Discussion of Plaintiff's Disease, Treatment, and Complications and Prior Summary Judgment on Another Issue: During voir dire in a medical malpractice case, it was not improper for the judge to allow plaintiff's attorney to discuss plaintiff's disease, her past successful treatment, defendant doctor's laser surgery for the disease, the fact that defendant had never before used laser surgery for this disease, the complications from the surgery and plaintiff's current life as a result of the complications, and the fact that the judge had granted summary judgment on the issue of consent to remove plaintiff's hemorrhoid tags during the surgery. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Number of Peremptory Challenges: Under 25-7-224, each party may have four peremptory challenges. "Each party" has been interpreted to mean "each side" unless the position of the codefendants is shown to be "hostile". Here the suits were joined involuntarily, and defendants/respondents in this action have indicated they would seek indemnification from other codefendants. Therefore, the codefendants were found to be hostile, and four peremptory challenges each are permitted. Williams v. Rigler, 234 M 161, 761 P2d 833, 45 St. Rep. 1812 (1988).

Improper Questioning and Excusing of Prospective Jurors by Court Clerk: In depositor's suit against bank, the court's clerks examined the prospective jurors, using questions given the clerks by depositor's counsel, without notice to bank's counsel. The clerks asked if the prospective jurors had business or transactions with the bank and released some prospective jurors based on their answers to the questions, thus excusing them for cause without notice to bank's counsel or a ruling by the court. This occurred before an initial jury panel was called. This action violated the procedure set out in 25-7-221, 25-7-224, and Rules 47(a) and 47(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20); was outside the type of action permitted by 3-15-313; and constituted reversible error requiring a new trial. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Advising Trial Court of Questions to Be Asked: The practice of advising the trial court, in the absence of the jury, of questions to be asked, their purpose, and making a showing of good faith, is definitely preferred. Failure to follow such practice may negate a claim of good faith. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Number of Challenges When Multiple Parties:

Since the record at the time the court entered its ruling is devoid of evidence showing the parties were "hostile", each is entitled to four peremptory challenges. Upon review the court is compelled to take a hindsight approach to the issue and determine from the entire trial record if the appellant was prejudiced. Hunsaker v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation, 179 M 305, 588 P2d 493 (1978).

The court properly allowed each defendant four peremptory challenges since they had interests and defenses antagonistic in fact. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Former Rule 47(c). Alternate jurors

Alternate Juror — Conversation After Jury Retires: A jury alternate returned to the jury room with the jury after the case had been submitted for decision, which defendant contended was reversible error, since 46-16-503 requires an officer of the court to prevent conversations between the jurors and others after the jury retires. The Supreme Court held that an alternate, although excluded from deliberating and voting, is in every other respect a juror; therefore, an alternate does not fall within the statutory ban against conversations with others. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Reversible Error: Although an alternate juror was present for only a short time during jury deliberations, the court was not at liberty to make exceptions to the rule that the alternate is not to join the jury in deliberation, based on time, actual harm, or the fact that the person was an alternate juror, given the solemnity associated with the jury system and the possibility of a loss of faith in that system. Highway Comm'n v. Dunks, 166 M 239, 531 P2d 1316 (1975), distinguished in St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Former Rule 49(a). Special verdicts

General 885
Judgment on Special Verdict 887

GENERAL

Jury's Failure to Answer Interrogatories in Special Verdict — Verdict Upheld: Although the jury failed to answer all of the interrogatories presented to it in the special verdict, the Supreme Court, relying on Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 Mont. 228, 211 P.2d 420 (1949), concluded the verdict was not defective and a new trial was not warranted. The jury sufficiently manifested its apportionment of liability in the special verdict. In addition, the District Court informed the parties that the jury had proceeded to a single question in completing the special verdict and, despite receiving this notice, the party claiming error did not object or poll the jury, thereby waiving any challenge to the verdict on appeal. United Tool Rental, Inc. v. Riverside Contracting, Inc., 2011 MT 213, 361 Mont. 493, 260 P.3d 156.

Jury Question Concerning Amount of Damages in Injury Case — Use of Special Verdict Form Not Abuse of Discretion: Ele alleged that he was injured in a motor vehicle accident for which Ehnes admitted liability. In the pretrial order, Ehnes agreed that the sole issue of fact at trial was the amount of Ele's accident-related injury and damage claims. The first question on the District Court's verdict form stated that Ehnes had admitted responsibility for the accident and asked if Ele was injured as a result. The jury said no and returned the verdict. Ele contended that the verdict form was inconsistent with instructions on negligence because it did not ask if Ehnes' conduct was the cause of damages. Ele also asserted that the verdict form should not have included the question of whether he was injured because the amount of injury was the only question for trial. The Supreme Court considered whether the District Court abused its discretion and decided that it did not. Causation was in fact the first issue posed in the instruction, and inclusion of that issue did not conflict with the pretrial order. The use of the term "accident-related" in the pretrial order confirmed that the issue remaining for trial was not merely the amount of Ele's damages, but the amount of damages caused by and related to the accident. Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003), distinguished in Reis v. Luckett, 2015 MT 337, 381 Mont. 490, 362 P.3d 632.

Special Verdict Form in Subdivision Case Upheld Against Claim It Was Confusing and Biased Against Defendant: A special verdict form presented the issues fairly and submitted the ultimate questions of fact clearly. It was not confusing and did not present the plaintiff's theories in a biased manner. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in the use of the form. The form had asked whether the city acted arbitrarily or capriciously when it did not timely act on an application for preliminary plat approval, when it used the wrong regulations to approve the application subject to conditions that included unlawful conditions, when it approved a subdivision improvements agreement subject to conditions, and when it denied the application and failed to issue written findings explaining the denial. Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

Inconsistencies in Answers on Special Verdict Form — Reversal Not Warranted: Defendants contended that internally inconsistent answers on a special verdict form required a reversal of the verdict. Upon review, the Supreme Court found that evidence introduced at trial qualified questions of breach of covenant that had led to the inconsistent answers and that the defendants' counterclaims included several separate theories. Any inconsistencies in the jury's verdict were insufficient to warrant reversal. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 269 M 150, 887 P2d 260, 51 St. Rep. 1530 (1994).

Court Discretion in Use of Special Verdict Form: Defendant contended an abuse of discretion by a trial court that opted to use a simple general verdict form rather than the form proposed by defendant, which the court declined as being too argumentative and confusing. The use of a special verdict form is discretionary with the court. In this case, the court did not abuse its discretion because the general verdict form, in combination with the court's instructions, adequately presented all relevant issues to the jury without the danger of confusion that could have been caused by the use of defendant's form. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994), followed in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Offset for Advanced Wage Benefits Proper Even Though No Apportionment Between General Damages and Wage Loss in Jury Verdict: At the close of trial, Burlington Northern objected to a verdict form that would have itemized the nature of the damages awarded by the jury. The lower court refused to grant the railroad an offset against the judgment for advanced wage benefits paid to the plaintiff. On appeal, plaintiff's attorney argued that the offset should not be granted because the form of the verdict made it impossible to determine what, if any, amounts were awarded by the jury for wage loss. The Supreme Court held that, by logical deduction, some of the award was for wage loss and remanded the case to the lower court for a determination of the amount of offsets to which Burlington Northern was entitled. Cottrell v. Burlington N. RR Co., 261 M 296, 863 P2d 381, 50 St. Rep. 1323 (1993).

Court Amending Special Verdict Not Error: The jury returned a special verdict, finding that the defendant had breached a car purchase contract and that the plaintiff had acted reasonably in repossessing and reselling the vehicle. The verdict awarded the plaintiff only $22 for the notice of sale publication costs. The lower court amended the verdict to include court costs, attorney fees, and the balance due under the contract. The Supreme Court held that amending the verdict was not error because once the jury decided that the plaintiff had acted in a commercially reasonable manner, a judgment for any deficiency followed as a matter of law. Sportco, Inc. v. Thompson, 247 M 379, 806 P2d 1039, 48 St. Rep. 236 (1991).

Error to Allow Jury to Consider Claim Unsupported by Law or Fact: In rejecting plaintiff's argument that requiring a general verdict form is within the discretion of the trial court pursuant to this rule, the Supreme Court held that it is error for a trial court to allow a jury to consider a claim unsupported by either law or facts; it may allow only those claims supported by the evidence to go to the jury. If different theories of the same case are placed before a jury, it is impossible to know upon which the general verdict is made to depend. R.H. Grover, Inc. v. Flynn Ins. Co., 238 M 278, 777 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 1266 (1989).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Instructions on Equity Claims Refused: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The rule that a party is entitled to jury instructions adaptable to his theory of the case is not absolute. The instructions must be supported by credible evidence. Plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. The District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on estoppel and laches or to include those issues in the special verdict form for the jury. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Conflict Between Special Verdict Form and Jury Instructions — Damage Award Justified: Defendant contended the special verdict form was inherently contradictory with jury instructions in allowing the jury to fix a verdict based on a breach of contract when the court had instructed the jury on the tort measure of damages. The Supreme Court found no merit in the issue because: (1) instructions on breach of contract damages were withdrawn by defendant during settlement of instructions; (2) instructions given were substantially modified to include the essential elements for breach of contract damages; and (3) no harm was done because damages were clearly ascertainable and would have been the same in any event. Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Special Interrogatories on Tort and Breach of Contract Claims — Award Under Each Theory Unclear — Remand: A District Court judgment on a special verdict based on jury findings of damages, both for breach of contract and for tort, was remanded because the special interrogatories did not state which acts were to be considered under each theory; therefore, the verdict on tort claims was unclear as to which damages were cumulative to contract damages and which were alternative. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986).

Special Verdict Form Disregarding Conflict of Evidence — Fatally Deficient: A special verdict form that presented the issue of breach of contract in terms that adopted defendants' view of substantial disputed facts rather than leaving the factual determination of the nature of the agreement to the jury was found fatally inadequate and was subject to remand and a new trial. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986).

Conflicting Special Verdicts — New Trial Ordered: After becoming stuck in a snowdrift on the highway, the plaintiff got out of his vehicle to shovel it out, leaving his son in the vehicle. Plaintiff was injured and his son was killed when their vehicle was struck by defendant's truck. The jury found that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries but not the son's death. Because two conflicting verdicts were reached from the same evidence, a new trial was required. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982).

Refusal to Allow Special Verdict — No Error on Review Where No Prejudice Shown: Error was not found in the lower court's refusal to allow jury to return a general verdict where special findings and verdict could not have prejudiced the complaining party. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Objection Must Be Specific — Motion for Special Verdict Must Be Made: When party never specifically objected to submission of adversary's proposed verdict to jury and did not move for special verdict, Supreme Court would not consider alleged errors on appeal. Kirby v. Kelley, 161 M 66, 504 P2d 683 (1972).

Discretion of Court: The court may in its discretion submit to the jury a particular question of fact, and require them to find upon it; but it is not bound to do so. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937); Poor v. Madison River Power Co., 41 M 236, 108 P 645 (1910); Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co., 38 M 143, 99 P 142 (1909). See also Michalsky v. Centennial Brewing Co., 48 M 1, 134 P 307 (1913).

Separation of Awards: Where in an action by a number of plaintiffs to recover on an injunction bond they in their prayer asked for judgment in a lump sum and but one judgment was recoverable, trial court did not err in refusing to submit the defendant surety company's proposed special verdict requiring the jury to set out the separate amounts awarded to each plaintiff. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937).

Indecisive Verdict: A verdict is bad which is not responsive to and decisive upon every material issue submitted to the jury. Hickey v. Breen, 40 M 368, 106 P 881 (1910); Hamilton v. Murray, 29 M 80, 74 P 75 (1903); McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899). See also Olcott v. Gebo, 54 M 35, 166 P 300 (1917); Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Special Verdict as Recommended Procedure: The practice of more frequently instructing juries to find upon particular questions of fact is recommended; thereby, the necessity for granting new trials would be greatly diminished, and much unnecessary expense and delay be avoided. O'Meara v. McDermott, 40 M 38, 104 P 1049 (1909).

Divorce Proceedings: Special findings may be properly submitted to and passed upon by the jury in a divorce suit. Morrison v. Morrison, 14 M 8, 35 P 1 (1894).

JUDGMENT ON SPECIAL VERDICT

Proposed Special Verdict Preserves Objection for Appeal: The defendant did not specifically object to the plaintiff's special verdict form that did not require the jury to find that either party had breached the contract. The Supreme Court held that the defendant's proposed special verdict form had contained a reference to a breach of contract and that this was sufficient to preserve the defendant's right to appeal the verdict form submitted to the jury. Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767, 47 St. Rep. 850 (1990).

Adequacy of Special Verdict — Standard Applied: In determining the adequacy of a special verdict form, the Supreme Court applied a three-part standard as outlined in Kinjerski v. Lamey, 194 M 38, 635 P2d 566, 38 St. Rep. 1703 (1981). The instructions must: (1) when read as a whole and in conjunction with the general charge adequately present the contested issues to the jury; (2) fairly submit the issues to the jury; and (3) clearly submit to the jury the ultimate questions of fact. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988). The Kinjerski standard was applied in Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), and Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999). Story was followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994), and Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Amending Special Verdict Form Several Hours After Jury Deliberations Began — Error: After several hours of deliberation, the jury returned with questions. In response to those questions, it was error for the court to amend the special verdict forms to include a determination by the jury as to whether a party acted willfully or wantonly. Although the instruction would not have been error if given at the proper time, the late inclusion denied the party the right to argue his case and properly present it before the jury. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Negligence Special Verdict Form — Harmless Error on Strict Liability Instruction: Plaintiff contended that it was error for the trial court to give a particular instruction as he contended it was an incomplete and misleading statement of the law of strict liability. The Supreme Court held that any alleged error was harmless because the plaintiff did not object to a special verdict form that required the jury to decide the case on negligence alone. Kleinsasser v. Superior Derrick Serv., Inc., 218 M 371, 708 P2d 586, 42 St. Rep. 1662 (1985). See also Drilcon, Inc. v. Roil Energy Corp., Inc., 230 M 166, 749 P2d 1058, 45 St. Rep. 114 (1988).

Manner of Determining Judgment: A special verdict should find all the facts which are necessary to enable the court to determine by the consideration of the pleadings and the verdict alone which party is by law entitled to a judgment, without reference to the evidence. Kinjerski v. Lamey, 194 M 38, 635 P2d 566, 38 St. Rep. 1703 (1981), distinguished in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988); Coburn Cattle Co. v. Small, 35 M 288, 88 P 953 (1907), distinguished in Glick v. Knoll, 136 M 176, 346 P2d 987 (1959).

Judgment Conditioned on Special Verdict: Since the District Court is authorized in all cases to direct the jury to find a special verdict in writing upon all or any of the issues in a case, it may properly predicate its judgment upon such a verdict. Tannhauser v. Shea, 88 M 562, 295 P 268 (1930).

Court's Duty to Render Judgment: When the court has submitted special findings and the jury has rendered a special verdict, it then becomes the duty of the court to render the proper judgment. McDonald v. Klenze, 52 M 142, 157 P 175 (1916).

Verdict Insufficient to Warrant Judgment: A special verdict is insufficient to warrant judgment, where such verdict fails to find all the facts necessary to enable the court to determine by a consideration of the pleadings and the verdict alone which party is by law entitled to a judgment, without reference to the evidence. Coburn Cattle Co. v. Small, 35 M 288, 88 P 953 (1907).

Former Rule 49(b). General verdict accompanied by answer to interrogatories

GENERAL

Interrogatories — Discretion of Court: A submission of interrogatories to the jury is within the sound discretion of the District Court and a refusal to submit such interrogatories cannot be predicated as error unless it is a clear abuse of discretion. Teesdale v. Anschutz Drilling Co., 138 M 427, 357 P2d 4 (1960).

Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Improper: It is not permissible in this state to move for a judgment non obstante veredicto in a law case. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Verdict Accepted — New Trial as Remedy: After a case has been submitted to the jury and a verdict returned, accepted, and filed at the direction of the court and the jury discharged from the case, the only way to reach the verdict, if insufficient or against the law, is by a timely and proper motion for a new trial. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Separation of Awards — Joint Tortfeasors: In the absence of statute authorizing a jury to apportion compensatory damages against joint tortfeasors, damages must be assessed in one sum against those found liable. But where the jury in its verdict finds a lump sum and then attempts to divide it among certain of the defendants, the division should be stricken out as surplusage and judgment entered for the lump sum, or the verdict should be sent back to the jury with instruction to correct it. The jury may apportion exemplary damages between joint tortfeasors if actual damages have been assessed. Bowman v. Lewis, 110 M 435, 102 P2d 1 (1940), overruled in part in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d at 426 (1949).

General Verdict Finding on Issues: A general verdict in favor of a party is a finding on every material fact properly submitted to the jury for its consideration. The universal rule being that where the verdict finds the issues in favor of a particular party, such finding necessarily includes all issues raised by the pleadings. Gilmore v. Mulvihill, 109 M 601, 98 P2d 335 (1940).

Claim and Delivery — General Verdict Sufficient: A general verdict alone is sufficient in an action in claim and delivery if the issues warrant it. Dalke v. Pancoast, 63 M 524, 208 P 589 (1922).

Sufficient Verdict — Power of Court to Strike: After a verdict which was neither informal nor insufficient had been received and recorded, the trial court had no power to order it stricken from the files and direct the jury to return another, its authority over it being limited to setting it aside upon proper motion for a new trial. Lish v. Martin, 55 M 582, 179 P 826 (1919).

Interrogatories as Recommended Procedure: The submission of special interrogatories to the jury is a matter addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. The observance of the practice, rather than constituting error, is to be commended as tending to promote justice. Rairden v. Hedrick, 46 M 510, 129 P 498 (1913).

Incomplete Verdict — Judgment Improper: A verdict is bad if it varies from the issues in a substantial matter, or if it finds only a part of that which is in issue. Whether the jury finds a general or a special verdict, it is their duty to decide the very point in issue; and, although the court in which the cause is tried may give form to a general finding, so as to make it harmonize with the issue, yet if it appears to that court, or to the appellate court, that the finding is different from the issue, or is confined to a part only of the matter in issue, no judgment can be rendered upon the verdict. Hickey v. Breen, 40 M 368, 106 P 881 (1910); Hamilton v. Murray, 29 M 80, 74 P 75 (1903).

Chance Verdict — Requirement of Amendment Improper: Where, upon the polling of the jury in a personal injury case, the court inquires whether the verdict for the plaintiff has been reached by chance and several of the jurors answering in the affirmative, the court then directs them to retire and find a verdict by "deliberation and reasoning", and to exclude the element of chance, the action of the court is unauthorized. The verdict returned should have been received, subject to be set aside only upon application under 25-11-102. Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1908).

Forcible Detainer — Required Findings: In forcible detainer a verdict is defective which fails to find that defendant detained the property. McCleary v. Crowley, 22 M 245, 56 P 227 (1899).

Discharge of Jury: When a verdict is rendered and recorded, and the jury discharged, the jury is functus officio. Prior to that time the verdict is in the control of the jury in some respects, but after those events the province of the jury is exhausted. Morris v. Burke, 15 M 214, 38 P 1065 (1895); In re Thompson, 9 M 381, 23 P 933 (1890).

Debt Admitted — Amount of Award Admitted: A verdict in favor of plaintiff is sufficient without stating the amount awarded, where the answer admitted the indebtedness and amount thereof, and the only denial was that the debt was not yet due. Josephi v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1893).

CORRECTION OF VERDICT

Verdict for Both Parties: Where the court in its original instruction told the jury it could find but one verdict and the jury returned with a verdict for the plaintiff and also one for the defendant for a lesser amount, the court was correct in sending the jury back for further deliberation and requiring but one verdict. Baranko v. Grenz, 127 M 18, 256 P2d 1074 (1953).

Two Defendants — Unclear Verdict: Where two defendants were charged with larceny, but only one was tried and the verdict found the defendant "in the above entitled cause" guilty without naming him, the court did not err in sending the jury back to the jury room for a correction of their verdict in this regard. St. v. Semmens, 105 M 113, 71 P2d 913 (1937).

Change in Substance Improper: The plain purpose of permitting the correction of verdicts is to prevent the receipt of informal or insufficient verdicts. It does not extend to matters going to the substance that do not appear upon their face. If a verdict covers the issue and is complete on its face, the court must receive it. Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1908). See also State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

Existing Principles Declared: The statute permitting correction of verdicts is to some extent rather a declaration of existing principles than the introduction of any wholly new principles or doctrine. Morris v. Burke, 15 M 214, 38 P 1065 (1895).

Insufficient Damages — Remedy: The practice of permitting correction of verdicts is to prevent irregular, informal, and insufficient verdicts from being received and recorded, and is not to be extended so far as to authorize the court to refuse to receive a verdict for the plaintiff for a sum less than that claimed by him on the ground that, under the evidence, if the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict at all it must be for the full amount claimed. The proper remedy in the latter case is to have the verdict set aside on motion for a new trial. Morris v. Burke, 15 M 214, 38 P 1065 (1895). See also State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

INCONSISTENT VERDICT AND FINDINGS

Findings Authorized and Controlling: The trial court is authorized in any case, in its discretion, to instruct the jury to find upon particular questions of fact, though they are required to render a general verdict. The trial court is required, when a special finding is inconsistent with the general verdict, to recognize the finding as controlling, and to give judgment accordingly. Johnson v. Butte Alex Scott Copper Co., 51 M 126, 149 P 717 (1915).

Special Findings Inconsistent — Defendant Entitled to Judgment: Where, in an action for injuries from a premature explosion of dynamite alleged to be due to using stronger explosives than proper or customary, without warning plaintiff, the jury returned a general verdict for plaintiff and found specially that plaintiff had been warned, that he knew the stronger powder was used, and that the use of such powder was proper, the special findings were inconsistent with the general verdict, and the defendant was entitled to judgment upon such findings. Johnson v. Butte Alex Scott Copper Co., 51 M 126, 149 P 717 (1915).

Personal Injury — Special Finding Controlling: Special findings in a personal injury case control the general verdict. Mitchell v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 37 M 575, 97 P 1033 (1908).

Special Finding Controlling: The court may not set aside a special finding and enter judgment on the general verdict, but must enter judgment on the special finding, leaving it to the defeated party to pursue his remedy by a motion for a new trial. Martin v. Butte, 34 M 281, 86 P 264 (1906).

Former Rule 50. Judgment as a matter of law in actions tried by jury; alternative motion for new trial; conditional rulings

Federal Employers' Liability Act — Failure to Preserve Objection to Instruction on Mitigation of Damages: Vincent filed a Federal Employers' Liability Act claim against defendant employer. The trial court concluded that defendant met its burden of production with respect to mitigation of damages, and the court proceeded to instruct the jury on mitigation. Vincent objected to the jury instructions on grounds that there was insufficient evidence to support the instruction but failed to offer any proposed instructions concerning mitigation or to object to the instruction on grounds of inadequacy. The Supreme Court agreed that there was sufficient evidence to warrant a mitigation instruction and therefore declined to address Vincent's arguments on appeal regarding adequacy of the instruction. Vincent v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 57, 355 Mont. 348, 228 P.3d 1123.

Credible Evidence That Employer Breached Employment Contract Allowing Purchase of Subdivision Lot — Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law Properly Denied: As part of his employment contract, West was allowed to purchase a subdivision lot at a reduced price, and West chose a lot and contracted for its purchase. As part of West's claim that the employer breached the employment contract, West asserted that the employer had also breached the property purchase agreement. The jury agreed. After trial, the employer moved for judgment as a matter of law on West's claim, arguing that the employer could not have breached the contract to sell the lot because the lot was actually owned by a separate, affiliated company and not the employer. The District Court denied the motion, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. There was credible evidence that the employer breached the contract to allow West to purchase the lot, so the District Court did not err in allowing the issue to be submitted to the jury or by denying the employer's posttrial motion. West v. The Club at Spanish Peaks, LLC, 2008 MT 183, 343 M 434, 186 P3d 1228 (2008).

No Duty of Volunteer Fire Department to Direct Traffic During "Boot Drive" Fundraiser: The Laurel Volunteer Fire Department sponsored a Fourth of July fireworks display for the benefit of the community, which included a "boot drive" fundraiser to help raise money for the display. The fundraiser entailed fire department personnel standing near the edge of the road while holding a cowboy boot and inviting people driving by to contribute by throwing money or checks into the boot. Two fire department personnel conducted a boot drive at an interstate highway exit ramp on the night of July 4, 1994. Jacobs and Coates exited the freeway and got in line behind a string of slow-moving vehicles, slowly advancing and then stopping each time that a vehicle went through the stop sign. Bruce exited the freeway behind Jacobs and Coates but did not notice the line of cars until it was too late to avoid a collision. Jacobs and Coates were injured and sued the fire department, claiming that the boot drive caused traffic to build up on the exit ramp and that as the sponsors of the fireworks display, the fire department owed a duty to warn people about and manage the traffic. The District Court granted the fire department's motion in limine and dismissed the action as a matter of law, concluding that no causation existed between the accident and the boot drive. Jacobs and Coates appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Citing Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35 (1998), the court noted that a judicial determination of duty involves various policy considerations, including: (1) the moral blame attributable to the defendant's conduct; (2) the prevention of future harm; (3) the extent of the burden placed on the defendant; (4) the consequences to the public of imposing that duty; and (5) the availability of insurance for the risk involved. Although a duty may have been owed by the fire department to ensure safe passage at the event itself, the fire department had no duty to ensure that every spectator arrived safely at the event. The fire department did not spill anything or block traffic on the freeway, nor did it create a hazardous condition for travelers coming to and from fire department property. Thus, after evaluating the factors regarding duty, the Supreme Court found no duty owed by the fire department to regulate traffic on or around the interstate highway. Further, in order to sustain a negligence claim, Jacobs and Coates needed to prove not only negligence on the part of the fire department but also a causal relationship between that negligence and the injury. Here, Jacobs and Coates offered no evidence of a causal connection between the accident and the boot drive. Neither of them saw fire department personnel at the off ramp or soliciting donations prior to the accident, no witness testified to any negligent behavior by the fire department personnel who conducted the boot drive, and Jacobs and Coates did not even produce a witness who saw the boot drive at all during that evening. Dismissal as a matter of law was therefore proper. Jacobs v. Laurel Volunteer Fire Dept., 2001 MT 98, 305 M 225, 26 P3d 730 (2001).

Evidence of Sex Discrimination Warranting Submission to Jury — Directed Verdict Improper: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. At the close of Allison's case in chief, the court granted the town's motion for a directed verdict on the sex discrimination claim, but declined a similar motion on the age discrimination claim. The court allowed submission of both the age discrimination and disability claims to the jury, which returned a verdict against Allison on both claims. On appeal, Allison argued that the jury should also have been allowed to decide the sex discrimination claim. Motions for directed verdict are properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence to warrant submission to the jury when the evidence is considered in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Here, Allison produced evidence, although minimal, in support of the sex discrimination claim, so the directed verdict on that issue was incorrectly granted. The case was remanded for trial on the sex discrimination claim. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000), followed in DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Appeal of Order Granting or Denying Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law — Standard of Review: The Supreme Court standard of review of appeals from District Court orders granting or denying motions for judgment as a matter of law is identical to that of the District Court. Judgment as a matter of law is properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence that would justify submitting an issue to a jury. All evidence and any legitimate inferences that might be drawn from the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998). Hydro Flame was followed in Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Time of Discovery of Injury Because of Childhood Sexual Abuse as Jury Question — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Substantial conflicts in the evidence existed regarding the time at which plaintiff discovered that her mental disorders were connected to sexual abuse that she experienced as a child. It is within the province of the jury to resolve conflicting evidence; therefore, the District Court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict based on the time bar in 27-2-216. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Good Cause — Sufficient Evidence of Wrongful Discharge to Preclude Directed Verdict: Evidence that employee was performing a job satisfactorily when discharged provided a possible motive for termination for other than good cause, warranting submission of a wrongful discharge claim to the jury and precluding a directed verdict. Guertin v. Moody's Market, Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994), following Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303 (1986).

Inducement to Purchase Property Based on Promise of Road Improvements — Directed Verdict Improper:

Following a trial subsequent to Dew, infra., the District Court determined that defendant did fraudulently induce plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property and further awarded monetary damages to each plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended, among other things, that the trial court erred in admitting, without first requiring plaintiffs to prove intent to defraud, parol evidence that defendant orally promised to improve the road and also erred in determining that defendant intended to defraud plaintiffs by inducing them to enter into contracts for deed. However, defendant waived the right to appeal the parol evidence question by failing to object at trial, and substantial evidence that defendant had no intention to perform the promises to improve the road was sufficient to prove defendant's intent to defraud. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993).

Plaintiffs claimed they were fraudulently induced to enter contracts to purchase land when seller orally promised to improve access roads to county grade. The District Court granted defendants a directed verdict, relying on Kelly v. Ellis, 39 M 597, 104 P 873 (1909), in holding that when there was no allegation of failure to keep all promises made in the written agreement, the statute of frauds precluded admission of evidence of an oral promise directly related to the contents of the contract. However, plaintiffs relied on a certificate of survey that showed county grade easements, a letter from defendants' attorney agreeing to hold a title insurance company harmless from any claims arising from purchasers' access problems, and the representation by a realtor that roads would be upgraded to county road standards. These representations constituted a conflict in evidence precluding directed verdict, and the District Court erred in taking from the jury the issue of whether plaintiffs were fraudulently induced to enter the contracts. Dew v. Dower, 237 M 476, 774 P2d 989, 46 St. Rep. 981 (1989), following Majers v. Shining Mtn., 230 M 373, 750 P2d 449, 45 St. Rep. 283 (1988), Majers v. Shining Mtn., 219 M 366, 711 P2d 1375, 43 St. Rep. 16 (1986), Dodds v. Gibson Prod. Co., 181 M 373, 593 P2d 1022 (1979), and Goggans v. Winkley, 154 M 451, 465 P2d 326 (1970).

Evidence of Fraud — Support for Jury Verdict: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, there was sufficient evidence to support submitting the issue of the seller's fraud to the jury and to support the jury's verdict against the seller. The trial court did not err in denying the seller's motion for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Sale of Real Estate — Motion Improperly Denied: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the plaintiff purchasers relied upon the realtor's representations concerning the property because he held himself out as an experienced investment analyst. The realtor did not try to confirm the seller's representations concerning the property. The purchasers provided sufficient evidence of the realtor's negligence and constructive fraud to require that the issues be presented to the jury. The trial court erred in granting a directed verdict as to the realtor. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Evidence of Jury Issues — No Directed Verdict: An insurer contended District Court Judge erred in not granting its motion for directed verdict so as to relieve it from extracontractual damages and for liability on its implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. A motion for directed verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury. Had the insurer relied on admissible circumstantial evidence and promptly denied the claim, the Supreme Court would have been constrained to hold that the insured was not entitled to extracontractual or punitive damages. However, the court found at least eight elements in the handling of the claim that made a jury issue of whether the insurer breached its duty of fair dealing. Noting that the jury had been properly instructed on the issue of good faith, no error was found in denying the motion for directed verdict. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986), followed in Head v. Cent. Reserve Life of N. America Ins. Co., 256 M 188, 845 P2d 735, 50 St. Rep. 20 (1993).

GENERAL

Judgment as Matter of Law Improper — Locomotive Inspection Act Claim: The District Court erred in granting the railroad's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the injured railroad employee's Locomotive Inspection Act claim when the evidence presented at trial indicated the locomotive was not performing properly and the locomotive's failure created an unnecessary danger of carbon monoxide exposure to the employee. Weber v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 223, 362 Mont. 53, 261 P.3d 984.

Question of Good Cause for Terminating Employee — Judgment as Matter of Law Reversible Error: Johnson was terminated for violating Costco's zero tolerance "If you didn't buy it, don't eat it" grazing policy after taking a bite of a salvage Danish pastry. Johnson brought a wrongful discharge suit alleging that: (1) Costco did not have good cause for the termination; (2) the reason for the termination was actually a pretext for Costco's desire to terminate long-term, higher paid employees to save money; and (3) Costco violated the express provisions of its own personnel policy. The District Court granted judgment as a matter of law for Costco on all issues, and Johnson appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed on the pretext and personnel policy issues for lack of evidence, but reversed on the good cause issue because another employee who had been observed in violation of the grazing policy after Johnson's termination had not been discharged, so a jury might have concluded that the grazing policy was applied arbitrarily with regard to Johnson. Johnson v. Costco Wholesale, 2007 MT 43, 336 M 105, 152 P3d 727 (2007).

Standard of Review on Question of Grant or Denial of Judgment as Matter of Law — De Novo Review: The Supreme Court resolved the inconsistencies in lines of cases regarding the applicable standard of review of appeals from District Court orders granting or denying motions for judgment as a matter of law. The court will no longer apply an abuse of discretion standard of review, but will henceforth treat review of such trial court decisions as legal questions and apply a de novo or plenary standard of review. Johnson v. Costco Wholesale, 2007 MT 43, 336 M 105, 152 P3d 727 (2007), overruling Wallin v. Kinyon Estate, 164 M 160, 519 P2d 1236 (1974), Davis v. Sheriff, 234 M 126, 762 P2d 221 (1988), Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263 (1992), Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994), Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38 (2000), In re Mental Health of D.L.T., 2003 MT 46, 314 M 297, 67 P3d 189 (2003), Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004), and Somont Oil Co. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2006 MT 90, 332 M 56, 137 P3d 536 (2006), and any similar case to the extent that those cases applied the abuse of discretion standard of review.

Failure to Instruct Jury on Greater Duty of Care in Situation of Greater Danger — Reversible Error: The Schuffs were injured while riding in Jackson's boat when Jackson failed to negotiate a submerged rock formation that he knew was there. Jackson admitted error during operation of the boat but maintained that his conduct nevertheless conformed to that of an ordinary prudent boater under the same or similar circumstances. The jury found that Jackson was not negligent, and the Schuffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed. The fact that Jackson admitted error did not establish negligence per se. Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that Jackson was operating the boat in a manner consistent with other ordinarily prudent boaters under the same circumstances. Further, the Schuffs failed to timely object to Jackson's interjection of the defenses of unavoidable accident and assumption of risk, so motion for a new trial was properly denied on those grounds. However, the Supreme Court found that the jury instructions did not include information regarding the possible greater duty of care in situations in which the danger is known to be greater or on Jackson's statutory duty not to operate the boat at a speed greater than would permit stopping the boat within an assured clear distance. Failure to properly instruct the jury was prejudicial error, so the case was remanded for a new trial. Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002), followed in Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004).

On remand, the jury in a new trial again found that Jackson did not violate 23-2-523 by failing to operate his boat in a reasonable and prudent manner, and again Schuff appealed. However, the Supreme Court affirmed because even though Schuff was given a full opportunity to make her case, she was unable to muster the necessary evidence to overcome the defense. The jury was properly instructed on Jackson's duty of care, and the trial court did not err in allowing Jackson's expert witnesses to testify regarding the safest way to navigate the area in question. Schuff v. Jackson, 2008 MT 81, 342 M 156, 179 P3d 1169 (2008).

No Complete Absence of Credible Evidence to Support Jury Award of Damages in Wrongful Discharge Case — Denial of Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law Proper: A jury awarded Casiano damages for wrongful discharge from employment. Defendant employer moved for judgment as a matter of law or a new trial on grounds that the damage award was based on the assumption that Casiano would have remained employed for 4 years had he not been wrongfully discharged, while uncontroverted evidence at trial showed that Casiano would have been laid off with all other hourly employees at the end of a particular construction project. Casiano asserted that contradictory evidence was presented regarding whether employment would have continued after the project was completed. In its order, the District Court agreed with defendant, but nevertheless denied the motion because it could not be said that there was a complete absence of credible evidence to support the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court agreed and affirmed. Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002).

Erroneous Conclusion That Elements of Malicious Prosecution by State Not Established — Judgment as Matter of Law Improper: Plaintiffs were cited by the state for various water quality violations related to their public swimming pools, drinking water, and discharge from a sewage lagoon. The charges were ultimately dropped, and both plaintiffs filed separate actions that were settled, except for plaintiffs' malicious prosecution claims against the state, which were joined for trial by jury. At the close of plaintiffs' case, the state's motion for judgment as a matter of law was granted, so plaintiffs appealed. As set out in Orser v. St., 178 M 126, 582 P2d 1227 (1978), in a civil action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must introduce sufficient proof of the following elements: (1) a judicial proceeding has been commenced and prosecuted against the plaintiff; (2) the defendant was responsible for litigating, prosecuting, or continuing the proceeding; (3) there is lack of probable cause for the defendant's acts; (4) the defendant was actuated by malice; (5) the proceeding terminated in favor of the plaintiff; and (6) the plaintiff suffered damages. Here, the District Court found that plaintiffs had not met their burden of proof regarding elements three, four, and five. The Supreme Court examined each of those elements—lack of probable cause, malice, and favorable termination of the underlying suit—and concluded that the elements were met, warranting reversal for trial on the merits. Judgment as a matter of law averts trial by jury and is proper only in rare cases when undisputed evidence admits of only one conclusion. Although the proceedings to date in this case did not demonstrate guilt or innocence, plaintiffs nevertheless made out a prima facie case that warranted jury determination. Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), following McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979), Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126 (1982), Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), and followed in Seipel v. Olympic Coast Investments, 2008 MT 237, 344 M 415, 188 P3d 1027 (2008).

Sufficient Evidence That Damages Not Result of State Negligence to Submit Case to Jury — Judgment as Matter of Law Not Appropriate: Pula sued in federal court, alleging negligence against the city of Chinook, Blaine County, three Chinook police officers, the County Sheriff, and the state, related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. All the claims were settled except the claim against the state, which was dismissed and subsequently refiled in state District Court. At trial, Pula moved for judgment as a matter of law, contending that the state presented no admissible evidence to counter the claims of duty, breach, causation, and damages. The District Court denied the motion and sent the case to the jury. The jury found that the state was negligent, but that its negligence was not the cause of Pula's injuries. Pula appealed the denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The state presented substantial evidence that the damages suffered by Pula were not the result of the state's negligent acts or omissions, and the evidence was sufficient to submit the case to the jury, so judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002).

Termination of Employment for Legitimate Business Reasons Insufficient Basis for Judgment as Matter of Law: As set out in Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), a motion for judgment as a matter of law may be granted only if it appears that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate references that can be drawn from the evidence, and there is a complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to a jury. In this case, an employer maintained that its employee was terminated for legitimate business reasons and evidence existed to support that contention, but that did not constitute a sufficient basis for judgment as a matter of law in light of other evidence submitted by the employee tending to show that the termination was not for legitimate business reasons. Denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law was proper. Braulick v. Hathaway Meats, Inc., 1999 MT 57, 294 M 1, 980 P2d 1, 56 St. Rep. 241 (1999).

Agricultural Lease — Failure to Pay Lease Price for Grain Produced — No Evidence of Conversion — Judgment as Matter of Law Properly Granted: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens under an agricultural lease. The lease required Stephens to pay the Schumachers $40,000 plus one-third of the proceeds of the sale of a crop if the value of the crop exceeded $120,000. For 1993, Stephens paid the Schumachers the required $40,000 but contended that no additional money was due to the Schumachers because one-third of the total crop receipts was less than the $43,000 (the lease price plus an additional $3,000 advance for the 1994 crop year) that Stephens had already paid. The Schumachers sued, alleging conversion and breach of contract and contending that Stephens actually grew more grain than he claimed. The District Court granted Stephens' motion for judgment as a matter of law on the conversion claims. The Supreme Court reviewed the record, including Federal Crop Insurance reports, testimony by others who had been on the property, reports on the amount of grain in the grain bins used by Stephens, testimony by the Schumachers' neighbors, and other testimony, and found that the quantum of evidence showing that the actual amount of grain produced was, as Stephens claimed, overwhelming and would have required the jury to engage in speculation if it were to hold otherwise. The Supreme Court said that even considering the evidence in the light most favorable to the Schumachers, the jury would have had to go beyond reasonable and legitimate inferences to find in the Schumachers' favor and that the Schumachers did not present any evidence that Stephens produced any additional grain, that he exercised any dominion or control over any additional grain, or that the Schumachers were damaged by that unauthorized dominion. For these reasons, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment as a matter of law granted by the District Court. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Absence of Proof of Open Range or Fenced Highway — Directed Verdict Improper: Indendi hit a horse on Highway 84, killing the animal, sustaining personal injuries, and totaling her vehicle. She alleged negligence on the part of the horse owner as well as violations of fencing and livestock herding laws and open-range exceptions. The horse owner counterclaimed for loss of the horse. The District Court directed a verdict in favor of the horse owner. A directed verdict may be granted only when it appears that the nonmoving party cannot recover on any view of the evidence, including the legitimate inferences drawn from that evidence. Absent proof that the land was open range and that Highway 84 was a fenced highway, it was improper for the court to direct a verdict premised on the horse owner's satisfaction of the duty exclusion in 60-7-202(2). Indendi v. Workman, 272 M 64, 899 P2d 1085, 52 St. Rep. 644 (1995), following Ambrogini v. Todd, 197 M 111, 642 P2d 1013 (1982).

Civil Rights Action for Deprivation of Medical Attention — Directed Verdict Properly Given: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for causing Joshua's death by failing to give medical attention. Buhr claimed that the county had adopted a "hands-off" policy that evidenced indifference to the health and welfare of persons, such as Joshua, in the custody of the county detention center. The District Court directed a verdict against Joshua's estate. Citing Canton v. Harris, 489 US 378 (1989), the Supreme Court held that there was insufficient evidence that the county had adopted a policy of indifference to the constitutional rights of Joshua and persons like him. The evidence at trial showed that the "hands-off" policy did not mean that the county was deliberately indifferent to the medical needs of persons held in a soft cell because the policy did not mean that medical attention would not be summoned when it was needed. The directed verdict was therefore properly granted. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Civil Rights Action for Excessive Use of Force — Directed Verdict Properly Given: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others under 42 U.S.C. 1983 for excessive use of force in placing Joshua in the county detention facility. Buhr claimed that the county had adopted a policy requiring a report on excessive use of force and that the policy did not define "excessive force". Buhr alleged that it was this policy that led to the violation of Joshua's constitutional rights. The District Court directed a verdict against Joshua's estate. Citing Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 US 808 (1985), the Supreme Court held that there was insufficient evidence that the county had adopted a policy of indifference to the constitutional rights of Joshua and persons like him. The evidence at trial was of only one alleged incident involving excessive force, and under Tuttle, one incident is insufficient to demonstrate a policy of official indifference by the county. The directed verdict was therefore properly granted. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Good Cause — Sufficient Evidence of Wrongful Discharge to Preclude Directed Verdict: Evidence that employee was performing a job satisfactorily when discharged provided a possible motive for termination for other than good cause, warranting submission of a wrongful discharge claim to the jury and precluding a directed verdict. Guertin v. Moody's Market, Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994), following Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303 (1986).

Standard of Review of Directed Verdict: In reviewing a directed verdict, the Supreme Court considers only the evidence introduced by the party against whom the directed verdict is granted. If that evidence, when viewed in a light most favorable to the party, tends to establish the case made by the party's pleading, the court will reverse the directed verdict. The test commonly used to determine if the evidence is legally sufficient to withdraw cases and issues from the jury is whether reasonable persons could draw different conclusions from the evidence. Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993), followed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996). See also Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160 (1986), and Hauck v. Seright, 1998 MT 198, 290 M 309, 964 P2d 749, 55 St. Rep. 838 (1998).

Evidence of Negligence in County Jail Sufficient — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied — Jury Verdict Upheld: The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence showing that the county breached its duty owed to Moralli, a prisoner in the Lake County jail, who slipped on a wet floor and injured her back. There was also sufficient evidence of causation and damages. Because there was sufficient evidence in the record from which the jury could make the findings that it did, the jury's verdict is also binding upon the court. Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Refusal to Give Jury Instructions Not Error in Light of Directed Verdict: The lower court entered a directed verdict finding one of the defendants in a personal injury case not liable.

Buskirk's attorney alleged that the trial court erred in not submitting certain jury instructions pertaining to the individual found not liable by the directed verdict. The Supreme Court held that it was not error to refuse to give the instructions in light of the directed verdict. Buskirk v. Nelson, 250 M 92, 818 P2d 375, 48 St. Rep. 864 (1991).

Standard of Review of Denial of Motion for Directed Verdict: When reviewing the denial of a motion for directed verdict, only substantial evidence in the record supporting the jury's finding is required. The conviction cannot be overturned if evidence, when viewed in a light most favorable to the prosecution, would allow a rational trier of fact to find essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are exclusively within the province of the jury. St. v. Laverdure, 241 M 135, 785 P2d 718, 47 St. Rep. 142 (1990), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), and in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992). The Nelson standard was applied in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Question of Contributory Negligence in Automobile Accident — Directed Verdict Inappropriate: Relying on the holding in Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), that the defense of contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part is available to a defendant who has violated a traffic statute, the Supreme Court reversed the grant of a directed verdict in favor of plaintiff because reasonable persons could differ as to conclusions drawn from the evidence relating to the accident. The question should have been submitted to the jury and was inappropriate for a directed verdict. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989), followed in Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996). Ryan was followed in Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Evidence of Fraud — Support for Jury Verdict: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, there was sufficient evidence to support submitting the issue of the seller's fraud to the jury and to support the jury's verdict against the seller. The trial court did not err in denying the seller's motion for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Sale of Real Estate — Motion Improperly Denied: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the plaintiff purchasers relied upon the realtor's representations concerning the property because he held himself out as an experienced investment analyst. The realtor did not try to confirm the seller's representations concerning the property. The purchasers provided sufficient evidence of the realtor's negligence and constructive fraud to require that the issues be presented to the jury. The trial court erred in granting a directed verdict as to the realtor. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Questions of Fraud Precluding Directed Verdict and Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict: Because questions of actual or constructive fraud existed requiring submission of facts to the jury, the District Court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for directed verdict and defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Fire Caused by Poorly Maintained Outside Power Line — No Directed Verdict: Plaintiff brought an action against the power company for negligently inspecting and maintaining a power line to a building, resulting in a fire that destroyed the building. A directed verdict after the close of plaintiff's case was properly denied when an expert testified that the power line caused the fire, a person who rented part of the building stated that on the day of the fire she saw a loose wire, and photographs showed that other power lines in the area appeared to be poorly maintained. Stout v. Mont. Power Co., 234 M 303, 762 P2d 875, 45 St. Rep. 1926 (1988).

Evidence of Jury Issues — No Directed Verdict: An insurer contended District Court Judge erred in not granting its motion for directed verdict so as to relieve it from extracontractual damages and for liability on its implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. A motion for directed verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury. Had the insurer relied on admissible circumstantial evidence and promptly denied the claim, the Supreme Court would have been constrained to hold that the insured was not entitled to extracontractual or punative damages. However, the court found at least eight elements in the handling of the claim that made a jury issue of whether the insurer breached its duty of fair dealing. Noting that the jury had been properly instructed on the issue of good faith, no error was found in denying the motion for directed verdict. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

False Representation as Actual Fraud — No Directed Verdict: Defendants contended that plaintiffs' evidence was insufficient to establish a false representation or justifiable reliance on the representation and that therefore defendants' motions for a directed verdict were improperly denied. The Supreme Court noted that a prospectus given to plaintiff, McGregor, contained financial statements which would be misleading to someone not knowledgeable in accounting and that a jury could find that false representations were made on this evidence. The court found that McGregor adequately investigated the business and reasonably relied on defendants' representations. The Supreme Court found no error in the District Court's failure to direct a verdict for defendants on the claim of actual fraud. McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986).

Defendants' Obstruction of Easement Unreasonable — Counterclaim for Damages Stricken: After concluding that the defendants' obstruction were an unreasonable interference with a right-of-way easement granted to plaintiffs, the District Court properly withdrew from the jury's consideration the defendants' counterclaim for damages. The standard of review for removal of an issue from jury consideration is the same as that of a directed verdict, as stated in Dahl v. Petroleum Geophysical Co., 38 St. Rep. 1474 (1981); i.e., an issue should not be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusions from the facts advanced by the moving party follow necessarily, as a matter of law, that recovery cannot be had under any view which can be drawn reasonably from the facts which the evidence tends to establish. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Evidence — When Sufficient to Support Verdict: Plaintiff appealed from jury verdict in favor of defendant, alleging the evidence did not support the verdict. The Supreme Court held that in order to overturn the verdict on the basis of insufficient evidence, it must find plaintiff entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to warrant submitting the case to a jury. Here the court found credible evidence supporting a verdict either way and considered itself without power to set aside the decision of the trier of fact as a matter of law. The District Court properly denied plaintiff's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gunlock v. W. Equip. Co., 219 M 112, 710 P2d 714, 42 St. Rep. 1882 (1985), followed in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

When Properly Granted — General Tests:

In considering a motion for a directed verdict or for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the District Court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the opposing party and deny the motion if a prima facie case is made. A judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot be granted if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Like any form of directed verdict, it rests on a finding that the case of the opposing party is unsupported in some necessary particular. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985), followed in Barrows v. Barrows, 256 M 78, 844 P2d 119, 49 St. Rep. 1145 (1992), and in Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993).

Conflicting Evidence on Cause of Death — Motion Properly Denied: In a medical malpractice action, the plaintiff moved for a directed verdict on the basis that the defendant's negligence was the legal cause of the decedent's death. However, because there was conflicting evidence on the issue of cause of death, the trial court correctly denied the plaintiff's motion. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985).

Possible Differing Conclusions — No Directed Verdict: Plaintiff applied to defendant for health coverage for himself and his family. He met with an agent who filled out the application, which was signed by both parties. Plaintiff was not given a copy of the application or contract and was not advised that the application was part of the contract. The application was accepted. The family contracted medical bills which defendant declined to pay, claiming that the bills stemmed from "preexisting conditions" not covered by the contract. Defendant then unilaterally canceled the contract, claiming plaintiff had misrepresented his family's health in the application, and plaintiff filed suit. Defendant moved for a directed verdict on the issues of actual and constructive fraud and the fact of bad faith, which motion was denied. If the representations that induced the plaintiff to enter the contract were false, he would have a case in fraud. If the contract was breached, a cause of action may sound in the tort, although it arises out of a breach of contract, if the defaulting party by breaching the contract also breaches the duty to act in good faith owed to the other party independently of the contract. The evidence viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs indicated reasonable men could differ as to the conclusions drawn from the evidence. Therefore, the directed verdict was properly denied. Weber v. Blue Cross of Mont., 196 M 454, 643 P2d 198, 39 St. Rep. 245 (1982).

Probable Cause in Malicious Prosecution Action: Lack of probable cause, an essential element of a malicious prosecution action, is a fact question for the jury's determination when the evidence is conflicting and is a question of law for the court only when the evidence is undisputed and allows only one conclusion on the issue; and a directed verdict is error when the evidence, including reasonable inferences, is susceptible to different conclusions by reasonable men when viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the directed verdict. Reece v. Pierce Flooring, 194 M 91, 634 P2d 640, 38 St. Rep. 1655 (1981).

Grounds for Granting Motion for Directed Verdict — Invasion of Privacy Action: Where respondent telephone company conducted a recording on a party line for a period of 6 days for the alleged purpose of protecting the quality of its services, the District Court erred in granting a motion for a directed verdict filed by respondent at the close of appellant's case. Considering the nature and extent of the recording and comparing it to recordings in other cases in which the recordings are allowed only in limited circumstances, namely, where telephone fraud is at issue, reasonable men could draw different conclusions as to whether the recording could be classified in such a way as to be allowable under the federal statute; thus the directed verdict should not have been granted. Sistok v. NW. Tel. Sys., Inc., 189 M 82, 615 P2d 176 (1980), citing Lawlor v. Flathead County, 177 M 508, 582 P2d 751 (1978).

Actual and Constructive Fraud — Motion Properly Denied: When applying the standard for ruling on a motion for directed verdict, the Supreme Court concluded that the evidence presented was entitled to jury consideration and therefore the directed verdict was properly denied. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978).

Motion to Dismiss in Jury Trial — Treated as Motion for Directed Verdict: When a motion to dismiss was inadvertently granted in a jury trial, but both parties recognized the error and treated it as a motion for directed verdict, then the Supreme Court utilized rules for granting a motion for directed verdict in its review. In this case the District Court erred since the evidence clearly presents questions of fact and precludes judgment as a matter of law. Sant v. Baril, 173 M 14, 566 P2d 48 (1977).

Contract Action — Motion Properly Denied: Where the plaintiff construction company completed construction of a sanitary sewer system and sewage lagoon for the defendant city and subsequently brought an action to enforce payments under the contract, the court properly denied the defendant's motion for a directed verdict, as the evidence of the nonmoving party was substantial enough to sustain the jury's verdict. Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976).

Jury Question — Intersection Collision: The law does not favor directed verdicts. A case presenting facts showing the defendant was speeding, that he had been drinking, and that he did not see the plaintiff's vehicle until immediately before a collision with the plaintiff's car which had turned onto the street in which the defendant was driving, was a proper one for presentation to a jury since there was sufficient evidence to find the defendant's conduct was the proximate cause of the collision. Sweet v. Edmonds, 171 M 106, 555 P2d 504 (1976), followed in Spinler v. Allen, 1999 MT 160, 295 M 139, 983 P2d 348, 56 St. Rep. 632 (1999).

Negligence of Rodeo Company — Motion Properly Denied: Although rodeo company was the owner of dangerous animals, it was not an insurer, and trial court correctly denied directed verdict against rodeo on issue of liability where show was produced in facilities erected and maintained by county. Ross v. Golden St. Rodeo Co., 165 M 337, 530 P2d 1166 (1974).

Breach of Employment Contract: Statement by office secretary of local union to its executive officer that latter had been removed from office was not the type of information which would lead a prudent person to believe she had been discharged, and local union was entitled to directed verdict in officer's action for breach of employment contract where there was no evidence that officer had in fact been discharged, she was not subject to discharge at will and she had never talked to anyone in authority to confirm her discharge. Hannifin v. Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n, 162 M 170, 511 P2d 982 (1973).

Motions — Directed Verdict — New Trial — Relationship: Motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict raise the same question. They both question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict. Appeal will be accepted based upon insufficiency of the evidence notwithstanding failure to move for a new trial if motion was made for directed verdict. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

Directed Verdict Reversed — Undue Influence: Court erred in directing verdict. There were many factual issues regarding alleged undue influence upon testator, and plaintiffs should have had an opportunity to place the issues before the jury. Hall v. Milkovich, 158 M 438, 492 P2d 1388 (1972).

Motion Viewed in Light Most Favorable to Party Directed Against: The court must view motions for directed verdict and for new trials in light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is directed. Dieruf v. Gallaher, 156 M 440, 481 P2d 322 (1971).

Both Parties Moving for Directed Verdict — Effect: The old rule that jury trial was waived when both parties moved for a directed verdict without requesting a particular factual issue be determined by a jury was abolished by this rule. Court erred in directing verdict in view of the fact situation at the time of the motions. Borgmann v. Diehl, 155 M 458, 473 P2d 529 (1970).

Burden of Proof: Denial of a motion for a directed verdict will not be presumed error. The moving party must show that error was committed. Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969); Laughnan v. Sorenson, 139 M 531, 366 P2d 433 (1961); Bouma v. Bynum Irrigation District, 139 M 360, 364 P2d 47 (1961).

Attractive Nuisance — Motion Improperly Denied: Verdict for plaintiff based upon attractive nuisance theory was reversed. Directed verdict for defendant should have been granted. Gagnier v. Curran Constr. Co., 151 M 468, 443 P2d 894 (1968).

Circumstances Under Which Motion Should Be Granted: Denial of motion for directed verdict, made by lessor of destroyed building in suit by lessee claiming that premises were repairable, was cause for reversal where, viewing evidence most favorable to plaintiff lessee and considering as proven everything which evidence tended to prove, reasonable man could come to no other conclusion but that building involved was destroyed. Solich v. Hale, 150 M 358, 435 P2d 883 (1967).

Res Ipsa Case — Motion Improperly Granted at End of Plaintiff's Case: Court erred in granting plaintiff's motion for directed verdict before defendant had opportunity to present his case, where defendant was precluded from offering evidence to rebut presumption of negligence raised by plaintiff's case in chief based on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, notwithstanding fact that plaintiff had examined all witnesses to accident during his case in chief. Baker v. Rental Serv. Co., 150 M 166, 432 P2d 624 (1967).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Peery v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. See State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial.

Weighing of Evidence Improper: On motion for directed verdict the court may not pass upon the weight and sufficiency of the evidence where it is in sharp conflict upon a vital issue and there is nothing inherently improbable or unbelievable in plaintiff's testimony. Durocher v. Myers, 84 M 225, 274 P 1062 (1929).

MOTION PROPERLY GRANTED

No Finding of Malicious Prosecution, Abuse of Process, or Tortious Interference in Employment Discrimination Claim — Judgment as Matter of Law Proper: Lynch filed an employment discrimination claim against doctor Hughes for sexual harassment actions that Hughes took in a hospital in which Lynch was employed. The Commission for Human Rights determined that Hughes was not an employer or agent of an employer, so Hughes did not bear an employer's liability for sexual harassment. Hughes' behavior after Lynch filed the claim was determined to constitute illegal retaliation, but because Lynch did not claim retaliation, the claim was dismissed. Hughes then filed an action in District Court alleging malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and tortious interference. The court found that the claims could not be proved and granted Lynch judgment as a matter of law. Hughes appealed, but the Supreme Court examined each claim and affirmed. First, Hughes could not prove that there was a lack of probable cause for Lynch's action or that the proceeding favored Lynch, so the malicious prosecution claim failed. Second, nothing in the record showed that Lynch used abuse of process to coerce Hughes to do some collateral thing that Hughes could not be legally and regularly compelled to do, so the abuse of process claim also failed. Third, there was no evidence to suggest that Lynch's acts were calculated to damage Hughes, and Lynch was entitled to seek redress and damages for the alleged discrimination, so the tortious interference claim failed as well. Thus, the District Court correctly determined that no genuine issue of material fact existed and that Lynch was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hughes v. Lynch, 2007 MT 177, 338 M 214, 164 P3d 913 (2007), following Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), and Comm'n on Unauthorized Practice of Law v. O'Neil, 2006 MT 284, 334 M 311, 147 P3d 200 (2006), and followed in Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), with regard to applicability of the probable cause standard for a malicious prosecution claim.

Dismissal of Counterclaims by Summary Judgment Proper When All Prior Claims Resolved by Memorandum of Understanding: Defendant filed several counterclaims stemming from an agricultural lease. The District Court held that the underlying dispute regarding the parties' obligations applicable to the lease was settled by a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU), and dismissed the counterclaims as a matter of law. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The MOU was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories, and the District Court did not err in summarily dismissing the counterclaims. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

No Duty of Volunteer Fire Department to Direct Traffic During "Boot Drive" Fundraiser: The Laurel Volunteer Fire Department sponsored a Fourth of July fireworks display for the benefit of the community, which included a "boot drive" fundraiser to help raise money for the display. The fundraiser entailed fire department personnel standing near the edge of the road while holding a cowboy boot and inviting people driving by to contribute by throwing money or checks into the boot. Two fire department personnel conducted a boot drive at an interstate highway exit ramp on the night of July 4, 1994. Jacobs and Coates exited the freeway and got in line behind a string of slow-moving vehicles, slowly advancing and then stopping each time that a vehicle went through the stop sign. Bruce exited the freeway behind Jacobs and Coates but did not notice the line of cars until it was too late to avoid a collision. Jacobs and Coates were injured and sued the fire department, claiming that the boot drive caused traffic to build up on the exit ramp and that as the sponsors of the fireworks display, the fire department owed a duty to warn people about and manage the traffic. The District Court granted the fire department's motion in limine and dismissed the action as a matter of law, concluding that no causation existed between the accident and the boot drive. Jacobs and Coates appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Citing Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35 (1998), the court noted that a judicial determination of duty involves various policy considerations, including: (1) the moral blame attributable to the defendant's conduct; (2) the prevention of future harm; (3) the extent of the burden placed on the defendant; (4) the consequences to the public of imposing that duty; and (5) the availability of insurance for the risk involved. Although a duty may have been owed by the fire department to ensure safe passage at the event itself, the fire department had no duty to ensure that every spectator arrived safely at the event. The fire department did not spill anything or block traffic on the freeway, nor did it create a hazardous condition for travelers coming to and from fire department property. Thus, after evaluating the factors regarding duty, the Supreme Court found no duty owed by the fire department to regulate traffic on or around the interstate highway. Further, in order to sustain a negligence claim, Jacobs and Coates needed to prove not only negligence on the part of the fire department but also a causal relationship between that negligence and the injury. Here, Jacobs and Coates offered no evidence of a causal connection between the accident and the boot drive. Neither of them saw fire department personnel at the off ramp or soliciting donations prior to the accident, no witness testified to any negligent behavior by the fire department personnel who conducted the boot drive, and Jacobs and Coates did not even produce a witness who saw the boot drive at all during that evening. Dismissal as a matter of law was therefore proper. Jacobs v. Laurel Volunteer Fire Dept., 2001 MT 98, 305 M 225, 26 P3d 730 (2001).

Business Retaliation — Lack of Evidence as to Emotional Distress of Minor Child: David, his wife Susan, their minor child, and the parties' defunct business sued Pierce Flooring and others for damages stemming from criminal acts taken against the plaintiffs' competing business. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for a directed verdict against the plaintiffs' minor child on the issue of emotional distress. The Supreme Court, after reviewing the record, held that the motion was correctly granted because there was no evidence that the child suffered any emotional distress from the actions taken against her parents. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Wrongful Discharge — Directed Verdict Proper as to Alleged Civil Rights Violations: Tyner sued the county for wrongful discharge and alleged violation of Tyner's civil rights. Tyner claimed that he was fired because he had run against one of the County Commissioners in the recent election and because he had criticized the handling of a county contract. The District Court granted a directed verdict on the alleged civil rights violations. The Supreme Court held that the directed verdict was proper because Tyner failed to link these activities to the discharge. Tyner v. Park County, 271 M 355, 897 P2d 202, 52 St. Rep. 507 (1995).

Dismissal of Breach of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Claims and Claims for Emotional Damages: The District Court properly directed verdict on claims of breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and for damages for emotional distress upon finding no evidence to support the claims of breach and upon failure of plaintiffs to establish a legally protected interest sufficient to warrant damages. Semenza v. Leitzke, 232 M 15, 754 P2d 509, 45 St. Rep. 829 (1988).

Expert Testimony Required in Legal Malpractice Case — Directed Verdict Proper: An attorney's standard of care depends on the skill and care ordinarily exercised by attorneys—a criteria that rarely falls within the common knowledge of lay persons. Therefore, expert testimony is required in a legal malpractice case. Absent such testimony, a directed verdict was proper. Carlson v. Morton, 229 M 234, 745 P2d 1133, 44 St. Rep. 1929 (1987), followed in Brown v. Small, 251 M 414, 825 P2d 1209, 49 St. Rep. 98 (1992), and Moore v. Does 1 to 25, 271 M 162, 895 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 399 (1995). See also Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335, 46 St. Rep. 151 (1989).

Plaintiff Not Negligent as a Matter of Law: A directed verdict was proper when no evidence was presented at the trial to prove that the defendant breached any duty which caused the damages complained of by the plaintiff. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Directed Verdict in a Res Ipsa Case: It is proper for a District Court to grant a motion for a directed verdict in a res ipsa case if the inference of negligence is so strong that persons of reasonable minds could not reach differing conclusions as to the negligence of the defendant. Helmke v. Goff, 182 M 494, 597 P2d 1131 (1979).

Proof of Manufacturer Defect: The court did not err in granting defendants' motion for directed verdict when plaintiff failed to prove that the defect that caused an engine fire existed when the vehicle left the hands of the defendants, which existence is a necessary element in breach of implied warranty of merchantability, strict liability, and res ipsa loquitur legal theories. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Jeep Corp. & Am. Motors Sales, 175 M 69, 572 P2d 204 (1977).

Improper Signaling: No basis exists for finding defendant negligent when plaintiff gave improper signal for maneuver which was a failure to yield right-of-way. Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly granted. Slagsvold v. Johnson, 168 M 490, 544 P2d 442 (1975).

Inaccurate Exhibits — Failure of Proof: In action for breach of contract, an exhibit of 123 pages of inaccurate information about all the deliveries made by the plaintiff was insufficient proof without supporting testimony, and directed verdict for defendant was proper. LaVelle v. Kenneally, 165 M 418, 529 P2d 788 (1974).

Negligence Action — Directed Verdict for Defendant Ordered: Notwithstanding jury verdict for plaintiff, directed verdict for defendant was ordered because plaintiff failed to set forth prima facie case proving negligence. Rogers v. Hilger Chevrolet Co., 155 M 1, 465 P2d 834 (1970); Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969); Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969).

Directed Verdict for Defendant Upheld — Negligence: Plaintiff failed to set forth prima facie case proving negligence. Therefore, court properly directed verdict for defendant. Jackson v. Dingwall Co., 145 M 127, 399 P2d 236 (1965).

Personal Injury — Failure of Prima Facie Case: Trial court properly granted directed verdict for defendant, employer and ranch foreman, where plaintiff, a ranch hand, was injured while riding atop a bobsled loaded with hay, since plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie case that tipping of bobsled was due to negligence. Jackson v. Dingwall Co., 145 M 127, 399 P2d 236 (1965).

MOTION PROPERLY DENIED

Question of Ownership of Property — Control Over Property Precluding Party's Dismissal From Case: Some 8 years after their father's estate was settled, one brother sued his brother and sister for ownership of a truck that was part of the estate. At the close of plaintiff brother's case, the sister moved for judgment as a matter of law on grounds that plaintiff failed to state a prima facie case against her because she had no dominion or control over the truck. The District Court denied the motion, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Evidence and the sister's own testimony showed that she did control the property. She had possession of the truck on her property and possessed the ignition key. When plaintiff removed the truck from her property, she filed a stolen vehicle report, and when the truck was recovered, it was returned to her. She repeatedly refused to release the truck to plaintiff. Thus, the sister's possession of the truck and the stolen vehicle report that she filed justified submitting the issue of ownership to the jury. The District Court did not err in refusing to dismiss the sister from the case. Turk v. Turk, 2008 MT 45, 341 M 386, 177 P3d 1013 (2008).

No Error in Denial of Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law in Light of Disputed Fact Issues: Defendants contended that the District Court incorrectly denied a motion for judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court noted that such a motion is properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence that would justify submitting an issue to the jury. In this case, reasonable persons could differ as to conclusions that could be drawn from the evidence related to work performed and money paid under a construction contract, so the motion for judgment as a matter of law was properly denied. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007). See also Johnson v. Costco Wholesale, 2007 MT 43, 336 M 105,152 P3d 727 (2007).

Judgment as Matter of Law Denied — Sufficient Evidence Presented to Support Jury Verdict: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. In the first Deonier case, Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622 (2000), the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's summary judgment in favor of Revere that held that there had not been a breach of fiduciary duty and remanded the case back to the lower court for a jury trial on the issue of liability and damages. The jury found for Deonier and awarded her $150,000 in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $375,000. The trial court denied Revere's motion for judgment as a matter of law that it had not breached its fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that Deonier had presented evidence that Revere knew it would assert the Forman defense and that such an action might lead to pecuniary damages for its agents, and therefore there existed a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find that a breach of fiduciary duty had occurred. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Awarding Punitive Damages for Breach of Fiduciary Duty by Insurer in Dealings With Its Agent: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. Revere argued that punitive damages were inappropriate as a matter of law because it was entitled to assert any defense, including the Forman defense, that had a reasonable basis in the law. Deonier countered by pointing out that she had introduced evidence that by 1994 when Revere first used the Forman defense in Montana, it knew that its selling agents had been sued in at least 20% of the previous lawsuits and the company nevertheless refused to inform its agents of the risk of pecuniary loss if Revere decided to assert that defense. The Supreme Court held that based on the evidence alone, it could conclude that there was a complete absence of any evidence that would justify submitting the issue of punitive damages to the jury and therefore the lower court did not err in denying the motion for judgment as a matter of law on punitive damages. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Former Rule 50(b). Renewal of motion for judgment after trial; alternative motion for new trial

Motion for Judgment as Matter of Law Not Filed at Close of Evidence — Attempted Renewal of Motion Following Final Judgment Negated: Defendant's failure to file a motion for judgment as a matter of law at the close of evidence negated an attempted renewal of the motion within 10 days of entry of final judgment. The Supreme Court declined to apply a liberal construction of this rule given defendant's failure to object to the sufficiency of the evidence or to show that the verdict was wholly without legal support as a result of a clear legal mistake resulting in manifest injustice. Blue Ridge Homes, Inc. v. Thein, 2008 MT 264, 345 M 125, 191 P3d 374 (2008).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Preservation of Right to Argue Sufficient Evidence of Negligence on Appeal From Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found for the plaintiffs. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that the domestic violence statutes did not trigger mandatory legal duties upon the Sheriff regarding arrest and seizure. On appeal, the Sheriff argued that because plaintiffs did not specifically appeal from the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violations of the arrest and weapon seizure provisions of the domestic violence law were negligence per se, plaintiffs could not argue on appeal that evidence that the statutes were violated supported the verdict. The Supreme Court examined the definitions of common-law negligence and negligence per se, noting that the jury was given the full panoply of instructions on common-law negligence and that despite the fact that negligence per se instructions were not given, plaintiffs nevertheless argued that violation of the statutes was evidence of negligence. Pursuant to Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329 (1986), even if a violation of a statute does not constitute negligence per se, the violation may nonetheless be considered as evidence of negligence. Because plaintiffs appealed from the judgment as a matter of law, they preserved their right to argue on appeal that the jury had before it sufficient evidence of negligence. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Substantial Evidence of Legal Duty of Sheriff to Protect Domestic Violence Victim to Preclude Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found the Sheriff negligent and awarded plaintiffs $358,000. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that no special relationship existed between the victim and the Sheriff under the domestic violence statutes that would trigger a legal duty upon the Sheriff to protect the victim. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that judgment as a matter of law may be granted only when it appears as a matter of law that a party could not prevail upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate inferences drawn from the evidence. Here, viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that the Sheriff was negligent in failing to comply with the mandatory notice provisions of the domestic violence law to preclude judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court was reversed. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Failure to Follow Uniform Building Code as Negligence Per Se — Denial of Judgment N.O.V. Reversed: Rosauers Supermarket undertook remodeling for which ALSC was the architect. As a change order to the remodeling, Rosauers asked that a walk-in freezer be removed and that the access door to a walkway over the freezer be closed off. Unknown to Rosauers and its employee, Pierce, the door was never closed off even though the freezer was removed. Pierce was injured when he fell through a false ceiling after stepping off the walkway, assuming that the freezer was still in place and that it would support him. After a jury verdict finding no negligence on the part of ALSC, Pierce moved for judgment N.O.V., which was denied by virtue of the fact that the District Court failed to grant the motion within 45 days. The Supreme Court found that ALSC had knowledge of the change order and knew that without the access door being blocked, the door and walkway would leave an unsafe condition after the freezer was removed. Citing Herbst v. Miller, 252 M 503, 830 P2d 1268 (1992), the Supreme Court also found that failure to place a guardrail around the walkway in accordance with the Uniform Building Code caused an unsafe condition in violation of the code, which constituted negligence per se on the part of ALSC. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it denied Pierce's motion for judgment N.O.V. by failing to grant the motion with 45 days. Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Denial of Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict on Issue of Negligence When Dispute in Evidence Exists: The District Court properly denied various summary judgment motions and directed verdict motions because a dispute as to the evidence existed that necessarily forced the court to submit the case to the jury. The evidence was substantial enough for the jury to have resolved the conflict in the manner in which it did. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Ample Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Judgment N.O.V. Improper:
The District Court did not err in denying motions for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict when the facts rose to the level of substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict and when the evidence established a reasonable basis for which an honest difference of opinion could arise under the circumstances presented. Hash v. St., 247 M 497, 807 P2d 1363, 48 St. Rep. 277 (1991).

Because there was substantial credible evidence on which the jury could have rendered its verdict, the District Court should have deferred to that verdict. It should not have set aside the verdict solely because it chose to believe testimony different from that believed by the jury. Wilkerson v. School District, 216 M 203, 700 P2d 617, 42 St. Rep. 745 (1985).

Judgment N.O.V. Reversed — Jury Finding of Breach of Fiduciary Duty Possible: The lower court set aside an award against the bank on the basis that the facts did not support the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court ruled that the fact that the bank required the plaintiffs to hire a contractor who owed the bank money could support a finding of breach of the bank's fiduciary duty. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 245 M 394, 798 P2d 523, 47 St. Rep. 1646 (1990).

Criteria for Granting:
A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be granted only if it appears that the nonmoving party cannot recover upon any view of the evidence, including legitimate inferences to be drawn from it. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), followed in Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), and in Kestell v. Heritage Health Care Corp., 259 M 518, 858 P2d 3, 50 St. Rep. 919 (1993). See also Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994), Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998), and Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002).

In considering a motion for a directed verdict or for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the District Court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the opposing party and deny the motion if a prima facie case is made. A judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot be granted if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Like any form of directed verdict, it rests on a finding that the case of the opposing party is unsupported in some necessary particular. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985), followed in Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989), Wiberg v. 17 Bar, Inc., 241 M 490, 788 P2d 292, 47 St. Rep. 429 (1990), Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992), Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992), and in Barrows v. Barrows, 256 M 78, 844 P2d 119, 49 St. Rep. 1145 (1992). See also Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

A motion for a directed verdict or for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury, and all inferences must be considered in the light most favorable to the opposing party. This compels a trial court to exercise the greatest self-restraint in interfering with the constitutionally mandated processes of jury decision. Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319, 39 St. Rep. 1565 (1982), followed in Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), and Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996). See also Walters v. Getter, 232 M 196, 755 P2d 574, 45 St. Rep. 986 (1988), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998), Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998), Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002), and Eklund v. Wheatland County, 2009 MT 231, 351 M 370, 212 P3d 297 (2009).

The question involved in whether a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper is not whether there was sufficient evidence to support the court's order. A motion for such judgment may be granted only when, without weighing the credibility of the evidence, there can be but one reasonable conclusion as to the proper judgment. Yetter v. Kennedy, 175 M 1, 571 P2d 1152 (1977).

Evidence of Fraud — Support for Jury Verdict: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, there was sufficient evidence to support submitting the issue of the seller's fraud to the jury and to support the jury's verdict against the seller. The trial court did not err in denying the seller's motion for a directed verdict and for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989).

Questions of Fraud Precluding Directed Verdict and Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict: Because questions of actual or constructive fraud existed requiring submission of facts to the jury, the District Court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for directed verdict and defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Motion Denied — Intentional Trespass Due to Flooding: The lower court's refusal to grant a motion on grounds that sufficient evidence existed for the jury's conclusion that defendants' dam was not the cause of flood damage to plaintiffs' property was affirmed on appeal. Guenther v. Finley, 236 M 422, 769 P2d 717, 46 St. Rep. 477 (1989).

Power Company Liable for Poorly Maintained Outside Wire That Caused Fire That Destroyed Building: In an action against the power company for negligently inspecting and maintaining a power line to a building, resulting in a fire that destroyed the building, substantial evidence existed to support the jury verdict and to deny a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Two tenants testified that just before the fire their lights flickered and their radio was making static, the two tenants and another person witnessed arcing, a tenant and fireman witnessed a loose wire, an expert testified that the fire was caused by the wire, and pictures appeared to show that other power lines in the area were poorly maintained. Stout v. Mont. Power Co., 234 M 303, 762 P2d 875, 45 St. Rep. 1926 (1988).

Evidence — When Sufficient to Support Verdict: Plaintiff appealed from jury verdict in favor of defendant, alleging the evidence did not support the verdict. The Supreme Court held that in order to overturn the verdict on the basis of insufficient evidence, it must find plaintiff entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to warrant submitting the case to a jury. Here the court found credible evidence supporting a verdict either way and considered itself without power to set aside the decision of the trier of fact as a matter of law. The District Court properly denied plaintiff's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gunlock v. W. Equip. Co., 219 M 112, 710 P2d 714, 42 St. Rep. 1882 (1985), followed in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Motor Vehicle Negligence:

The trial court properly granted motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, since defendant is guilty of negligence as a matter of law for failure to keep a proper lookout. At the time defendant "rear ended" plaintiff, the road was dry and the weather clear and sunny. No contributory negligence was alleged or proved. The only reasonable conclusion is that defendant negligently failed to keep a proper lookout. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Court erred in not granting directed verdict in favor of plaintiff on defendant's counterclaim. Smith v. Babcock, 157 M 81, 482 P2d 1014 (1971).

Motion for Summary Judgment Treated as Motion Under This Rule: When a defendant at the close of trial and after submission of all evidence moved under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., for summary judgment on its counterclaim, the Supreme Court held that the proper procedure would have been to make the motion under this rule but that since the questions to be answered are the same under either motion, the motion made would be considered the equivalent of a motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court further ruled that on the basis of the record, the defendant was entitled to judgment on its counterclaim. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposition of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1),

M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980), followed in Davenport v. Odlin, 2014 MT 109, 374 Mont. 503, 327 P.3d 478.

Motion Denied — Sufficiency of Evidence: There was sufficient evidence of a violation of the Federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. § 2, to submit the issue to the jury. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Factual Disputes for Jury: Since the jury decided that plaintiff was covered by the group insurance policy purchased by employer from defendant and the evidence did not show lack of coverage as a matter of law, the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied. Standish v. Business Men's Assurance Co., 172 M 264, 563 P2d 552 (1977).

District Court's Discretion — Motion Improperly Granted: It was error for the District Court not to set aside the verdict for the defendant upon plaintiff's motion for new trial or judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Rule 50(b), where defendant's conduct consisted of a breach of duty established by statute apparently conclusive as to the issue of negligence and could not be overlooked by a jury where there was insufficient evidence to support the verdict for defendant. Erickson v. Perrett, 169 M 167, 545 P2d 1074 (1976).

Granting of Motion by Appellate Court: Alternatives for disposition of a motion under this section available to a trial court are equally available to a reviewing appellate court. Therefore, where appeal was inter alia from denial of motion under this section, appellate court in reversing trial court could itself order a new trial. Erickson v. Perrett, 169 M 167, 545 P2d 1074 (1976).

Time for Ruling on Motion: Where judgment was granted for the defendant on May 4 and an alternative motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial was filed by the plaintiff on May 10, the hearing thereon continued until May 30, and the plaintiff's brief was not filed until July 10, the District Court had no authority to grant the motion on July 10 since Rules 50(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., clearly indicate that the court shall rule on a motion within 15 days after the motion is submitted and that the court may continue the case for only 30 days. Here the case was continued beyond the time provided for in the rules, and the court's decision was rendered more than 15 days beyond the date upon which it was ordered to be submitted. Cain v. Harrington, 161 M 401, 506 P2d 1375 (1973), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Denial of Motion for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict — Upheld: Plaintiff motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in negligence action was properly denied. French v. Abercrombie, 156 M 356, 480 P2d 187 (1971).

Burden of Proof: Denial of a motion for a directed verdict will not be presumed error. The moving party must show that error was committed. Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969); Laughnan v. Sorenson, 139 M 531, 366 P2d 433 (1961); Bouma v. Bynum Irrigation District, 139 M 360, 364 P2d 47 (1961).

New Trial Alternate to Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict: This rule contains no language which absolutely requires a court to enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict although persuaded it erred in failing to direct a verdict for the losing party. Thus, a new trial might better serve the ends of justice, and it is within the judge's discretion to so order. Jangula v. U.S. Rubber Co., 147 M 98, 410 P2d 462 (1966).

Disqualification of Trial Judge: This rule does not prevent the disqualification of a trial judge, which is governed by 3-1-801, during the 10-day period after reception of a verdict. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962).

Former Rule 50(d). Denial of motion for judgment as a matter of law

Standard of Review on Question of Grant or Denial of Judgment as Matter of Law — De Novo Review: The Supreme Court resolved the inconsistencies in lines of cases regarding the applicable standard of review of appeals from District Court orders granting or denying motions for judgment as a matter of law. The court will no longer apply an abuse of discretion standard of review, but will henceforth treat review of such trial court decisions as legal questions and apply a de novo or plenary standard of review. Johnson v. Costco Wholesale, 2007 MT 43, 336 M 105, 152 P3d 727 (2007), overruling Wallin v. Kinyon Estate, 164 M 160, 519 P2d 1236 (1974), Davis v. Sheriff, 234 M 126, 762 P2d 221 (1988), Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263 (1992), Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994), Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38 (2000), In re Mental Health of D.L.T., 2003 MT 46, 314 M 297, 67 P3d 189 (2003), Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr.

Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004), and Somont Oil Co. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2006 MT 90, 332 M 56, 137 P3d 536 (2006), and any similar case to the extent that those cases applied the abuse of discretion standard of review.

Denial of Motion for Judgment N.O.V. Proper When Evidence Sufficient to Support Question of Liability: Defendant appealed the District Court's denial of a posttrial motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, claiming that the motion was warranted based on the statutory liability of an indemnitor on claims for which its indemnitees had no liability. The Supreme Court, noting that the issue of indemnity was not raised at trial and was thus not arguable on appeal, restated the question as whether the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied. After reviewing the record, the court concluded that plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to support submission to the jury of the question of defendant's contract liability. Kapner, Wolfberg & Associates, Inc. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 270 M 283, 891 P2d 530, 52 St. Rep. 184 (1995).

Former Rule 51. Instructions to jury — objection

General 908
Specification of Objection Required 927
Sufficiency of Objection 928

GENERAL

Jury Instruction Assumes Fact In Controversy — Foreseeability: It was error to give a jury instruction in a negligence action that told the jury, "Negligence is not proved merely because someone later demonstrates that there would have been a better way." Under the facts brought out in the trial, the instruction assumed as fact a matter in controversy that was appropriate for consideration by the jury in considering foreseeability. Goles v. Neumann, 2011 MT 11, 359 Mont. 132, 247 P.3d 1089, overruling Jacobsen v. St, 236 Mont. 91, 769 P.2d 694 (1989), in part.

Jury Instructions Reviewed in Their Entirety for Applicable Law of the Case: It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to give certain jury instructions given the conflicting evidence and the facts of the case. A party assigning error to a District Court's instruction must show prejudice in order to prevail, and prejudice will not be found if the jury instructions in their entirety state the applicable law of the case. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Federal Employers' Liability Act — Failure to Preserve Objection to Instruction on Mitigation of Damages: Vincent filed a Federal Employers' Liability Act claim against defendant employer. The trial court concluded that defendant met its burden of production with respect to mitigation of damages, and the court proceeded to instruct the jury on mitigation. Vincent objected to the jury instructions on grounds that there was insufficient evidence to support the instruction but failed to offer any proposed instructions concerning mitigation or to object to the instruction on grounds of inadequacy. The Supreme Court agreed that there was sufficient evidence to warrant a mitigation instruction and therefore declined to address Vincent's arguments on appeal regarding adequacy of the instruction. Vincent v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 57, 355 Mont. 348, 228 P.3d 1123.

No Direct Evidence of Discrimination at Trial — Jury Instruction Regarding Motivating Factor for Discrimination Properly Denied: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, Stevenson proposed a jury instruction establishing that a prima facie case of discrimination arose from evidence from which the jury could infer that Stevenson's termination from employment was motivated by the employer's consideration of Stevenson's age. The trial court concluded that the proposed instruction was duplicative and declined to give the instruction. On appeal, Stevenson contended that the instruction was necessary because the employer gave direct testimony that Stevenson's age was a consideration in terminating employment. The Supreme Court disagreed. From the totality of the employer's testimony, it appeared that the employer was simply referring to a conversation with Stevenson to indicate that Stevenson could not slow down at work. Absent direct evidence of discrimination, the jury instructions as a whole constituted a correct statement of the law, and denial of Stevenson's proposed instruction was not error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

Applicable Standard for Evaluating Damages for Parasitic Emotional Distress Claims— Sacco Standard Applicable Only to Independent Claims of Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: The "serious or severe" standard for emotional distress announced in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), applies only to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For claims of emotional distress as an element of damage for an underlying tort claim, known as parasitic emotional distress damages, the Supreme Court adopted the standard set forth in Montana Pattern Jury Instruction 25.02, 15.01-03, as cited in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), that when emotional distress damages are allowed in the absence of independent tort claims, an instruction should be given that the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental and emotional suffering and distress. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), followed in Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), and McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, and overruling Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209 (1984), Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631 (1987), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84 (1989), and similar cases that suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

No Error in Refusing Jury Instruction on UTPA Facts No Longer at Issue: Defendant insurer offered a jury instruction regarding defendant's liability under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), but the District Court declined to give the instruction. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court had earlier granted summary judgment in defendant's favor on the issue of UTPA liability, so defendant's proposed instruction was rendered irrelevant. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009).

Strict Recitation of UTPA Statutory Language Not Required in Jury Instruction: Defendant insurer asserted that the District Court erred in giving a jury instruction concerning plaintiff's Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) common-law bad faith claim by substituting the word "claims" for the statutory reference to "coverages", resulting in prejudice to defendant. The Supreme Court first noted that there is no requirement that a District Court adopt verbatim the applicable statutory language when instructing the jury, as long as any modification does not alter the meaning of the statute and the District Court maintains conformity with the law while remaining appropriate in the factual context of the case. In this case, the District Court did not change the meaning of the statute, and because the submission and processing of insurance claims is a more fact-driven process than the issue of insurance coverage, there was no error in including a reference to claims within the purview of the UTPA statutory prohibition in 33-18-201. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009).

No Error in Refusal to Give Damage Instructions When No Negligence Found: The trial court in a medical malpractice case did not err in refusing to give jury instructions regarding damages when the jury found no medical negligence. No reversible error can be predicated on damage instructions when a jury does not reach the issue of damages. Harris v. Hanson, 2009 MT 13, 349 M 29, 201 P3d 151 (2009).

No Error in Jury Instruction That Employer Assumed Contractual Duty to Provide Safe Workplace: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by instructing the jury that an employer had assumed the contractual duty to provide a subcontractor's workers with a safe workplace, including transportation from a parking lot to the jobsite. Because the nature of the contractual obligation constituted a material fact as to which no genuine issue existed, partial summary judgment on the issue was proper. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

Failure of Jury Instructions to State Law of Case Regarding Test to Be Applied in Evaluating Insured's Opinion on Health — Reversible Error: When applying for credit life insurance, plaintiff's husband, Clarence, indicated that he was in good health. Less than 1 year later, Clarence died, and plaintiff submitted an insurance claim, but the claim was denied and the policy was rescinded, so plaintiff sued. At trial, the District Court gave jury instructions outlining both an objective test and a subjective test for evaluating Clarence's opinion as to the condition of his health and also failed to give an instruction setting forth defendant's defense theory. The law in Montana is to use a subjective standard for evaluating an insurance applicant's certification as to the applicant's health, so the District Court committed reversible error in also giving an instruction requiring an objective test. On remand, the District Court was instructed to instruct on the subjective theory and to give an instruction setting forth defendant's defense theory. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005). See also Lentz v. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am., 164 M 197, 520 P2d 769 (1974), and Kiely Constr. v. Failure to Request Jury Instruction on Sudden Emergency Doctrine — Appeal Precluded: Payne's son was killed while transporting an antique tractor purchased from defendants. The jury found that more than 51% of the negligence was attributable to Payne's son. Payne appealed on grounds that under the sudden emergency doctrine set out in Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713

P2d 983 (1986), the son was not negligent as a matter of law. Defendants argued that the sudden emergency doctrine is no longer a recognized doctrine in Montana negligence law. Without ruling on whether the doctrine is still viable, the Supreme Court dismissed the issue because Payne failed to request a jury instruction on sudden emergency, thereby failing to preserve the issue for appeal. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

No Prejudice in Jury Instructions Explaining General Elements of Legal Malpractice: Plaintiffs contended that general instructions regarding the elements of legal malpractice given to the jury in a legal malpractice case were internally inconsistent, incomplete, and essentially confusing. Defendant attorney asserted that the jury was advised that the attorney had a duty to use the care and skill ordinarily used by lawyers practicing in Montana and that the jury was not confused by an instruction that did not recite every duty discussed by an expert. The Supreme Court agreed with defendant. Although the trial court might have crafted other instructions that may have better assisted the jury in considering the law applicable to the case, when taken as a whole, the instructions, when coupled with extensive expert testimony for both parties, adequately described the attorney's standard of care and did not potentially mislead or confuse the jury, resulting in prejudice to plaintiffs. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004).

Lack of Evidence on Impact of Taking on Value of Remaining Property — Jury Instructions on Compensation for Taking of Access Proper: The District Court instructed the jury that defendants were not entitled to compensation merely because traffic access was diverted because of road construction or for defendants' loss of business resulting from the taking of a part of defendants' property. Defendants contended that the instructions were an abuse of discretion because they were not seeking compensation for access impairment, traffic diversion, or loss of business, but rather that those factors had caused severance damages when the remaining property's commercial value sustained a permanent market value loss, entitling defendants to a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Defendants failed to offer any evidence of a loss of revenue from their business and the impact of the loss on the fair market value of the remainder of the property. Thus, the jury instructions did not materially affect defendants' substantial rights, and the motion for a new trial was properly denied. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

No Prejudicial Error in Failure to Give Negligent Homicide Mental State Instruction in Wrongful Death Action When Other Instructions Adequately Reflect Negligence: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for foreseeable negligence. To boost the theory of foreseeability, Samson offered a jury instruction that defined Bercier's conduct as reckless and postulated therefrom that the conduct was foreseeable because of Bercier's background, seeking to undermine the state's theory that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The District Court refused to offer the instruction, instead instructing the jury on elements of wrongful death, and Samson appealed. The state argued that the mental state of Bercier was not a controlling issue and contended that it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the mental state of negligent homicide because the instructions as a whole properly included the key concepts of a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The fundamental issue concerned the state's negligence, not Bercier's mental state. Nevertheless, Samson was still able to present the foreseeability theory under the instructions that were given, so failure to give Samson's offered instruction did not result in prejudice to Samson's case. It is within a District Court's discretion to decide how to instruct the jury, taking into account the theories of the contending parties, and absent an abuse of discretion, the District Court was affirmed. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

Rule of Law Regarding Admissibility of Evidence of Subsequent Accident With Nonparty — Defendant's Burden to Show That Damages Divisible and Apportionment Proper: Following Truman's injury in an automobile accident, she was involved in a second automobile accident and in an accident involving an ultralight aircraft. The District Court held that evidence of Truman's injuries in the second automobile accident and the aircraft accident would be admissible in a trial related to the first automobile accident to disprove causation. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court relied on an analogous situation in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), holding that once a plaintiff presents a prima facie case that the defendant's conduct contributed as a cause of injury, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the injury is divisible. A defendant is permitted to submit relevant evidence of subsequent accidents to negate allegations that the defendant is the cause or sole cause of the injury, but the defendant may not attempt to apportion fault to the conduct of a nonparty because assignment of liability to a nonparty without affording that party the opportunity to defend against liability risks an unreliable and disproportionate assignment of liability and places the burden of defending the nonparty on the plaintiff. In this case, plaintiff must prove that defendant's conduct contributed as a substantial factor to the damages, but need not prove the extent to which defendant is responsible. If defendant proves by a reasonable medical probability that the injury is divisible and that defendant is responsible for only a portion of the damages, the jury may reduce defendant's obligation by the portion of damages for which it is proved that defendant is not responsible. However, if the injury is indivisible and evidence does not permit an apportionment, then defendant is liable for the entire damage. Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003), followed in Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008), and distinguished in Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115.

Plaintiffs Residing in House for Several Years Not Entitled to Instruction on Warranty of Habitability: The Satterfields appealed the District Court's refusal to submit a jury instruction regarding the implied warranty of habitability. The Supreme Court held that the instruction was properly excluded because the plaintiffs did not introduce enough evidence to support their argument especially in light of the fact that they inhabited the home for a period of several years after construction was finished. Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Oil and Gas Habendum Clause Obligating Maintenance of Production — Jury Instructions Allowing Consideration of Causes of Cessation of Production Improper When Evidence Shows Lack of Production of Paying Quantities: Actions to terminate oil and gas leases invoke two distinct inquiries: (1) whether the lease is producing in paying quantities; and (2) if not, whether the cessation in production is permanent or temporary. As an ownership-in-place state, in Montana, the lessee's interest terminates upon the occurrence of a stated event, which, under the habendum clause in effect here, was the cessation of production in paying quantities. Paying quantities is defined as the amount that would pay a small profit over the cost of operation, excluding the initial cost of bringing the well into production. Thus, the finder of fact must necessarily consider income generated from the property and the expenses incurred in its operation. However, in an effort to mitigate the harshness of the automatic termination rule, courts developed the temporary cessation of production rule, which shifts the burden to defendant to prove that cessation is temporary once plaintiff establishes that the lease has halted production. To determine whether a cessation is temporary or permanent, a jurisdiction considers the cause of the cessation, the time reasonably required to restore production, and the diligence exercised by the lessee in restoring production. Ownership-in-place jurisdictions generally limit temporary cessations to mechanical or production breakdowns. If there is a lack of market, if the lease is capable of producing in paying quantities, and if the lessee is using reasonable diligence to market the product, Montana law considers the lease as one that is producing in paying quantities and will not reach the temporary cessation of production question. The District Court in this case allowed jury consideration of oil prices, economic considerations, and defendant's financial condition in determining whether cessation was temporary or permanent. However, plaintiff established that the leases in question failed to produce in paying quantities during the prescribed accounting period. At that point, analysis implicating economic factors concluded. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that allowing jury consideration of defendant's economic factors was an abuse of discretion and was prejudicial to plaintiff, warranting a new trial. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2002 MT 141, 310 M 221, 49 P3d 598 (2002), following Berthelote v. Loy Oil Co., 95 M 434, 28 P2d 187 (1933), and Christian v. A. A. Oil Corp., 161 M 420, 506 P2d 1369 (1973). On remand, defendants bore the burden of proving that cessation of production on all eight leases at issue was temporary, that all cessations in production were caused by sudden involuntary stoppages or mechanical breakdown of the wells, and that defendants engaged in diligent efforts to immediately restore production. However, given a complete lack of evidence from defendants as to why the majority of wells failed to operate and whether repairs were undertaken, there was no basis for submitting the question of temporary cessation to the jury, and plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Additionally, the District Court did not err in limiting retrial to the second inquiry articulated in Somont I, id., concerning whether the cessation in production was permanent or temporary or in limiting the timeframe for which evidence could be presented regarding restoration of production to the leases. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2006 MT 90, 332 M 56, 137 P3d 536 (2006).

Following remand pursuant to Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2006 MT 90, 332 M 56, 137 P3d 536 (2006) (Somont II), plaintiff filed a renewed motion seeking damages for defendant's plugging the wells on the conceded leases. The District Court held that the damage claim was barred by res judicata. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The issue of damages was part of the litigation from the beginning in 1998. In the appeal that resulted from Somont II, plaintiff did not argue that it did not have a full opportunity to litigate whether damages were due, and nothing in the record indicated that plaintiff was precluded from litigating for damages. The litigation came to a close upon the decision in Somont II, and plaintiff's further claim for damages was prohibited by res judicata because plaintiff was barred from relitigating a claim that it already had an opportunity to litigate. Somont Oil Co. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2008 MT 447, 348 M 12, 199 P3d 241 (2008).

No Error in Giving Jury Instructions Regarding Intervening Cause When Jury Did Not Consider Issue: Pula sued the state for negligence related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. The District Court's special verdict form required jurors to answer a series of questions on breach of duty, causation, and damages, and then, depending on the answers, to move on to succeeding questions, one of which was the issue of whether there was an intervening cause. Pula asserted error in that the instructions on independent intervening causation were incorrect statements of the law. However, the first question for the jury was whether the state was negligent, which was answered affirmatively, so the jury moved on to the second question, which was whether the negligence resulted in Pula's injuries. The answer was negative, so the jury was instructed not to consider the third question, which was whether there was an intervening cause. Because the jury never considered the issue of intervening cause in reaching its verdict, the instructions on intervening cause had no effect on the outcome of the trial. The Supreme Court declined to assign reversible error to instructions addressing an issue that was never reached. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002). See also Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980).

Jury Instructions Regarding Causation and Superseding, Intervening Cause Not Conflicting: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. Although conceding that the jury instructions were correct statements of the law, Payless nevertheless asserted that the instructions, when read together, were confusing regarding Payless's liability when the case involved a defense of superseding, intervening cause. The Supreme Court found that the instructions were appropriate and not conflicting and that nothing in the record indicated that the jury was confused. The jury sent out no written questions to the court and deliberated less than 2 hours before unanimously agreeing on its answers to six special verdict questions. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Heightened Standard of Care of Driver in Vicinity of Children: Fifteen-year-old Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection near a school. The intersection had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist operating in an area in which children are known to likely be present has a heightened standard of care, relying on Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302 (1993). The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a person's duty of care varies depending on the circumstances at the time and place in question, so in this case, as in Okland, the standard negligence instruction permitted Hanson to argue that the circumstances required a heightened standard and was thus considered adequate. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Motorist's Affirmative Duty to Ascertain Whether Intersection Clear and to Anticipate Presence of Pedestrians: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist has an affirmative duty to ascertain whether an intersection is clear before proceeding and a duty to anticipate that pedestrians may be present in the intersection. The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the instruction that was given, which clarified a driver's obligation to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk and a pedestrian's obligation to avoid moving into the path of a vehicle that is too close for the driver to yield, was a proper statement of law under 61-8-504 and that the trial court did not err in refusing to give Hanson's proposed instruction regarding a driver's affirmative duties. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Error in Refusal to Give Law of the Case Instruction: On remand from Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 277 M 134, 920 P2d 97, 53 St. Rep. 618 (1996) (Federated Mut. I), defendant offered a jury instruction setting forth as facts three paragraphs that had been determined to be true as a matter of law in Federated Mut. I. The District Court rejected the proposed law of the case instruction, which defendant contended was error because it allowed third-party defendant to present testimony contrary to the facts found in Federated Mut. I. The court found for third-party defendant. The difference between the instruction given and the proposed law of the case instruction was that the instruction given stated only the conclusion reached in Federated Mut. I, while the proposed instruction stated the specific facts on which those conclusions were based. Normally, the instructions as given would have been adequate, but in this case, the District Court had warned the parties prior to trial that pursuant to Federated Mut. I, the reasonableness of third-party defendant's actions was no longer at issue, yet third-party defendant improperly raised the reasonableness issue at least 23 times during trial but was not sanctioned. As a result of the instruction given and this violation of the pretrial order, third-party defendant in effect relitigated several fact issues previously settled in Federated Mut. I. Thus, the jury instructions as a whole failed to adequately present the law of the case, allowing the presentation of improper testimony and argument to the jury, constituting reversible error. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999).

Failure to Give Instruction Regarding Retaliation in Wrongful Discharge Claim — No Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiffs filed action against a hotel employer, alleging wrongful discharge and violation of wage and hour laws. Since plaintiffs did not advance this theory for discharge, the Supreme Court ruled that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to provide the jury with an instruction using the theory as a ground for a wrongful discharge claim. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 1998 MT 248, 291 M 164, 967 P2d 382, 55 St. Rep. 1023 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Instruction on Implied Contract Covenant to Farm in Workmanlike Manner — Express Lease Terms Stricter Than Requested Instruction on Implied Term: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. The lease required Stephens to farm with "diligence and care" and to do "all work necessary . . . and to the best interest of lessor, all in such time and manner as shall be to the best advantage and economy". The Schumachers sued Stephens, alleging that Stephens breached the implied contract covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court refused to give the Schumachers' requested instruction on an implied covenant in the lease that would have required Stephens to farm the property in a "competent, skilled, workmanlike and husbandlike fashion". The Supreme Court noted that: (1) the District Court was correct in not giving an instruction on negligence because the Schumachers' complaint and evidence contained no such theory; (2) the District Court did instruct on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (3) the standard of care required of Stephens was expressly stated in the lease itself; and (4) the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced by the failure to give the requested instruction. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that it was not error for the District Court to refuse to give an instruction on an implied covenant to farm in a workmanlike manner. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Plaintiffs' Instruction on Effect of Material Participation Provisions — Instruction on Mutual Cooperation Held Sufficient: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. Later, when the Schumachers sued Stephens over Stephens' failure to comply with the terms of the lease, Stephens claimed in defense that the Schumachers had breached the material participation agreements in the lease and that therefore he was excused from compliance. The Schumachers requested an instruction stating that if the jury found that Stephens failed to cooperate with the plaintiffs, then Stephens was not entitled to claim that he was excused from liability because of his contention that the Schumachers breached the material participation agreements in the lease. The District Court refused to give the instruction and instead gave an instruction stating that "the failure of a party to fully perform a contract is excused if his performance is prevented or delayed by the conduct of the other party". The Supreme Court noted that the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced in any way by the failure of the District Court to give the requested instruction. Citing Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347 (1997), the Supreme Court held that: (1) a party assigning error to a refused instruction must show that the party was prejudiced by the refusal; and (2) the refused instruction must be reviewed in the context of the instructions that were given and the evidence produced at trial. Under these standards, the Supreme Court held that the instruction given by the District Court was sufficient. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Aggravated Assault — Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence — Extraneous Allegation of Use of Weapon Held Not to Affect Conviction — Instruction Properly Refused: Neary was charged with aggravated assault of a female friend. The evidence at trial consisted of statements by witnesses who placed him, in an angry mood, with the injured woman at the top of some stairs and who heard admissions against interest and inconsistent statements from Neary about the circumstances of the woman's injury. The state also introduced expert medical testimony that the woman's injuries were consistent with a blow to the head with an object or a fall down some stairs onto an object. A neurologist testified for Neary that the woman's injuries could have been caused in the same manner and that the woman's blood showed evidence of alcohol, amphetamines, and a prescription drug, which, in combination, would cause a propensity to fall. Neary contended that the state's case was circumstantial and that the verdict was not supported by the evidence. The Supreme Court held that Neary's inconsistent statements, his other statements, and his actions before, during, and after the incident supported the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. Gould, 216 M 455, 704 P2d 20 (1985), and St. v. Gommenginger, 242 M 265, 790 P2d 455 (1990), by pointing out that in Gommenginger, unlike the case before it, testimony came from a drug informant with a motive to lie and that in Gould, the defendant had moved to suppress pretrial admissions, that Neary had not. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court did not err in refusing to amend one of the state's jury instructions to provide that Neary had committed the elements of aggravated assault "with a weapon". The Supreme Court noted that the fact that the text of the state's information alleged that Neary struck the woman "with some type of blunt weapon" did not change the fact that the jury was correctly given the elements of the offense of aggravated assault and that the jury was not required to find that Neary used a weapon to find him guilty of aggravated assault. Distinguishing St. v. Later, 260 M 363, 860 P2d 135 (1993), in which the defendant had been charged under the wrong statute, the Supreme Court held that Neary was not prevented from preparing an adequate defense by the statement in the information that Neary used a weapon. St. v. Neary, 284 M 409, 944 P2d 750, 54 St. Rep. 942 (1997).

Timing of Settlement of Instructions — Inapplication of This Rule for Lack of Notice Rejected: In a case in which an issue on appeal was whether the plaintiff's estate could assert a survival action and the state submitted no jury instruction regarding the survival action, the state argued that it should not be bound by this rule because it did not have timely notice that the District Court was going to give an instruction requested by the plaintiff. The Supreme Court rejected that state's argument concerning damages, noting that the plaintiffs submitted an instruction based upon Montana Pattern Jury Instructions 25.20 through 25.25 and that because of the language of the proposed instruction, the state knew or should have known that the "not instantaneous" (concerning the death of the decedent) language was being proposed with regard to the survival of the action. Thus, although the final revised language of the instruction was not available for the state to review, the Supreme Court held that the state had sufficient knowledge of the content of the final instruction that this rule would be applied to the state for its failure to submit a different or clarifying instruction. Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997).

New Trial Denied — Failure to Object to Instruction — No Plain Error Found: Berg contended on appeal that he was entitled to a new trial concerning workers' compensation fraud because the District Court failed to instruct the jury on the meaning of the term "misrepresentation". Citing St. v. Courchene, 256 M 381, 847 P2d 271 (1992), and Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625 (1996), the Supreme Court held that Berg was not entitled to a new trial for failure of the District Court to give a certain instruction when Berg had not requested that the instruction be given. Distinguishing the case of St. Bank of Townsend v. Maryann's, Inc., 204 M 21, 664 P2d 295 (1983), relied upon by Berg, the Supreme Court also held that there was no "plain error" sufficient to justify the Supreme Court's review of the failure to give the instruction notwithstanding Berg's failure to request the instruction. State ex rel St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Foreseeability to Be Considered Part of Analysis of Duty: The trial court refused to give Columbus Hospital's proposed jury instruction on proximate cause and also did not instruct the jury on foreseeability even though the hospital contended that the Supreme Court had included foreseeability as an element of proximate cause in Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court, after a lengthy discussion of duty, proximate cause, and foreseeability and after examining the statutory definitions of duty and proximate cause, held that foreseeability is to be considered as part of the analysis of duty rather than proximate cause. The Supreme Court further held that it was reversing that part of Kitchen Krafters that requires a two-tiered analysis of causation that includes consideration of foreseeability in cases other than those cases in which there has been an allegation that the chain of causation is severed by an independent, intervening cause. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996), followed in Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996), Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35, 55 St. Rep. 183 (1998), Gentry v. Douglas Hereford Ranch, Inc., 1998 MT 182, 290 M 126, 962 P2d 1205, 55 St. Rep. 737 (1998), Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999), and Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000).

Instruction on Duty to Examine Available Fraudulent Form — Fraudulent Material Inserted After Availability Ceases: In an action by the insureds against an insurance agent and his company for the agent's fraud, the lower court properly refused defendants' instruction that one who fails to take the opportunity to examine a written form before executing it cannot claim that the form was fraudulent. The instruction was taken out of context. In addition, the agent's insertion of fraudulent material on insurance applications after plaintiffs saw them made the obligation in the instruction inapplicable to plaintiffs. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Instructions as to Contract Clause Requiring Independent Investigation Properly Denied: A real estate broker appealed a verdict finding that an employee had negligently misrepresented the boundary of property purchased by the Cechovics. The basis for the appeal was that the contract between the parties contained a clause requiring the Cechovics to conduct an independent investigation, which the Cechovics had not conducted, and that therefore the Cechovics' reliance on the employee's representation was not justified. The broker requested a jury instruction stating that a buyer has the duty to make a reasonable investigation of property prior to purchasing it and a second instruction containing the independent investigation clause as set out in the parties' buy-sell agreement. The Supreme Court held that the instructions had been properly denied because the issue had been argued to the jury and the jury had been instructed regarding contributory negligence. In fact, the jury had found the Cechovics partially at fault for the damages. Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520, 52 St. Rep. 854 (1995), followed, with regard to jury instructions on causation, in Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Failure to Give Duplicitous and Legally Incorrect Instructions — Jury Properly Instructed: Contreras contended that the jury was denied consideration of his case by the District Court's refusal to give his proposed jury instructions, which would have acted to direct a verdict on the element of duty. However, the proposed instructions were duplicitous and not correct statements of the law. The instructions that were given properly instructed the jury on all theories of the case and on the appropriate law. Thus, the court did not abuse its discretion in instructing the jury. Contreras v. Vannoy Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 270 M 393, 892 P2d 557, 52 St. Rep. 246 (1995).

Failure to Notify Seller of Nonconformity of Goods — Damages Unwarranted: Defendants claimed that a jury instruction should have been given regarding damages owing under the Uniform Commercial Code for a sale of nonconforming goods. However, defendants did not reject the goods upon delivery or notify the seller within a reasonable time regarding the nonconformity. Because no damages were owing, an instruction on the measure of damages was not appropriate. NW. Truck & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. Dvorak, 269 M 150, 887 P2d 260, 51 St. Rep. 1530 (1994).

Challenge by Party Who Offered Instruction — Failure to Object: Defendant argued that the focal point of his defense was that he had asserted an attorney's retaining lien. Even though the only instruction he offered related to an attorney's charging lien, defendant contended that the District Court had erred by giving the charging lien instruction rather than a retaining lien instruction. When proposing the charging lien instruction, defendant's counsel stated that in his opinion, the language was broad enough to cover the defense. The rule that a party is barred from challenging on appeal a court's refusal to give an instruction if the party fails to object at the time that the instruction is given is particularly applicable when the party challenging the instruction is the party that offered it. A party will not be allowed to benefit from an error that that party created. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Incorrect Jury Instruction Requested — Plain Error Not Applied: In a civil rights action against a county and hospital, Buhr argued at trial that the deliberate indifference standard was the correct standard of care to apply to the defendants in the case and requested a jury instruction to that effect. During trial, Buhr discovered his error and, on appeal, argued for the first time that the correct standard to be applied in the case was the professional judgment standard. He further argued that the District Court erred in applying the deliberate indifference standard and that the Supreme Court should apply the plain error doctrine in order to reach the conclusion that the professional judgment standard applies to his civil rights claim. The Supreme Court refused to apply the plain error doctrine, noting that Buhr himself requested the jury instruction on deliberate indifference. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Lengthy Instructions Not Erroneous if Law Properly Stated: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure after being transferred to the Kalispell Regional Hospital's security room. His personal representative sued the hospital and others. During trial, the District Court instructed the jury on negligence per se by giving lengthy instructions that counsel claimed were too complicated for the jury to understand. Citing Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190 (1991), the Supreme Court held that if the instructions properly state the law, the fact that the instructions are lengthy serves no basis for reversing the District Court. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994). See also Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

No Error in Instruction Quoting Statute Verbatim: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure after being transferred to the Kalispell Regional Hospital's security room. His personal representative sued the hospital and others. During trial, the District Court instructed the jury on negligence per se by quoting mental health statutes verbatim to the jury. The Supreme Court said that giving jury instructions by quoting directly from the statutes may not be the best practice, but noted that the instructions proposed by opposing counsel were also direct quotations of mental health statutes. Given that situation, the Supreme Court held that there was no error in giving jury instructions in the form of direct quotations from the statutes. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Duty of Care of Children — Failure to Give All of Requested Instruction Cured by Argument of Counsel: Chad was hit, while on his bicycle, by a car driven by Matt. Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Chad's counsel requested a jury instruction on a child's standard of care, but one sentence of that instruction, providing that "A child is not held to the same standard of care as an adult." was deleted by the District Court. The Supreme Court held that in this case, it was not reversible error for the District Court to refuse to give all of the requested instruction because it is error only if the omission adversely affects the substantial rights of a party. Here, the plaintiff's substantial rights were not affected because his counsel's closing argument contained statements that nullified the effect of the District Court's refusal to give the requested instruction. Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Reversible Error Not to Instruct Jury on Law of Important Theory of Party's Case: Chad was hit, while on his bicycle, by a car driven by Matt. Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection, but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Chad's counsel requested a jury instruction on the duty of automobile drivers to observe what is to be seen at an intersection, but the District Court refused to give the instruction. Citing Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053 (1988), the Supreme Court held that it was reversible error for the District Court not to instruct the jury on an important part of a party's theory in the case. Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Jury Instructions as a Whole Sufficiently Instructed Jury: Mannix, a corporate officer fired by the board of directors, argued that the lower court erred in refusing to submit to the jury his proposed instructions on the scope of authority of the board of directors of the defendant corporation. The Supreme Court held that, taken as a whole, the instructions were sufficient as to the scope of the board's authority and that the lower court had not abused its discretion in refusing the plaintiff's instructions. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993).

Criminal Trial — Time and Place of Alleged Offense: The District Court did not err by instructing the jury that the state was not required to state the time and place of an alleged criminal offense with impossible precision. St. v. Scott, 257 M 454, 850 P2d 286, 50 St. Rep. 353 (1993).

Proposed Instruction on Elements of Partnership Properly Rejected: The District Court did not err in refusing a proposed jury instruction setting out criteria for the existence of a partnership when the proposed instruction was not an accurate statement of prior cases establishing the elements of partnership. Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 96 (1993).

Not Error to Fail to Instruct That Severity of Injury Did Not Mean There Must Be Negligence: A doctor in a medical malpractice case argued on appeal that the judge should have given a "mere fact of injury" instruction because no instruction was given to prevent the jury from believing that because the injuries were so severe, there must have been negligence. There was no error because the given instructions stated in part: (1) that plaintiff had the burden of proving the doctor was negligent, that the plaintiff was injured, and that the doctor's negligence was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury; (2) that it is the doctor's duty to use the skill and learning ordinarily used in like cases by other doctors practicing in that same specialty and holding the same national board certification and that violation of that duty is negligence; and (3) that the proper test for determining negligence in a doctor's actions is whether the doctor meets the accepted standards of skill and care. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Negligence of County in Maintaining Jail — Failure to Give Jury Instruction on Business Invitees Not Error: The plaintiff was injured when she fell against a wall in a jail bathroom after slipping on a wet floor. The District Court refused to give a jury instruction dealing with nonliability of a business owner to a business invitee for danger known or obvious to the plaintiff. The District Court gave only a general instruction on the duty of the county established in another case. Following Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364 (1982), the Supreme Court held that if the instruction taken as a whole states the applicable law of the case, a party cannot claim reversible error. The Supreme Court held that the county was not prejudiced by the District Court's failure to give the requested instructions. Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Proposed Instruction on Same Subject — Refusal to Give Thayer Instruction Not Error When Covered in Other Instructions: Appellant contended that the District Court erred in refusing to give the following instruction from Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784 (1990): "Plaintiffs are not required to eliminate all possible causes of damages in order to prove causation." However, other instructions informed the jury on causation. When other instructions adequately cover the law relating to a particular issue, it is not error to refuse a proposed instruction on the same subject. Valley Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Steadman's Hardware, Inc., 251 M 242, 824 P2d 250, 49 St. Rep. 13 (1992).

Showing of Prejudice Required to Prevail on Claim of Error in Giving Jury Instruction: As stated in Jacobsen v. St., 236 M 91, 769 P2d 694 (1989), a party assigning error to the giving of a jury instruction must show prejudice in order to prevail. Absent a showing by appellant that failure to give a particular instruction adversely affected his substantial rights and as long as the jury is properly instructed on the applicable law, the failure to give an instruction does not constitute reversible error. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993). See also Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), and Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Duty of Court to Review Jury Instructions:

Jury instructions on appeal are to be viewed in their entirety and in light of the evidence presented. Hash v. St., 247 M 497, 807 P2d 1363, 48 St. Rep. 277 (1991).

When considering jury instructions it must be remembered that often a jury is deluged with numerous instructions, many of which attempt to explain complex questions of law. The court on review must therefore balance the possible confusion created by layer upon layer of instructions with the necessity of providing the appropriate legal theories. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

Constructive Wrongful Discharge — "Without Due Process of Law": In a case for constructive wrongful discharge, it was reversible error for the court to instruct the jury that "without due process of law" is equivalent to "without authority of law". The jury was not correctly instructed concerning the requirements of due process, nor was it properly instructed on the type of conduct required for liability in a case under 42 U.S.C. 1983. Doohan v. Bigfork School District No. 38, 247 M 125, 805 P2d 1354, 48 St. Rep. 121 (1991).

Proposed Instruction on Preparation of Employment Termination Check Properly Rejected: The appellant argued that the lower court erred in rejecting the appellant's proposed instruction setting out for the jury the fact that state law required an employee to be paid immediately upon separation. The Supreme Court disagreed on the basis that the plaintiff had argued that the check had been made out before his meeting with management, demonstrating that the decision to fire him had been made prior to any hearing. The Supreme Court held that the instruction would mislead and confuse the jury and that each side had the opportunity during trial to argue the significance of the check being made out prior to the hearing. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

Plaintiff Entitled to Instruction Adaptable to His Case: A railroad employee sued the railroad for injuries he received on the job. The defendant objected to the wording of a jury instruction proposed by the plaintiff and adopted by the lower court. The defendant argued that the instruction imposed a bias upon the jury against the defendant's position that no manpower or equipment was available to assist the plaintiff at the time he was injured. The Supreme Court ruled that in a Federal Employers' Liability Act action in which the plaintiff has submitted to the jury evidence tending to prove an actionable violation of the Act, he is entitled to an instruction adaptable to his case. Kalanick v. Burlington N. RR Co., 242 M 45, 788 P2d 901, 47 St. Rep. 532 (1990).

Question of Statutory Applicability Preserved for Appeal: Defendant argued that by failing to include a violation of statute claim in a pretrial order, plaintiffs abandoned the claim on appeal. However, the issue was properly preserved through jury instructions when plaintiffs presented an instruction that stated the statutory language verbatim. Further, the statute was the subject of a motion for summary judgment. Notwithstanding certification, an order denying summary judgment is interlocutory; thus, the applicability of the statute was not waived insofar as it was presented in the motion for summary judgment. Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Instruction Stating Applicable Law: In a case in which the plaintiff's proposed instruction had no basis in Montana law and other instructions adequately presented the applicable law, the plaintiff could not claim reversible error as to the giving or denying of certain instructions. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

Emotional Distress Damages — Error to Submit to Jury: Jury instruction on emotional distress damages was improper when the evidence was insufficient to raise a question of fact about the existence of severe emotional distress. Defendant's cross-claim alleged only that he felt bad, lost sleep, and became withdrawn as a result of the defendant's failure to release plaintiff's personal guaranty in violation of the alleged agreement. The Supreme Court endorsed the severe emotional distress standard found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts, holding that the adoption of the standard was only a new interpretation of the existing "significant impact" requirement and not a departure from prior law. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989), affirmed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), to the extent that it addressed the "serious" or "severe" element articulated in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), which is synonymous with the "significant impact" element found in Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984). First Bank-Billings and Johnson were overruled in Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), to the extent that First Bank-Billings and Johnson suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Fiduciary Relationship — Error to Submit Instruction to Jury: Evidence attested to longstanding business relationship between defendant and First Bank but did not indicate that the bank had acted as a financial adviser to the defendant in a manner other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor/creditor relationship. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Fraud — Refusal to Instruct on Actual Fraud Affirmed: The Supreme Court ruled that an instruction on actual fraud was warranted only if the requesting party raised a question of fact by presenting some evidence on each of the nine elements of actual fraud. The District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on actual fraud when the defendant failed to introduce evidence that the bank made a knowingly false representation and intended the defendant to rely on it to his detriment. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Malicious Prosecution Damages — Error in Submitting Instruction to Jury: Defendant's counterclaim alleged that he had suffered lost profits and damage to his reputation as a result of the plaintiff's suit. No evidence that the suit was wrongful was introduced, and the Supreme Court held that the utilization of the legal process to resolve a good faith controversy cannot constitute a basis for damages. The court further held that the counterclaim was in reality a charge of malicious prosecution and that one of the basic elements, termination of a prior proceeding in favor of the alleging party, was not present making it an error to submit the issue to the jury. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Negligence and "Res Ipsa" Instructions on Negligent Suppression of Forest Fire: In an action against the state for negligence in suppressing a forest fire, the Supreme Court held that disputed jury instructions on the reasonable person, hindsight, and intervening cause correctly stated the principles of negligence law and related to the exercise of reasonable care by the state. It was not error for the court to refuse to give an instruction on res ipsa loquitur because by the definition stated in the instruction, it did not appear to apply to the case. Jacobsen v. St., 236 M 91, 769 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 207 (1989).

Jury Instruction on Issue of Retaliation for Participation in Discrimination Action: Acts of retaliation for participating in proceedings before the Human Rights Commission are discrimination actions separate and apart from the claim of discrimination in the original proceedings. Plaintiff is therefore entitled to jury instructions based on his claim of retaliation and is further entitled to comment on the retaliation in oral argument. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Instruction Adequate Concerning Shifting of Blame: Instruction adopted by the trial court was adequate in directing the jury that the only parties that could be held liable were those named in the suit at the time of trial. Rollins v. Blair, 235 M 343, 767 P2d 328, 46 St. Rep. 39 (1989).

Objection Raised for First Time on Appeal: When objections to instructions at trial were based on redundancy but not on wording, the Supreme Court refused to consider a challenge to wording on appeal. The Supreme Court will not consider a challenge to an instruction based upon a reason that was not raised in the court below. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988), followed in Greytak v. RegO Co., 257 M 147, 848 P2d 483, 50 St. Rep. 204 (1993), and in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993). Greytak was followed in Turk v. Turk, 2008 MT 45, 341 M 386, 177 P3d 1013 (2008).

Failure to Assert Rights Under Will for Seven Years — Instructions on Equity Claims Refused: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. The rule that a party is entitled to jury instructions adaptable to his theory of the case is not absolute. The instructions must be supported by credible evidence. Plaintiffs were not entitled to the aid of equity. The District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on estoppel and laches or to include those issues in the special verdict form for the jury. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Jury Instructions on Proximate Cause Not Appropriate in Criminal Case: Defendant in a homicide case argued that refusal to give his offered instructions on proximate causation deprived him of the opportunity for the jury to consider his theory that the victim's death was a result of the victim's own negligence. Proximate cause is not a term that is generally used in criminal jury instructions. Problems created by concepts of proximate cause should be faced as problems of the culpability required for conviction and not as problems of causation. St. v. Magruder, 234 M 492, 765 P2d 716, 45 St. Rep. 2075 (1988).

Instruction in Comparative Negligence, Not Sudden Emergency: A jury instruction, which presented three standards of care expected of motor vehicle drivers and said that failure to meet the standards constituted negligence, was more concrete than the sudden emergency instruction banned in White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986). Because it spoke to both drivers, it was considered an instruction in comparative negligence, not one in sudden emergency, and was properly given. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Coexistence of Instructions on Parol Evidence and Waiver: An instruction prohibiting consideration of parol evidence on what the contract language required for performance may coexist with an instruction and evidence on waiver. Pipe Indus. Ins. Fund Trust v. Consol. Pipe Trades Trust, 233 M 162, 760 P2d 711, 45 St. Rep. 1392 (1988).

Instructions Not Identical — Not Repetitious: The trial court gave two instructions on waiver that adequately covered applicable law but refused to give another offered instruction, holding it inapplicable. Of the given instructions, each covered areas left out by the other; other portions were simply repetitive, not conflicting. Instructions not essentially identical are not unduly repetitive. Pipe Indus. Ins. Fund Trust v. Consol. Pipe Trades Trust, 233 M 162, 760 P2d 711, 45 St. Rep. 1392 (1988).

Inapplicable Subject Matter in Proposed Instructions: The Supreme Court cited In re Estate of Hogan, 218 M 428, 708 P2d 1018, 42 St. Rep. 1711 (1985), in holding that a party is not prejudiced by a refusal of proposed instructions when the subject matter of the instructions is not applicable to the facts or supported by trial evidence. Webcor Electronics, Inc. v. Home Electronics, Inc., 231 M 377, 754 P2d 491, 45 St. Rep. 695 (1988), followed in St. v. Barnes, 232 M 405, 758 P2d 264, 45 St. Rep. 1150 (1988). See also Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Jury to Be Informed of Effect of Verdict: The Supreme Court adopted the reasoning of the Idaho Supreme Court, as expressed in Seppi v. Betty, 579 P2d 683 (1978), in holding that Montana juries can and should be trusted with the information about the consequences of their verdicts. Upon the request of a party, the trial court must give this instruction unless the court finds the issue so complex as to confuse the jury. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Instruction on Duty to Display Traffic Warning Flags — Important Theory of Case: Plaintiff objected to giving of an instruction regarding his duty to display warning flags on the highway near his disabled vehicle on the ground that because a truck parked behind the disabled vehicle was exhibiting its flashing emergency lights, there was no need for warning flags. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting both the statutory duty to place warning flags and defendant's right to instruction on that duty as an important theory of the case. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Instruction on Duty to Reduce Speed Improperly Denied — Important Theory of Case: The District Court improperly denied defendant's proposed instruction on relative duties between a pedestrian on a highway and a driver approaching the pedestrian, citing as grounds for denial: (1) 61-8-303 does not apply to pedestrians not in a crosswalk; and (2) under evidence in the case, the driver, prior to the accident, did not perceive any special hazard with respect to the pedestrian. The Supreme Court remanded because 61-8-303 applied to all pedestrians whether or not in a crosswalk and because the second reason was an issue for determination by the jury. The duty of the driver to reduce speed was an important part of the theory of plaintiff's case. Refusal to instruct constituted reversible error. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Investigative Responsibility of Newspaper Before Publishing: A newspaper has a duty to investigate before publishing when it has facts that indicate material is highly suspect. The Supreme Court remanded this case upon finding that a jury instruction defining "reckless disregard of the truth" as being equivalent to having serious doubts about the truth tended to shield a newspaper from its investigative responsibility. Sible v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 224 M 163, 729 P2d 1271, 43 St. Rep. 2101 (1986).

Jury Instruction on Presumption of Accidental Fire Inappropriate — Evidence of Arson: Defendant's proposed jury instruction that ". . . ordinarily, it will be presumed that an unexplained fire was caused by an accident or natural causes or, at least, that it was not of criminal origin" was properly refused when suspicious facts strongly indicating arson accompanied the fire. St. v. Atlas, 224 M 92, 728 P2d 421, 43 St. Rep. 2042 (1986).

No Bad Faith Instruction in Absence of Actual Knowledge of Defects — Knowledge Not Imputed: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not instructing the jury on breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, arguing that the covenant should have been applied to a real estate partnership and to a development partnership. The Supreme Court found no error in refusing to instruct as against the real estate partnership because it was not shown at trial that the partnership had actual knowledge of claimed defects in the land necessary to constitute bad faith. The court further held that while knowledge may be imputed to a real estate partnership as a member of a development partnership, it cannot be imputed from the development partnership to the real estate partnership. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Jury Instruction Regarding Ambiguities in Product Labeling and Instructions for Use — Issue of Fact: Herbicide manufacturer contended the District Court erred in instructing the jury that ambiguities in the wording on product labels and in application instructions were to be construed against the manufacturers, claiming that this rule of construction was a rule of law for the court to apply and not a proper subject for a jury instruction. Plaintiff argued that the instruction was justified because the manufacturer presented the meaning of the application instructions as a factual issue at trial. The Supreme Court agreed, concluding that the jury instruction was a correct statement of law under the facts of the case. Vandalia Ranch, Inc. v. Farmers Union Oil & Supply Co., 221 M 253, 718 P2d 647, 43 St. Rep. 790 (1986).

No Evidence in Record to Warrant Jury Instruction on Mitigating Circumstances: Defendant contended District Court erred in refusing to give jury instructions on the lesser offense of mitigated deliberate homicide. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no error in refusing to instruct for two reasons: (1) the only potentially mitigating circumstance presented at trial concerned defendant's use of alcohol on the night in question; however, in St. v. White, 194 M 421, 632 P2d 1118, 38 St. Rep. 1417 (1981), the court held that voluntary intoxication alone was insufficient to show the extreme mental or emotional stress which would mitigate deliberate homicide charges; and (2) since defendant's main defense at trial was alibi, he was entitled either to an acquittal or to be found guilty, and if the jury believed his testimony, it would have been inconsistent with finding defendant guilty of mitigated deliberate homicide. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Verbatim Reading of Unfair Claim Settlement Practices as Jury Instruction — Harmless Error: An insurer claimed the District Court erred in including in its charge to the jury a verbatim reproduction of the 14 proscribed unfair claim settlement practices contained in 33-18-201, contending that a majority of the practices had no applicability to this case. On appeal, the Supreme Court found there was at least an arguable basis for submission to the jury of 12 of the 14 practices enumerated, and that inclusion of the two inapplicable practices in the jury instruction was harmless and not prejudicial. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Sudden Emergency Instruction — No Longer to Be Used: The Supreme Court held that the sudden emergency instruction may no longer be used because the instruction, which provided a test for actions done in the course of a sudden emergency, added nothing to the established law applicable to any negligence case and might only leave an impression in the minds of jurors that a driver is somehow excused from the ordinary standard of care because an emergency existed. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), distinguished in Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988), and followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Duty to Warn of Known Danger — Lack of Warning of Known Danger as Defect: In a tort action over injury caused by a hay baler, the Supreme Court held, based on the holding of Brown v. N. Am. Mfg. Co., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), that it was error to instruct the jury that a manufacturer has no duty to warn a person who claims to be entitled to a warning if the person actually knows of the danger. Under the facts of this case, there is a duty to warn of a known danger if the product is unreasonably dangerous and lack of such warning can make an otherwise nondefective product defective. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986). Recognition of a failure to warn claim and the Brown criteria were applied in Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993). See also Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Tort Action — Refusal to Instruct on Party's Central Contention — Reversible Error: In a tort action, it was error for the District Court to refuse to instruct on the central contentions of the plaintiff and instead undertake to instruct the jury in an incomplete manner. Taken as a whole, the instructions did not allow the jury to consider plaintiff's central contentions regarding unnecessary hazard rendering the machine defective and unreasonably dangerous. It is reversible error to refuse to instruct on an important part of a party's theory of the case. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986).

Instructions Taken as Whole Not Contradictory: On issue of partial abandonment of an easement, the jury instructions taken as a whole were not contradictory; thus, the trial court did not commit error in giving certain of the instructions to the jury. As stated in Rock Springs Corp. v. Pierre, 37 St. Rep. 1378 (1980), the instructions are considered given in their entirety. Where the jury instructions, taken as a whole, state the law applicable to the case, a party cannot claim reversible error as to the giving of certain instructions. Flynn v. Siren, 219 M 359, 711 P2d 1371, 43 St. Rep. 10 (1986).

Denial of Proposed Jury Instructions — No Error: The defendant was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and on appeal contended that denial of two of his proposed jury instructions constituted error. At trial, he had sought to introduce the victim's medical and Youth Court records in an attempt to impeach her credibility as a witness. The District Court refused to allow inspection of the records, and the Supreme Court ruled that because of the refusal, a jury instruction relating to credibility based on such records could not be given. His second proposed instruction stated the precaution that rape is easy to allege and difficult to defend against and called for instructing the jury to view the victim's testimony with caution. The Supreme Court, quoting St. v. Liddell, 211 M 180, 685 P2d 918, 41 St. Rep. 1293 (1984), ruled that such a cautionary instruction "is an improper and unwarranted comment on the evidence and is not required under the law or by reason of public policy. Therefore, such an instruction should not be given." The propriety of denying the defendant's proposed jury instructions was adequately supported, and conviction was affirmed. St. v. Mendenhall, 219 M 328, 721 P2d 1255, 42 St. Rep. 2060 (1985).

Questioning on Voir Dire: Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in allowing attorney to pose to prospective jurors hypothetical questions about possible instructions from the court to ascertain if the prospective jurors would follow the law as given to the jury by the court. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985), followed in Young v. Horton, 259 M 34, 855 P2d 502, 50 St. Rep. 662 (1993).

Technical Error — Not Reversible: In a condemnation action, the jury was given an instruction with a technical defect. On appeal, appellants failed to show any prejudice or interference with their substantial rights by reason of the instruction. Mere technical defects in the instructions, if considered as a whole, do not render such errors reversible error. Unless an error affects the substantial rights of an appellant, judgment will not be reversed. St. v. DeTienne, 218 M 249, 707 P2d 534, 42 St. Rep. 1557 (1985), followed in Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2005 MT 217, 328 M 260, 121 P3d 506 (2005).

"Substantial Factor" Rule To Apply:

The substantial factor rule applies when two causes concur to bring about an injury and either cause would have been sufficient for the result. Thus, it applied in this case when the necessity for amputation of the leg of a state prison inmate could have been caused either by the inmate's preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs or by the negligence of doctors treating him for an ingrown toenail. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

The Supreme Court stated its approval of the "legal cause" (substantial factor) instruction in this medical malpractice case involving alleged concurrent and subsequent tortfeasors (surgeon, nurses, and radiologist). The court stated that the rule was developed primarily for cases such as the one under consideration in which application of the "but for" (proximate cause) rule would allow each defendant to escape responsibility because the conduct of one or more others would have been sufficient to produce the same result. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985), followed in Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985), and Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996).

Instruction on Duty to Examine Bank Statement That Was Not Sent: Trial court properly refused defendant bank's offered jury instruction on the duty of plaintiff depositor to examine statements and report errors within a reasonable time because the statements were not sent to depositor and there was no question in the case as to his unauthorized signature or as to alterations. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Instructions Expanding Pleadings — Prejudice Negated by New Trial on Other Grounds: The grant of a new trial negated any prejudice to defendant from unexpected proposed supplemental jury instructions submitted by plaintiff on the last court day before trial began. The defendant argued the additional instructions were in effect amendments to the pleadings and contained new legal theories. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Instructions on Statutes Preferred: In a wrongful death action arising out of a head-on collision, plaintiff offered instructions quoting federal and state laws which concern the dimming of headlights at night on the highway. The court gave the instruction concerning the federal regulations but refused to give the instruction quoting 61-9-220 and 61-9-221. Plaintiff pointed out that a violation of the federal regulation may be considered by the jury in determining negligence, while a violation of a Montana statute is negligence as a matter of law. The Supreme Court said it would have been preferable for the District Court to instruct on Montana statutes as they pertain to the use of high and low beams of headlights at night. The court also found that the instruction given was consistent with the statutes, so the jury was not misled. Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Submission of Instruction Not Needed in Order to Appeal State's Instruction: The state contended that because appellant did not submit a jury instruction defining "reasonable doubt", he should be barred from complaining about the state's instruction that was given by the court. That rule applies, however, only when the court fails to instruct on a point of law. The appellant clearly voiced his objection to the instruction and stated his reasons with particularity. The court, nonetheless, overruled the objection and made no effort to strike, clarify, or alter the instruction in response to appellant's objection. The appellant preserved his assignment of error. St. v. Lucero, 214 M 334, 693 P2d 511, 41 St. Rep. 2509 (1984).

No Error in Giving, Refusing Certain Instructions: There was no error in refusing one instruction when the point was adequately covered in another instruction. The instruction that an original survey of real property boundary must, whenever possible, be retraced is not inconsistent with the instruction that jury, in making decision, is not to consider or conjecture as to effect of decision on boundaries or corners of adjacent lands owned by persons not parties to suit. Therefore, both instructions were justifiable. Funk v. Robbin, 212 M 437, 689 P2d 1215, 41 St. Rep. 1848 (1984), followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Indemnity — Refusal to Instruct on Active/Passive Negligence Not Reversible Error: Where the plaintiff supplier of certain air pollution control equipment brought an action against the defendant manufacturing company for breach of warranty, the District Court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on the active/passive negligence of the plaintiff. The record in this case shows that there was no active negligence on the part of the plaintiff and he therefore did not lose his right to indemnity under the rationale of Town Pump, Inc. v. Diteman, 191 M 98, 622 P2d 212, 38 St. Rep. 54 (1981). Iowa Mfg. Co. v. Joy Mfg. Co., 206 M 26, 669 P2d 1057, 40 St. Rep. 1479 (1983).

"Negative" Jury Instructions Discouraged as Confusing to Jury: Where the defendant in a condemnation action sought compensation for the decreased value of his property as a result of heat, dust, and noise arising from travel upon a proposed interstate frontage road, the District Court did not err in refusing to give an instruction requested by the state that injected a nonissue into the case. Under the rationale of Brown v. N. Am. Mfg., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), the court has discouraged the use of such negative instructions to prevent confusion. St. v. Howery, 204 M 417, 664 P2d 1387, 40 St. Rep. 975 (1983).

Standard Self-Defense Instruction Given — Repetitious Instruction Tailored to Facts Held Improper: In aggravated assault trial, the 9th instruction fully set forth the elements of self-defense and the 10th instruction related to self-defense by one assaulted with fists, as defendant claimed he had been. The 10th instruction was repetitious and may have placed undue emphasis on the requirements for self-defense. On remand following reversal on another issue, the court recommended that the repetitious instruction not be given. St. v. White, 202 M 491, 658 P2d 1111, 40 St. Rep. 235 (1983).

Jury Instruction — Breadth of Statutory Incorporation by Reference: Section 69-4-201 specifically incorporates only the construction standards of the National Electrical Safety Code rather than the code in its entirety. In the absence of specific statutory incorporation, the provisions of the National Electrical Safety Code can only furnish evidence of a standard of care to be considered in determining negligence. Therefore, the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violation of any provision of the National Electrical Safety Code constitutes negligence per se was proper. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), overruled in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988), and followed with respect to the Architects' Handbook of Professional Practice in Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. Cannaday, 230 M 151, 749 P2d 63, 45 St. Rep. 102 (1988).

Defendant Entirely Liable — Evidence Not Permitting Apportionment: Plaintiff injured his back when the seat in the locomotive he was operating broke and threw him backward. Plaintiff had had two prior back injuries which had been successfully treated. Defendant objected to the following instruction, contending it was an improper statement of the law: "Where a pre-existing condition exists which has been aggravated by the accident, it is your duty, if possible, to apportion the amount of disability and pain between that caused by the pre-existing condition and that caused by the accident. But if you find that the evidence does not permit such an apportionment, then the defendant is liable for the entire disability." The Supreme Court found the instruction proper, relying on an analogous situation in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), and held that a plaintiff should not go uncompensated should the evidence not permit an apportionment of injuries and damages. Callihan v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 350, 654 P2d 972, 39 St. Rep. 2158 (1982), followed in Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Lack of Basis for Instructions: In a suit by tenants against a landlord whose building burned, the trial court properly refused the landlord's requested instructions since some of them had no citation of authority showing them to be correct statements of the law, the landlord did not point to the record evidence justifying the instructions, the jury was adequately instructed on both the common-law negligence and the negligence per se theories, and the requested instructions were repetitious and were conflicting since they did not distinguish between the two negligence theories. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Repetitious Instructions: Repetitious instructions setting forth abstract principles of law should be avoided. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions on Effect of Contributory Negligence Properly Given: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that the plaintiff was contributorily negligent and the District Court did not commit error in giving verbatim the Montana Jury Instruction Guide instruction No. 4 on the effect of contributory negligence. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions Properly Refused — Harmless Error: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, the District Court did not err in refusing to give the plaintiff's jury instructions relating to the defendant's negligence. Because the jury based its decision on the plaintiff's contributory negligence, the defendant's negligence could not have affected the result in this case. If any error occurred, it was harmless. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

"Mere Happening" Instruction — Propriety — No Inference Except Res Ipsa Loquitur: Plaintiff, a mail carrier, was attempting to negotiate a left turn. Evidence was unclear as to whether he signaled for the turn. The roadway into which he was attempting to turn was a private driveway open to public use. While turning he was struck by defendant, who was attempting to pass. The road was lined for passing and visibility was clear. The jury was instructed that "[t]he mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not give rise to legal inference that it was caused by negligence or that any party to this action was negligent or otherwise at fault". The Supreme Court said that it can be confusing to a jury to give this instruction and recommended against it, but held that it was not prejudicial error to give the instruction in this case in light of the facts of the case and other instructions given. The Supreme Court affirmed that the "mere happening" instruction is totally incompatible in res ipsa loquitur cases. It is the law in negligence cases that negligence may not be inferred from the happening of an accident, but that res ipsa loquitur is an exception to the rule. Sampson v. Snow, 194 M 392, 632 P2d 1122, 38 St. Rep. 1441 (1981).

Proposed Jury Instructions — Definition of "Impeach" — Consideration of Instructions as a Whole: A defendant was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault. On appeal, he alleged error in the failure to give a jury instruction on the definition of "impeach". The Supreme Court held that the definition was not necessary because the jury was fully instructed on that aspect of the law and defense counsel had not been precluded from arguing his theory of the case. Another alleged error was in the failure to give an instruction outlining certain types of evidence that could serve to impeach a witness' testimony. The Supreme Court said that, although it would not have been error to give such a specific instruction, it was unnecessary. The instructions given contained the substance of this omitted instruction. The instructions as a whole were considered in determining adequacy. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Instruction on Entitlement of Broker to Sales Commission Held Incorrect — No Error in Refusal: In an action by the plaintiff real estate brokerage firm to recover a real estate sales commission from the defendant, the trial court did not err in refusing the defendant's proposed instructions, relating to payment of the sales commission. The proposed instruction was misleading in that it implied that a broker employed to "sell or effect a sale" would not be entitled to his commission if the sale had not been consummated, even if such failure was due to acts of the seller. A broker is entitled to his commission even if the sale has not been completed if a ready, willing, and able buyer is procured and the failure to consummate was solely due to the wrongful acts or interference of the seller. Assoc. Agency of Bozeman, Inc. v. Pasha, 191 M 407, 625 P2d 38, 38 St. Rep. 344 (1981).

Jury Instruction Correct as to Real Estate Law — No Prejudice Shown Upon Referral: In an action by the plaintiff real estate brokerage firm to recover a real estate sales commission from the defendant, the trial court did not err in refusing to give the defendant's requested jury instruction. A party is not prejudiced by a refusal of his proposed instruction where the subject matter of the instruction is not applicable to the pleadings or the facts, is not supported by the evidence, or is adequately covered by other instructions submitted to the jury. While the instruction accurately sets forth the law that a landowner must be given a copy of the listing agreement, the subject was never raised in the pleadings and the defendant admitted that he may have received a copy and misplaced it. Thus, no error was committed. Assoc. Agency of Bozeman, Inc. v. Pasha, 191 M 407, 625 P2d 38, 38 St. Rep. 344 (1981).

No Prejudice From Superfluous Instruction: In an action by the plaintiff real estate brokerage firm to recover a real estate sales commission from the defendant, the trial court did not err in refusing to give the defendant's requested instruction setting forth the law of the Statute of Frauds. The contract at issue is not an oral contract for deed but the written listing agreement signed by the defendant. As there is no dispute over the listing agreement, the instruction was unnecessary and the defendant was not prejudiced by its refusal. Assoc. Agency of Bozeman, Inc. v. Pasha, 191 M 407, 625 P2d 38, 38 St. Rep. 344 (1981).

Denial of Instruction as Incorrect Statement of Law — Primary Duty of Avoiding Collision: The appellant claimed error in the trial court's denial of his proposed jury instruction stating that the primary duty of avoiding an accident is on a vehicle approaching from the rear when the vehicle in front has signaled for 100 feet. This was an inaccurate statement of the law, and as given, the jury instructions adequately explained the duties of the passing motorist and the left-turning motorist. Even if it had been a correct statement of the law, the proposed statement would have added nothing to the jury's understanding of the applicable law. Burns v. U. & R. Express, 191 M 343, 624 P2d 487, 38 St. Rep. 302 (1981), followed in St. v. DeGraw, 235 M 53, 764 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 2154 (1988).

Wrongful Death Action — Jury Entitled to Consider Whether Contractor Followed Directions of State: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, the court properly instructed the jury that it could consider whether the defendant properly followed the directions and instructions of the state. These directions are one factor to be considered in determining whether the contractor acted reasonably. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Manufacturer's Duty to Warn in Strict Liability Cases — Erroneous Instruction Not Prejudicial: Where plaintiffs who were injured in the fall of an elevator brought a products liability action based on strict liability against the manufacturer, of the elevator cable, it was error for the court to instruct the jury that the manufacturer has a duty to warn of defects known to him only if he believes that the user of the product will not discover the defect. In strict liability cases, a manufacturer is not relieved of the duty to warn because of any prior experience by the consumer with the product. However, where the evidence showed that the failure to warn was not the cause of the plaintiffs' injuries, the erroneous instruction was not prejudicial. Rost v. C. F. & I. Steel Corp., 189 M 485, 616 P2d 383, 37 St. Rep. 1657 (1980), distinguished in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

"Mere Happening" Instruction Found Incompatible: The "mere happening" instruction in a res ipsa case may suggest to the jury that they are foreclosed from considering the evidence provided by the happening of the accident itself. The instructions in this case were found so incompatible that a reversal was required. Helmke v. Goff, 182 M 494, 597 P2d 1131 (1979).

Failure to Properly Instruct: There was a complete failure to instruct the jury on damages and to properly instruct the jury on the issues relating to respondent's counterclaims. Hence, the trial court decision was vacated and remanded for a new trial. Billings Leasing Co. v. Payne, 176 M 217, 577 P2d 386 (1978).

Circumstantial Evidence Instruction Proper Only When No Direct Evidence: A confession, such as that appearing in the record, constitutes direct evidence of the corpus delecti; thus it is not error to refuse a circumstantial evidence instruction. St. v. Hallam, 175 M 492, 575 P2d 55 (1978).

Negligence Per Se — Directed Verdict: The court should have granted a directed verdict against defendant truckdriver who carelessly placed himself in a position of not being able to stop behind codefendant's truck and negligently passed to avoid collision but collided instead with an oncoming vehicle in which plaintiff's husband was a passenger. The court was in error to instruct the jury on sudden emergency when the driver's negligence created his own emergency. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Basis for Approving Instructions: The court did not err in refusing certain instructions when repetitious, misleading, or an incorrect statement of the law, or in giving instructions which were a correct statement of all relevant rules that have emerged from accepted case authorities. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Effect of Preliminary Instruction — Criminal Trial: Judge's reading cautionary instruction in substantially standard language prior to introduction of evidence was not error. St. v. Armstrong, 172 M 296, 562 P2d 1129 (1977).

Instructions to Be Evaluated as a Whole: When jury instructions as a whole correctly state the law, prejudice is not created because of refusal of a proposed instruction. Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976); St. v. Anderson, 171 M 188, 557 P2d 795 (1976); Holland v. Konda, 142 M 536, 385 P2d 272 (1963).

Comment on Evidence: Court erred in giving jury instruction based on its own finding of fact from inconclusive testimony. Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976).

Refusal to Give Negligence Instruction — Conflicting Evidence: Refusal of instruction on reckless misconduct and the defense of contributory negligence was error in negligence action where both drivers were driving late at night without headlights, and reasonable men could reach opposing conclusions as to whether or not defendant was willfully and wantonly negligent. Mallory v. Cloud, 167 M 115, 535 P2d 1270 (1975).

Instructions — Theory of the Case: When defendant bank was sued for negligently cashing plaintiffs' check, the bank was entitled to instruction regarding possible defenses based upon the provisions of the U.C.C. since a party is entitled to have instructions given which are adaptable to his theory of the case. Williams v. Mont. Nat'l Bank of Bozeman, 167 M 24, 534 P2d 1247 (1975).

Instructions in Sex Offense Cases: Refusal to give an instruction that the testimony of a complaining witness in a sex offense case should be viewed with caution since the charge is easily made and difficult to disprove is not in error unless specific cause is shown for distrusting the testimony of the complaining witness such as manifest malice, desire for revenge, or an absence of corroborating evidence tending to support the facts testified to by the complaining witness. St. v. Ballew, 166 M 270, 532 P2d 407 (1975).

Specificity of Objections — Purpose: Objections to jury instructions must be specific. The purpose of this rule is to give the judge an opportunity to correct his own errors, and objections will not be heard on appeal unless they were initially raised at trial. Highway Comm'n v. Beldon, 166 M 246, 531 P2d 1324 (1975), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993).

Rules of the Road — Instructions on Nonapplicable Law as Error: In action for negligence in making left turn in no passing zone, it was error to instruct jury on inapplicable laws prohibiting anyone from driving on left side of road, especially when the instruction was combined with instruction that statutory violations are negligence as a matter of law. Rude v. Neal, 165 M 520, 530 P2d 428 (1974).

No Evidence of Negligence — Instruction in Ordinary Care Proper: In action for wrongful death of boy who was killed by brahma bull at rodeo, jury instructions on ordinary care of a reasonable person were sufficient where there was no proof of negligence against the rodeo company. Ross v. Golden St. Rodeo Co., 165 M 337, 530 P2d 1166 (1974).

Instructions — Motor Vehicle Negligence — Error: Court erred in giving instructions which permitted jury to find plaintiff contributorily negligent when such was impossible as a matter of law. Smith v. Babcock, 157 M 81, 482 P2d 1014 (1971).

Instructions — Negligence — Effect of F.E.L.A.: Instructions correctly blended motor vehicle, state negligence, and Federal Employer's Liability Act negligence laws, and jury was properly charged. Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 M 12, 473 P2d 549 (1970).

Interchange of Words — Preserving for Review: Appellant who objected to jury instruction but did not specifically object to an interchange of words therein did not preserve review of the interchange. Cross v. Tretheway, 155 M 337, 471 P2d 538 (1970).

Instructions Proper — Negligence — Failure to Offer Instructions: Instructions were proper on issue of wanton negligence. Plaintiff was precluded from assigning several instructions as error because he failed to offer any instructions on the issue. Gunderson v. Brewster, 154 M 405, 466 P2d 589 (1970).

Refusal to Give Instructions — Deprivation of Defense: Denial of offered instructions which were adaptable to defendant's theory of the case was prejudicial error where such denial deprived him of a possible defense of assumption of risk. Wollan v. Lord, 142 M 498, 385 P2d 102 (1963), distinguished in Graveley v. Springer, 145 M 486, 402 P2d 41 (1965).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Instruction to Be Offered: If plaintiff desired the jury instructed on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it was his duty to tender such instruction and request that it be given. Whitney v. NW. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 125 M 528, 242 P2d 257 (1952).

Instructions to Be Obeyed: Instructions to the jury constitute the law of the case and must be obeyed by the jury. A verdict contrary to them is against law, even though they be erroneous, necessitating a new trial, as where under the undisputed evidence an instruction amounted to one to find for defendant, whereas the jury found for plaintiff. Ingman v. Hewitt, 107 M 267, 86 P2d 653 (1938).

Failure to Request Instruction on Evidence Objected to — Effect: Where in an action against a principal and his surety declarations of the former were admissible as to him but inadmissible as to the latter, failure of the surety to request an instruction that such evidence should be limited in its application to the principal barred the surety from complaining of the court's ruling admitting the evidence over objection. Outlook Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 70 M 8, 223 P 905 (1924).

Objection to Unspecific Instruction — Offer of Instruction Required: A party who desires a more specific instruction than the one given must offer one to conform with his views of the law. Zanos v. Great N. Ry., 60 M 17, 198 P 138 (1921); Heitman v. Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Ry., 45 M 406, 123 P 401 (1912); Rand v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 398, 107 P 87 (1910); St. v. Broadbent, 19 M 467, 48 P 775 (1897); Mulligan v. Mont. Union Ry., 19 M 135, 47 P 795 (1897).

Transcript on Appeal: Section 93-5502, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 46, M.R.Civ.P.), providing what shall be deemed excepted to, was not designed to modify the provision of subsection 5 of section 93-5101, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 51, M.R.Civ.P.), so as to do away with the necessity of identifying or authenticating, in the transcript on appeal, an instruction which was refused. Roberts v. Sinnott, 54 M 114, 169 P 49 (1917).

Objection to Instructions — Application of Rule: The provision that at the settlement of the instructions the particular grounds of objection or exception to those deemed erroneous shall be stated, else a motion for a new trial shall not be granted nor a cause reversed by the Supreme Court for error in them, applies only to instructions given and not to those refused. Billings Realty Co. v. Big Ditch Co., 43 M 251, 115 P 828 (1911).

SPECIFICATION OF OBJECTION REQUIRED

Failure to Object — Waiver of Right to Appeal: Failure to object to a jury instruction at the trial level amounts to a waiver of the right to raise an objection on appeal. St. v. Holzapfel, 230 M 105, 748 P2d 953, 45 St. Rep. 53 (1988), citing St. v. Long, 223 M 502, 726 P2d 1364, 43 St. Rep. 1948 (1986). Holzapfel was followed in Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998).

No Objection to Jury View — New Trial Not Granted: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not granting a new trial when the jury was allowed to view the property prior to the time the plaintiff rested her case and in not giving a cautionary instruction. However, the record showed that plaintiff's counsel made no objection to the jury view and did not request a cautionary instruction. The Supreme Court found no District Court error for a procedure to which plaintiff did not object. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

No Objection to Instructions — Law of the Case: An instruction given without objection becomes the law of the case. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Lack of Basis for Instructions: In a suit by tenants against a landlord whose building burned, the trial court properly refused the landlord's requested instructions for some of them had no citation of authority showing them to be correct statements of the law, the landlord did not point to the record evidence justifying the instructions, the jury was adequately instructed on both the common-law negligence and the negligence per se theories, and the requested instructions were repetitious and were conflicting, as they did not distinguish between the two negligence theories. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Objections Not Raised at Trial — Effect: Instructions were not reviewable on appeal because objections made did not cover objections and contentions urged on appeal. The objection must point out where the evidence is insufficient in order to preserve it for appeal. Roberts Realty Corp. v. Great Falls, 160 M 144, 500 P2d 956 (1972); Dieruf v. Gallaher, 156 M 440, 481 P2d 322 (1971); Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 M 12, 473 P2d 549 (1970); Vogel v. Fetter Livestock Co., 144 M 127, 394 P2d 766 (1964). See also Zimmerman v. Bozeman Prod. Credit Ass'n, 233 M 156, 759 P2d 166, 45 St. Rep. 1387 (1988); Reno v. Erickstein, 209 M 36, 679 P2d 1204 (1984).

Appellate Review of Erroneous Instructions: The Supreme Court, in reviewing errors assigned on the giving of instructions, may consider only the particular objections presented to the trial court at the time the instructions were settled. Holland Furnace Co. v. Rounds, 139 M 75, 360 P2d 412 (1961); Teesdale v. Anschutz Drilling Co., 138 M 427, 357 P2d 4 (1960); Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926); Stiemke v. Jankovich, 72 M 363, 233 P 904 (1925); Eablonski

v. Close, 70 M 292, 225 P 129 (1924); Humber v. Marshall, 60 M 267, 198 P 747 (1921); Lehane v. Butte Elec. Ry., 37 M 564, 97 P 1038 (1908).

Failure to Object — New Trial or Appeal Unavailable: The District Court is precluded from granting a new trial for error in an instruction not specifically pointed out at the time of settlement of the instructions, and on appeal the Supreme Court will not consider any error not so pointed out. Pilgeram v. Haas, 118 M 431, 167 P2d 339 (1946); Lundquist v. Jennison, 66 M 516, 214 P 67 (1923).

Appellate Review — Objection Required at Time Instructions Settled: In reviewing instructions, the Supreme Court is limited to objections made at the time the instructions were settled. Tripp v. Silver Dyke Min. Co., 70 M 120, 224 P 272 (1924); St. v. Newman, 66 M 180, 213 P 805 (1923); Morgan v. Hines, 65 M 306, 211 P 778 (1922); Sanborn Co. v. Powers, 58 M 214, 190 P 990 (1920); Stokes v. Long, 52 M 470, 159 P 28 (1916); Flathead County St. Bank v. Ingham, 51 M 438, 153 P 1005 (1915); Allen v. Bear Creek Coal Co., 43 M 269, 115 P 673 (1911); Frederick v. Hale, 42 M 153, 112 P 70 (1910).

No Review of Improper Instruction: The Supreme Court in its review of instructions is limited to the objections made by counsel for appellant at the time they were settled. Though an instruction may be incorrect but not open to the particular objection urged against it, the court may not declare error on that account. Outlook Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 70 M 8, 223 P 905 (1924).

Statutory Requirements as Controlling: An assignment of error based on the refusal of an instruction may not be considered on appeal where the instruction is not identified or presented in the manner required by statute. Roberts v. Sinnott, 54 M 114, 169 P 49 (1917).

SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION

Inadvertent Omission of Instruction by Court — Objection by Affidavit — Waiver: The trial court inadvertently omitted an instruction regarding the standard of care for a bicyclist. One of the plaintiff's attorneys noticed the omission but did not object or bring the omission to the court's attention until later when filing an affidavit. Plaintiff moved for a new trial based on the omission. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial, holding that the objection was untimely, that the lack of the instruction did not prejudice plaintiff, and that failure to object at the time that the instructions were given constituted waiver of the objection. Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Failure to Object to Court Solution for Improper Jury Instruction — New Trial Precluded: During settlement of jury instructions, plaintiff withdrew an objectionable instruction, but the instruction was inadvertently read to the jury anyway. The court reported to the jury that the attorneys had stipulated that the instruction should be removed, the correct instruction was given, and the erroneous instruction was not sent to the jury room. Defendant argued that because the inadvertent instruction was a misstatement of law, he was prejudiced and therefore entitled to a new trial. The Supreme Court followed Rasmussen v. Sibert, 153 M 286, 456 P2d 835 (1969), in holding that even if defendant objected to the reading of the incorrect instruction, there was no objection made to the solution used by the trial court in dealing with the mistake. Because defendant did not move for mistrial or other corrective action, choosing instead to submit the case to the jury based on the posture that it was in, he was precluded from requesting relief in the nature of a mistrial for the first time on appeal after receiving a verdict he considered adverse. The same rationale applied to defendant's complaint regarding an allegedly improper closing argument by plaintiff's attorney. Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Motor Vehicle Accident — Sudden Emergency Instruction Usually Improper: As defendant passed codefendant driving downhill, codefendant speeded up and defendant cut in front of him while only 20 feet from an oncoming vehicle. Codefendant overturned in the other lane, and the next two oncoming vehicles were involved in a collision with him. Defendant's proposed sudden emergency doctrine instruction was properly refused. The instruction should not be given in an ordinary motor vehicle accident case. It is unnecessary and confusing, and the ordinary rules of negligence are applicable and sufficient. Further, a test for giving the instruction is that the perilous situation was not created by the person confronted by it and whom the instruction favors; in this case, whether defendant was negligent was very much in dispute, and the instruction was a comment on the evidence as it implied no negligence on his part. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984), followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Negligence Instruction Commenting on Evidence — Theory of Instruction Covered by Other Instructions: Defendant's instruction based on the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent was denied because the court believed it commented on the evidence. Other instructions adequately covered the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent, and the jury found the codefendant 100% negligent. The instruction was thus properly denied. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Sufficiency of Objection — Incorrect Statement of Law — Sufficiency of Evidence: In settling a boundary dispute, the Supreme Court held that the objection to a jury instruction as being an incorrect statement of law was insufficient, not having specified the defect. Considering the jury instructions as a whole, the Supreme Court held that the jury was fully and correctly instructed on the law, that there was substantial evidence to support its verdict, and that no prejudice to the defendants arose from the failure of the court to give a proffered jury instruction. Nott v. Booke, 194 M 251, 633 P2d 678, 38 St. Rep. 1507 (1981).

Insufficient Objection — Reversal Improper: Where the objections to instructions did not specifically point out the alleged error, the Supreme Court may not reverse the cause on that account. Adams & Gregoire, Inc. v. Nat'l Indem. Co., 141 M 103, 375 P2d 112 (1962); Franck v. Hudson, 140 M 480, 373 P2d 951 (1962); Dimich v. N. Pac. Ry., 136 M 485, 348 P2d 786 (1959).

Negligence Action — Objection Found Insufficient: In a personal injury action based on negligence, objection to instructions because they placed a higher duty on defendants than that fixed by law was not sufficiently specific to be subject to review. LeCompte v. Wardell, 134 M 490, 333 P2d 1028 (1958).

Contract Action — Objection Found Insufficient: An objection to the effect that the giving of an instruction in an action to recover on an insurance policy was "an attempt by the court to nullify" a provision of the contract was insufficient to put the court in error. Scinski v. Great N. Life Ins. Co., 110 M 106, 99 P2d 218 (1940).

Specific Objection Not Included in General Objection: Where a party at time of settlement of instructions stated a general objection to an instruction, a new and different ground of objection not included in the general one was not properly available either on motion for new trial or on appeal. Brennan v. Mayo, 100 M 439, 50 P2d 245 (1935).

Specification of Law Not Required: The rule that no judgment shall be reversed on appeal for any error in instructions not specifically pointed out and excepted to at their settlement does not require that the party interposing an objection also state the correct principle of law upon which it is based. Though the objection was based on a wrong principle, if the instruction was actually erroneous, its review is nevertheless proper. First Nat'l Bank v. Perrine, 97 M 262, 33 P2d 997 (1934).

Instruction Unsupported by Evidence: An objection to an instruction that the evidence did not warrant its giving was insufficient under the provision that requires the objecting party to specify particularly wherein the instruction was insufficient or did not state the law. St. v. Daly, 77 M 387, 250 P 976 (1926).

Incorrect Statement of Law: An objection to an instruction that it was an incorrect statement of the law and would have a tendency to mislead the jury was insufficient to entitle the alleged error to review where it did not point out wherein the proposed instruction was objectionable. Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926).

Former Rule 52. Findings by the court; judgment on partial findings

Order Not Final When Time to Appeal Not Expired — Rules of Civil Procedure Applicable to Formal Probate Proceedings: An order becomes final only when the time to appeal has expired. In this case, plaintiff bank asserted that the District Court's order approving a trust accounting was conclusive on all persons pursuant to 72-35-206, so the accounting could not be reopened on defendants' motion for a new trial. However, the time to appeal had not expired when defendants moved for a new trial, so the order was not final and the accounting was subject to a postjudgment motion for a new trial. Further, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure supplied an appropriate mechanism for filing a motion after entry of a trust order because the rules apply to formal probate proceedings. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

No Mandatory Requirement That Court Accept Proposed Findings and Conclusions: The court properly exercised its discretion under this rule in declining to accept the plaintiff's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. There is no mandatory requirement that the court accept them. Grabenstein v. Sunsted, 237 M 254, 772 P2d 865, 46 St. Rep. 780 (1989).

GENERAL

Failure to Specify Grounds for Summary Judgment With Specific Particularity — Remand: Andersen sued Schenk in tort for failure to pay a commission on the sale of a ranch. The District Court granted Schenk summary judgment on the tort claims but did not specify the grounds on which summary judgment was based. The Supreme Court remanded for entry of an order on Andersen's tort claims that met the requirements of Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., and for entry of a new final judgment on the tort claims. Andersen v. Schenk, 2009 MT 399, 353 M 424, 220 P3d 675 (2009). See also Ravalli County Bank v. Gasvoda, 253 M 399, 833 P2d 1042 (1992).

Absence of Findings and Conclusions Regarding Amendment of Parenting Plan — Remand: The District Court repeatedly modified a parenting plan but entered no findings of fact or conclusions of law supporting its orders. If the record does not contain the essential facts underlying a court decision, the Supreme Court cannot conduct a meaningful review on appeal and the case must be remanded to allow the District Court to issue findings and conclusions that clarify the rationale for judgment. Here, the Supreme Court was unable to ascertain what essential and determining facts the District Court relied on when fashioning a parenting plan, so the case was remanded for entry of findings of fact and conclusions of law underlying the decisions to modify the parenting plan and to support the arrangement that was ordered. In re Marriage of Banka, 2009 MT 33, 349 M 193, 201 P3d 830 (2009). See also In re Marriage of Mills, 2006 MT 149, 332 M 415, 138 P3d 815 (2006).

Absence of Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Judgment Precluding Review of DUI Case — Remand: Goldsmith was stopped on the University of Montana-Missoula campus and charged with DUI. His license was taken for failure to submit to breath tests, and Goldsmith petitioned the District Court to have the license returned, but the court deferred to the officer's experience and simply denied the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court made no findings of fact or conclusions of law and did not enter judgment on the petition. Because the Supreme Court did not have sufficient information upon which to base a review, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice and the case was remanded for entry of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment as required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Goldsmith v. Dept. of Justice, 2007 MT 221, 339 M 65, 168 P3d 1041 (2007).

Failure to Enter Findings and Conclusions Regarding Continuation of Protective Order — Protective Order to Remain in Effect Pending Remand: Following the breakup of the parties, plaintiff obtained a temporary protective order in Justice's Court prohibiting contact by defendant. The court subsequently held a hearing on whether to make the protective order permanent and determined that good cause existed to continue the protective order. Defendant appealed to the District Court, which determined that defendant caused plaintiff substantial emotional distress, if not reasonable apprehension of bodily injury, by repeatedly harassing, threatening, and intimidating plaintiff. However, the court did not enter findings of fact and conclusions of law as required by this Rule precluding appellate review absent a complete order. The Supreme Court remanded for the required findings and conclusions, but left the protective order in place during remand. Edelen v. Bonamarte, 2007 MT 138, 337 M 407, 162 P3d 847 (2007).

Failure of Trial Court to Set Forth Findings and Facts in Granting Preliminary Injunction Reversible Error: The District Court granted a preliminary injunction in a road easement case, but failed to set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court noted that this rule requires a trial court to set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law that constitute the grounds of the trial court's action in granting or refusing interlocutory injunctions, and failure to do so makes it impossible for the Supreme Court to evaluate the parties' arguments on appeal. It is not enough that the trial court simply regurgitate the parties' contentions and reach a conclusion. Legal conclusions must be articulated and be in accord with governing statutes and interpretive case law. Thus, failure of a trial court to set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law is reversible error, and the Supreme Court remanded with instructions to vacate the order for an injunction and reconsider the matter. Snavely v. St. John, 2006 MT 175, 333 M 16, 140 P3d 492 (2006).

Error in Failure to Set Out Findings of Fact When Modifying Parenting Plan: Findings of fact are required when a District Court considers a petition for modification or amendment of a parenting plan. Although specific findings regarding each element in 40-4-212 are not necessary, the court must set forth the essential and determining facts upon which its conclusion rests. In the present case, the record was devoid of any oral or written findings of fact, and the District Court abused its discretion by amending a parenting plan without making the required findings and conclusions, constituting reversible error. In re Marriage of Lawrence, 2005 MT 125, 327 M 209, 112 P3d 1036 (2005). See also In re Marriage of Ulland, 251 M 160, 823 P2d 864 (1991).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment Without Hearing: The town of Virginia City sought to enjoin defendants from constructing a personal residence based on alleged permit violations. After a show cause hearing in District Court, a preliminary injunction was issued precluding further construction. Both parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment, which was granted to the town. Defendants moved to vacate pending completion of briefing and filing of transcripts and moved for oral argument, but the motions were denied. Defendants appealed, alleging that the District Court erred by granting summary judgment without affording defendants a hearing. The Supreme Court agreed. Summary judgment is only proper when there are no issues of material fact revealed in the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, and affidavits, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., a hearing is contemplated at which the District Court will consider not so much legal arguments, but rather whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, and in the ordinary case, the parties have a right to a summary judgment hearing unless the hearing is explicitly waived. In Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97 (1989), the Supreme Court noted that there may be an occasion when under the law and the facts adduced, the movant would be so clearly entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law that a District Court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but there was no such order in the present case. Rather, the language in the District Court's summary judgment order failed to state with sufficient particularity the rationale underlying the ruling, particularly the defenses raised in defendants' cross-motion for summary judgment. Although the District Court stated that it considered the entire record, there was no reference to considerations of defendants' affidavits. At one point, the court acknowledged that defendants were entitled to an evidentiary hearing, but failed to grant one, instead determining substantive questions that should have been left for a trial on the merits when granting injunctive relief. The only hearing afforded the parties in this case took place before discovery was conducted or responsive pleadings were filed, in noncompliance with Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The District Court abused its discretion in granting summary judgment without affording defendants a summary judgment hearing. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Virginia City v. Olsen, 2002 MT 176, 310 M 527, 52 P3d 383 (2002). The Cole exceptional circumstance test for granting summary judgment without a hearing was also applied in Richards v. Missoula County, 2009 MT 453, 354 M 334, 223 P3d 878 (2009).

Validity and Enforceability of Memorandum of Understanding — Findings of Facts and Conclusions of Law Not Required: The District Court ruled that the parties had entered into a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU) regarding the parties' obligations applicable to an agricultural lease. The defendants argued that the MOU was simply an agreement to agree, that only a formal settlement agreement would bind the parties, and that the District Court erred in finding the MOU to be binding without setting out its findings of fact and conclusions of law. The plaintiff maintained that the MOU was an unconditional settlement agreement, that a more formal settlement document was not necessary to finalize or carry out the MOU, and that the court had no duty to set out its findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court found no error in the District Court's ruling and affirmed. All interested parties were present at the settlement conference and participated in negotiations, which ended with all the parties signing the MOU, memorializing the agreement among the signatories. Clearly there was a meeting of the minds during negotiations, and all the parties anticipated being bound by the MOU. The MOU was not conditioned upon the execution of a formal settlement agreement, so one was not necessary. The Supreme Court has recognized the validity of similar MOUs in Hetherington v. Ford Motor Co., 257 M 395, 849 P2d 1039 (1993), and Marta Corp. v. Thoft, 271 M 109, 894 P2d 333 (1995), and concluded that the agreement memorialized in the MOU here was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories. Further, under this rule, findings and conclusions are unnecessary on decisions of motions except for judgments at trial, which did not apply in this case. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a defendant's motion to file an amended answer and counterclaim addressed to the original complaint, because those claims were also resolved by the MOU. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

Scope of Review on Appeal:

The Supreme Court reviews the findings of a trial court sitting without a jury to determine if the findings are clearly erroneous. Clear error occurs if: (1) the findings are not supported by substantial credible evidence; (2) the trial court has misapprehended the effect of the evidence; or (3) a review of the record leaves the Supreme Court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. Evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Here, evidence was substantial that three separate agreements memorialized one transaction for the sale and purchase of three ice cream distributor businesses, that a related consulting agreement was merely a promissory note wherein the seller agreed to finance the balance of the purchase price, and that the seller did not "sell, transfer, assign, and deliver" one of the distributor agreements to the buyer as promised. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Appellants must show by a clear preponderance of the evidence that the findings of fact of the District Court are incorrect, and it is their burden to do so before the Supreme Court may disturb those findings of fact. Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978).

Denial of Contractual Liability by Both Defendant Entities — Claims Put in Issue — Burden of Proof — Proposed Findings to Be Based Upon Evidence — No Evidence of Intent to Mislead as Basis for Relief From Judgment: Wright Oil sued Goodrich for petroleum products allegedly delivered but not paid for. Goodrich denied liability, claiming that the products were for the use of West Yellowstone Snowmobile Rentals, Inc. (WYSR), which owned Westgate Texaco, operated by Goodrich. Wright Oil amended its complaint to include WYSR, and after a bench trial, the District Court held against Goodrich because no evidence had been presented proving a contract between WYSR and Wright Oil. Wright Oil then filed a motion for relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P., seeking relief from the District Court's failure to hold against WYSR. On the basis of evidence not presented at trial, the District Court granted the motion and ordered an evidentiary hearing to reopen the case against WYSR regarding WYSR's contractual liability to Wright Oil. WYSR appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the motion because the circumstances of the District Court's failure to hold WYSR liable for the debt to Wright Oil were not so extraordinary as to warrant relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court noted that WYSR's denial of its liability put the allegation of its contractual liability at issue under Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P., and under 26-1-401 and 26-1-402, Wright Oil had the burden of going forward with the evidence of WYSR's contractual liability but failed to present evidence of a contractual relationship between WYSR and Wright Oil. The fact that Goodrich alleged that WYSR was liable for the debt could not, the Supreme Court held, be taken as an admission by WYSR that it was liable for the amounts due. Further, the Supreme Court noted that Wright Oil should not have been surprised by WYSR's proposed findings of fact that it was not liable for the debt because under this rule, a party's proposed findings of fact must be supported by the evidence, and Wright Oil failed to produce that evidence of liability. Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128, 54 St. Rep. 811 (1997).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Unnecessary for Decisions on Motions: Welch argued that the District Court had erred in adopting the figures for child support supplied by his ex-wife without any accompanying findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court held that this rule provides that findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions on motions and that although the Supreme Court encourages lower courts to include findings and conclusions, this encouragement does not translate into an absolute requirement. In re Marriage of Welch, 273 M 497, 905 P2d 132, 52 St. Rep. 1081 (1995).

Court Error in Arriving at Conclusion of Law Before Finding Facts: The plaintiff, Marry, was injured in an automobile accident involving a Deputy Sheriff. The lower court found the parties equally at fault and ordered that neither receive damages. Marry appealed on the basis that even if she were 50% negligent, she suffered more damages and should receive some money from the defendant. On reconsidering the case, the lower court stated that it was its intention that the plaintiff not receive any money and amended one of its findings to hold that Marry's negligence was greater than the defendant's and she was not entitled to recovery. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the lower court did not reexamine the evidence in amending its order. It formulated its conclusion of law first and then changed the findings of fact to conform to the conclusion already arrived at. Marry v. Missoula County Sheriff's Dept., 263 M 152, 866 P2d 1129, 50 St. Rep. 1751 (1993).

Denial of Motion to Change Venue — Explanation Within Court Discretion: Under this rule, when a court grants a motion under Rule 12 or Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., the court shall support its order with an explanation of its reason, but there is no comparable requirement for orders denying motions to change venue. A District Court is at liberty to deny a venue motion with or without comment. Therefore, it was not error for a court to provide an explanation for why defendant's motion for change of venue was denied, nor was it error for the court to direct plaintiff to prepare an appropriate memorandum and order for the court to sign. I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993).

Vacation of Injunction for Failure to Support It With Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law: Because the District Court improperly failed to make supporting findings of fact and conclusions of law when it issued its injunction, the Supreme Court had no basis to decide whether the injunction itself was proper. Therefore, the Supreme Court vacated the injunction and remanded for reconsideration and issuance of findings of fact and conclusions of law. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993).

Failure of District Court to Rule on Counterclaim for Emotional Distress and Attorney Fees as Requiring Remand — Refusal to Make Findings on Appeal: Plaintiff realty corporation brought an action in District Court to find defendants in default for failure to make payments under a contract for deed. Defendants counterclaimed for damages and attorney fees, alleging that as a result of plaintiff's breach of its fiduciary duty, defendants suffered emotional distress. The District Court made findings and conclusions that plaintiff breached its fiduciary duty to defendants, but the court failed to rule on defendants' counterclaim. The Supreme Court held that the failure of the District Court to rule on the counterclaim required a remand to the District Court for that purpose. The Supreme Court refused to make findings and conclusions on appeal, holding that deference to the District Court's position to observe the witnesses and assess their credibility required that the District Court make the findings. Cont. Realty, Inc. v. Gerry, 251 M 150, 822 P2d 1083, 48 St. Rep. 1134 (1991).

Failure to Specify Grounds for Summary Judgment — Remand: Failure of the District Court to specify the grounds for summary judgment rulings with sufficient particularity to apprise the parties and the appellate court of the rationale underlying the rulings resulted in remand of the case with instructions to enter reasons in support of summary adjudication. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 248 M 227, 810 P2d 1189, 48 St. Rep. 405 (1991), following Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981), and followed in Ravalli County Bank v. Gasvoda, 253 M 399, 833 P2d 1042, 49 St. Rep. 488 (1992). On remand, the District Court stated its reasons for granting respondents' summary judgment based on respondents' argument that a mobile home was lawfully repossessed. On subsequent appeal, the Supreme Court found that the home was actually converted. It was within the Supreme Court's power to reverse the District Court's grant of summary judgment and order summary judgment in favor of the appellant as a matter of law when all facts bearing on the issue were before the Supreme Court. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Supreme Court Deference to Workers' Compensation Court Judgment: The Supreme Court held that there was conflicting evidence concerning whether or not the claimant had suffered an additional injury or if his disability was the result of a prior accident. The court stated that when there was conflicting evidence, it would, in most cases, defer to the trial court. Sharkey v. Atl. Richfield Co., 238 M 159, 777 P2d 870, 46 St. Rep. 1169 (1989), followed in White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Unless posttrial motions are made by the losing party under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the losing party is not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal until proper service of notice of entry of judgment is made. This rule applies to orders that may become final as well as to judgments. In this case, notice of entry of judgment was not served and no posttrial motions were made. The time for appeal did not begin to run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Plaintiffs Not Entitled to Instructions on Equity Issues — Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary: Plaintiffs who waited 7 years to assert their rights under decedent's will were not entitled to proposed instructions relating to laches and equitable estoppel. No questions of equity were ever placed before the jury nor were such claims appropriate. Therefore, the trial judge was not required to make findings and conclusions. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Correctable Error — No Reversal: The District Court was determined to be in error in finding appellant had received $2,000 in temporary maintenance, when in fact she had received only $1,000. This error is correctable and does not constitute an abuse of discretion by the District Court rising to the level of reversible error. In re Marriage of Turbes, 234 M 152, 762 P2d 237, 45 St. Rep. 1805 (1988).

Error in Findings — Judgment Affirmed: In a contract dispute between the buyer and seller of property, the seller objected to 35 specific findings of the trial judge. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred both in stating that seller took no action to collect default fees and in describing the buyer's expenses in improving the property. The findings were amended to reflect these facts. However, no change was required in the judgment, and the other challenged findings were supported by testimony and evidence. Schilke v. Bean, 232 M 125, 755 P2d 565, 45 St. Rep. 930 (1988).

Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary on Motions for Summary Judgment: The Supreme Court has on several occasions followed the portion of this rule that states that findings of fact and conclusions of law are not required to be entered upon motions for summary judgment. Pertinent cases are cited in this opinion. Simmons v. Jenkins, 230 M 429, 750 P2d 1067, 45 St. Rep. 328 (1988), followed in Gypsy-Highview Gathering System, Inc. v. Dept. of State Lands, 231 M 330, 753 P2d 317, 45 St. Rep. 657 (1988).

Failure to Separate Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law — Undue Prejudice Not Shown — No Reversible Error: District Court failure to specifically separate findings of fact and conclusions of law, in the absence of evidence of undue prejudice, did not constitute reversible error. Yellowstone Conference of the United Methodist Church v. D.A. Davidson, Inc., 228 M 288, 741 P2d 794, 44 St. Rep. 1528 (1987).

Review of STAB Decision — Additional Evidence: When additional evidence is presented during review of a STAB decision under 15-2-303, such evidence may be introduced before the court rather than the agency. Findings of fact and conclusions of law are then required to be made by the court. If the court does not permit or receive additional evidence, written findings and conclusions by the court are not required. Hi-Line Radio Fellowship v. Dept. of Revenue, 227 M 150, 737 P2d 886, 44 St. Rep. 955 (1987).

Judgment Distinguished: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are not the judgment, but merely the foundation for the judgment. Reintsma v. Lawson, 223 M 520, 727 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 1962 (1986); State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729; Galiger v. McNulty, 80 M 339, 260 P 401 (1927); State ex rel. Reser v. District Court, 53 M 235, 163 P 1149 (1917).

Ambiguous Insurance Policy Provision — Summary Judgment Reversed: An insurance policy that did not clearly state whether it provided uninsured motor vehicle coverage when the driver was insured but the ownership of the vehicle was not was held to be ambiguous; therefore, under the rationale that an ambiguous provision is construed against the insurance company, the policy was interpreted to provide coverage. The District Court grant of summary judgment holding that the policy did not provide uninsured motor vehicle coverage was reversed. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 223 M 215, 725 P2d 821, 43 St. Rep. 1667 (1986).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Real Estate Valuations — Conflicting Appraisals — Grounds for Adopting One Over Another: In an action for rescission of a contract for the sale of a ranch for $558,200, the seller's appraiser valued the ranch at about $870,000, the buyers' appraiser valued it at about $515,000, and the court found its value to be $635,000. The only possible source for the court's figure was seller's testimony that she had a second appraisal of $635,000. The appraiser was not called as a witness, and his report was not put in evidence. The court's figure was based on data that could not be cross-examined by sellers, and acceptance of the $635,000 appraisal was error, though harmless. In the future, all trial judges valuing real estate should explain in the court's findings why one appraiser's figure is believed over another's so that the Supreme Court can assess the conscientiousness or reasonableness of the lower court's exercise of its broad discretion. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

No Duty to Outline All Evidence in Findings: Judge trying divorce proceeding without a jury was not obligated to outline all the testimony presented at trial in his findings of fact, and no error was found on appeal in which husband claimed the judge ignored evidence husband had submitted and failed to make necessary findings thereon. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983), followed in Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992). Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. was followed in Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997), and Madison Addition Architectural Comm. v. Youngwirth, 2000 MT 293, 302 M 302, 15 P3d 1175, 57 St. Rep. 1244 (2000).

Findings and Conclusions Required With Injunction: The parties entered an oral agreement for plaintiff to loan money to defendant to purchase a semitruck, subject to an oral security interest and repayment schedule. Plaintiff later located defendant and the truck in Missoula and filed a complaint alleging breach of contract and replevin. An injunction was also requested. Following a show cause hearing, plaintiff was given immediate temporary custody of the truck and allowed to operate it to mitigate his damages. Defendant appealed the ruling under former Rule 1(b), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court vacated the injunction, holding that the court's order failed to preserve the status quo. It determined substantive property rights and did not set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law at the time the injunction was issued. Ensley v. Murphy, 202 M 406, 658 P2d 418, 40 St. Rep. 173 (1983).

Ambiguity of Contract Clause — Conclusion of Law: Contract ambiguities are questions of fact, and on appeal the Supreme Court would ordinarily limit their review to the "clearly erroneous" standard of review. The initial determination of whether or not an ambiguity exists is one of law. Thus, the determination by the District Court that a default clause is ambiguous is a conclusion of law freely reviewable. When on review the Supreme Court finds that the clause is not ambiguous, the court is free to rely on its own interpretation of the clause. SAS Partnership v. Schafer, 200 M 478, 653 P2d 834, 39 St. Rep. 1883 (1982).

Balancing Expert and Lay Testimony: A trier of fact is free to disregard the expert testimony of a party's witness and adopt the testimony of the other party if the other party's evidence is credible and substantial. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982).

Award of Fees Reasonable — Appeal to Clarify Alternative Judgment Not Frivolous: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, attorneys for defendant requested fees of $11,000. The District Court awarded fees of $2,000 based on testimony received. The Supreme Court found that this finding was not clearly erroneous. The court also declined to award attorney fees for the appeal under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because plaintiffs were justified in bringing the appeal to clarify the alternative judgment. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Facts Argued in Brief Irreconcilable — Court's Finding Clearly Erroneous: Although the facts argued in the parties' briefs with regard to delinquent child support payments were irreconcilable, the trial transcript indicated that the respondent was current on the payments. The court's finding of delinquent payments was, therefore, clearly erroneous. Baer v. Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835, 39 St. Rep. 1178 (1982).

Decisions on Motions — When Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary: On wife's motion to enforce decree of dissolution of marriage dissolved some 8 months prior to the motion, the trial court entered an order in her favor without making findings of fact and conclusions of law. Husband's appeal was not an appeal from a judgment following trial, and findings and conclusions were not required under this rule's provision that findings and conclusions are unnecessary on decisions of motions under Rules 12 or 56 or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Baker v. Baker, 198 M 371, 646 P2d 522, 39 St. Rep. 1031 (1982).

Findings of Income and Marital Estate Clearly Erroneous — Evidence in Support of Findings Required: Where, in an action for divorce, the uncontradicted evidence of the husband showed his annual net income to be $9,000 a year and the value of the marital estate to be $740,673.95, the District Court erred in adopting wholesale the proposed findings of the wife that the husband's income was $21,000 a year and the value of the marital estate was $760,000. Wholesale adoption of proposed findings and conclusions is a practice disapproved by the Supreme Court and in this case resulted in clearly erroneous findings unsupported by the evidence. In re the Marriage of Beck v. Beck, 193 M 166, 631 P2d 282, 38 St. Rep. 1054 (1981).

Findings and Conclusions Entered After Notice of Appeal — Loss of Jurisdiction: An employer appealed from an order of the Workers' Compensation Court determining that its former employee was permanently totally disabled. Through various stages of the case, the court failed to make findings of fact. Notice of appeal to the Supreme Court was filed. A week later the court entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of its original order reinstating benefits cut off by the employer. The Supreme Court agreed with the appellant/employer that the supplemental findings entered after the notice of appeal was filed could not be considered. The trial court had lost jurisdiction, except for ancillary matters, when the notice of appeal was filed. The order reinstating the claimant's benefits, determining that she was permanently totally disabled and ordering the employer to pay a penalty and attorney fees, was not an interim order because, unless appealed, it would have to be obeyed. Therefore, proper findings and conclusions were needed to support the order. A new hearing was ordered with discovery to be enforced against both parties. Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981), overruled, at least in relation to Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification of findings, by Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983).

Findings Supporting Continued Maintenance Properly Made — Issue Not Before the Court: Where the marriage of the parties was previously dissolved and the wife awarded maintenance without being required to seek employment in order that she be able to care for her handicapped child at home, the District Court did not err, upon a petition for discharge of the maintenance award, in adopting the respondent's proposed findings and conclusions. With the exception of a finding regarding increased financial need, there was sufficient evidence before the court showing no change in the child's need for special care to support the findings and conclusions that were adopted, no matter who drafted them. As the issue of increased spousal maintenance was not before the court, that finding must be vacated. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Required — Case in Equity and Tried to Jury: In this case concerning a contract for deed, the Supreme Court remanded the cause to the District Court for a determination of several factual issues. It held that, because the case was in equity, the District Court should have entered findings of fact and conclusions of law even though the cause was tried to a jury. The jury's interrogatories did not state the facts underlying the decision. Unless both parties agreed to be bound by a jury decision without further findings by the court, the findings of the jury were advisory only and the District Court was required to make findings under this rule. Three reasons for requiring findings of fact were stated: (1) as an aid to the trial judge's adjudication; (2) for res judicata and estoppel purposes; and (3) to facilitate appellate review. Stoddard v. Gookin, 191 M 495, 625 P2d 529, 38 St. Rep. 326 (1981).

Appointment of Lead Counsel for Consolidated Cases — Hearing and Findings Unnecessary on Motion: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire, in which action numerous related cases were consolidated for trial, the District Court did not err in failing to hold an evidentiary hearing prior to the appointment of one attorney as lead counsel for all of the consolidated cases. Because Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., provides that findings are unnecessary on decisions on motions, the court's decision under Rule 42(a), M.R.Civ.P., did not require findings and there was therefore no obligation on the District Court to provide an evidentiary hearing. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Property Held Prior to Enactment of Tax Payment Requirement — No Adverse Possession Established — Court Presumed Correct Despite Lack of Finding: Plaintiffs were properly denied adverse possession of yard space on the basis of nonpayment of taxes even though no finding was made regarding whether the property was held prior to enactment of the statute requiring payment of taxes to establish adverse possession. The District Court's judgment is presumed correct, and the Supreme Court will draw every legitimate inference to support that presumption. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Application of Debtor's Payment to Past Due Account With Creditor — Debtor's Instructions — Creditor's Lien Despite Payment: Defendant contracted for a new building. The contractor purchased materials from the plaintiff through a subcontractor who had an account with the plaintiff. When the subcontractor was paid by the defendant, he in turn paid the plaintiff. The plaintiff applied the payment to the subcontractor's past due account, then later filed a lien against the defendant. The defendant appealed from a judgment upholding the lien. Because a creditor is bound by the instructions given to him by his debtor as to the application of a payment, the issue on appeal was the instructions the subcontractor gave to the plaintiff. With no trial court finding of a duty of the plaintiff to apply the funds paid to it by the subcontractor to the bill for materials used by the defendant, the Supreme Court followed the clear mandate from the Legislature and held that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff on the lien judgment against him, while recommending that the Legislature review the statute. Gen. Elec. Supply v.

Mont. Auto. Ass'n, 189 M 553, 617 P2d 136, 37 St. Rep. 1715 (1980), distinguished in Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 995 (1983).

Moving Expenses and Attorney Fees Upon Dissolution of Marriage — Failure to Make Findings and Conclusions: Where, following entry of the court's order dissolving the marriage of the parties, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for additional findings of fact concerning a military pension, the District Court was also directed to rule on and make findings of fact concerning the appellant's requests for moving expenses and attorney fees if the appellant renews her requests. Failure of the District Court to make findings only results in needless remands of the case to the District Court for determination of the issues. Ebert v. Ebert, 189 M 477, 616 P2d 379, 37 St. Rep. 1674 (1980).

Findings Upon Questions Not in Dispute: Plaintiff power company appealed from the refusal of the District Court to adopt a certain finding. The Supreme Court held that the District Court is not required to make a finding on a fact which has no real relation to the prime issue contested in a case, notwithstanding entry of evidence in pretrial court bearing on the irrelevant issue. Mont. Power Co. v. Kravik, 189 M 369, 616 P2d 321 (1980).

Attorney's Fees — Reliance by Courts on Experts: In determining attorney's fees, the court as a jury is not bound absolutely to the testimony of expert witnesses. It can reduce or increase the figures submitted to it by experts as reasonable attorney's fees, and as long as its findings are not clearly erroneous the determination made in its discretion will not be disturbed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Prevailing Party Not Presenting Expert Testimony: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home structural problems requiring repair occurred. At trial plaintiffs were awarded damages against the defendant. On appeal defendant claimed that findings that the roof had not been constructed as planned and bid, and that construction defects by defendant brought about the instability and unsafe nature of the house, were not supported by credible evidence especially since the District Court did not accord any weight to the testimony of defendant's expert architect. The Supreme Court rejected the claim, stating that when substantial evidence in the record supports the findings of the District Court, the fact that the prevailing party does not present expert testimony does not mean that the testimony produced by experts on the other side is inherently superior. When the evidence is conflicting but the findings are supported by substantial credible evidence, the findings of the District Court will be upheld. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Findings Required in Probate Proceeding: Although Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., is seldom used in probate proceedings, it must be applied to this case to enable the Supreme Court to know precisely the questions presented for appellate review, because they cannot be determined from the record. In re Estate of Murphy, 183 M 127, 598 P2d 612 (1979).

Credibility of Witness: Findings of fact may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous and due regard will be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge the credibility of the witnesses. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by ruling in favor of the defendant on one issue after the defendant's credibility had been impeached on a separate issue. Kis v. Pifer, 179 M 344, 588 P2d 514 (1978). See also Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996), and Walls v. Travelers Indem. Co., 281 M 106, 931 P2d 712, 54 St. Rep. 82 (1997). Walls was followed in Paterson v. Mont. Contractor Comp. Fund, 1999 MT 158, 295 M 120, 983 P2d 300, 56 St. Rep. 623 (1999).

Testimony Not Directly Controverted — Judge Not Bound: A trial judge is not bound to find in favor of a party simply because one of his witness's testimony is not directly controverted. Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978).

Findings of Fact — Definition and Purpose: The findings of fact required by Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., are nothing more than a recordation of the essential and determining facts upon which the District Court rested its conclusions of law and without which the District Court's judgment would lack support. The purpose of requiring findings of fact is three-fold: as an aid in the trial judge's process of adjudication; for purposes of res judicata and estoppel by judgment; and as an aid to the appellate court on review. Barron v. Barron, 177 M 161, 580 P2d 936 (1978), followed in Clemans v. Martin, 221 M 483, 719 P2d 787, 43 St. Rep. 994 (1986), and distinguished in In re Marriage of Steab, 2013 MT 124, 370 Mont. 125, 300 P.3d 1168. See also Lake v. Lake County, 233 M 126, 759 P2d 161, 45 St. Rep. 1354 (1988), and Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Rules Regarding Effect of Stipulations: Court did not go beyond agreed statement of facts in making its findings. In considering an agreed statement of facts a court may make any reasonable inference of which the facts might be susceptible as if the facts had been gleaned from testimony.

When a court feels it needs evidence beyond that in the agreed statement to make its decision, it may refer to evidence outside of the agreed statement. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Subsequent Accounting Not a New Judgment: Where a judgment contains a provision that either party may petition the court for a supplemental decree and accounting in the event the parties cannot agree upon the remaining balance due, it is considered an interlocutory judgment and a subsequent judgment of accounting is not a new judgment, but a clarification of the prior interlocutory judgment as no rights in the prior judgment were changed, nor were any of the formerly settled issues changed. Heller v. Osburnsen, 168 M 232, 541 P2d 1032 (1975).

Findings and Conclusions Unnecessary — Motions Under Other Rules: Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, Rule 56, or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Summary Judgment — Reversal Based on Findings: Even though findings are not required in granting summary judgment, if findings are made that form the basis for judgment and if the evidence does not support the findings, the judgment will be reversed. Upper Missouri G & T Elec. Co-op v. McCone Elec. Co-op, Inc., 157 M 239, 484 P2d 741 (1971).

Nonjury Case — Findings and Conclusions Properly Made: Here, the case being tried without a jury, the court properly made findings of fact and conclusions of law. Tolson v. Tolson, 145 M 87, 399 P2d 754 (1965).

Additional Findings After Judgment: Since courts have the inherent power to correct or amend their judgments so as truly to express what was actually passed upon and decided, they may also, after entry of judgment, add to or make additional findings, which are but the foundation for the judgment so long as the judgment itself is not substantially changed. O'Keefe v. Routledge, 110 M 138, 103 P2d 307 (1940).

FORM OF FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

Application of Proper Standard of Review of Summary Judgment on Subdivision Decision: The District Court granted defendants summary judgment absent a material fact regarding whether plaintiff's subdivision review was properly denied. Plaintiff contended that the court applied an abuse of discretion standard rather than the arbitrary or capricious standard required under 76-3-625. The Supreme Court disagreed. The District Court provided a wealth of reasoning for its decision and noted that clear and convincing evidence supported the decision to deny plaintiff's subdivision proposal. Overwhelming evidence and the absence of disputed fact entitled defendants to summary judgment on the issue, and the District Court was affirmed. Richards v. Missoula County, 2009 MT 453, 354 M 334, 223 P3d 878 (2009).

Verbatim Adoption Not Error: The District Court unquestionably did its own analysis and wrote its own narrative order. Therefore, the verbatim adoption of a landowner's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law was not an error. Bitterroot River Protective Assoc., Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. Dist., 2008 MT 377, 346 M 507, 198 P3d 219 (2008).

Verbatim Adoption of State's Proposed Findings and Conclusions of Law by Court — No Error Found: Critical to determination of the case was witness credibility, which was up to the District Court as finder of fact to weigh. St. v. Wendler, 2008 MT 370, 346 M 467, 197 P3d 932 (2008).

Adoption of One Party's Findings and Conclusions in Estate Dispute Not Grounds for Reversal: The conservator of an estate contended that the District Court erred by adopting the findings and conclusions of the decedent's niece and by denying the conservator's motion to alter or amend the judgment after receiving a brief in support and the niece's response but before the conservator filed a reply brief. The Supreme Court noted that a court's adoption of the findings and conclusions of a prevailing party is not grounds for reversal, but rather the question is whether the findings are sufficiently comprehensive, pertinent, and supported by substantial evidence to provide a basis for the decision. In this case, the findings were sufficiently comprehensive and supported by substantial evidence, and the decision was affirmed. Further, although the Supreme Court does not condone or encourage entering orders prior to the expiration of the time for briefing, the conservator offered no argument or analysis to support a conclusion that the conservator's due process rights were implicated by denial of the motion to alter or amend the judgment, so denial of the motion also did not constitute grounds for reversal. In re Estate of Stukey, 2004 MT 279, 323 M 241, 100 P3d 114 (2004). See also In re Marriage of Hurley, 222 M 287, 721 P2d 1279 (1986), and In re Marriage of Nikolaisen, 257 M 1, 847 P2d 287 (1993).

Defendant's Proposed Findings Adopted Verbatim — Lack of Evidentiary Support Warranting Remand: The District Court essentially adopted the findings and conclusions proposed by Service

Distributing, Inc. (SDI), prior to trial. Generally, a District Court's findings will not be disturbed unless they are clearly erroneous or unsubstantiated by the evidence. Here, Norwood claimed, and the Supreme Court agreed, that SDI did not offer any evidence at trial in support of several of the findings or file any posttrial findings omitting or modifying the pretrial proposed findings, which were not supported by substantial evidence. In fact, several of the District Court's findings and conclusions were clearly erroneous and legally incorrect, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000). See also Baer v. Baer, 199 M 21, 647 P2d 835 (1982).

Motion to Enforce Divorce Degree — Written Findings and Conclusions Not Required: Corliss brought a motion to enforce a part of her divorce decree relating to her ex-husband's payment of medical expenses. The District Court denied the motion but failed to make written findings and conclusions. Corliss sought to reverse the District Court's order, arguing that the District Court had failed to make written findings and conclusions and that written findings and conclusions were required by In re Marriage of Bliss, 187 M 331, 609 P2d 1209 (1980), and Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850 (1980). The Supreme Court distinguished both Bliss and Jones, pointing out that there were no findings at all in either of those cases and noting that in the case of the denial of Corliss's motion, the District Court had made specific oral findings of fact that were shown in the written District Court record. The Supreme Court concluded that those oral findings were sufficient to support the District Court's denial of Corliss's motion. In re Marriage of Johnson, 1999 MT 254, 296 M 311, 989 P2d 356, 56 St. Rep. 1011 (1999). See also In re Ward Revocable Trust, 2011 MT 308, 363 Mont. 72, 265 P.3d 1260.

Summary Judgment — Reversal for Insufficient Specificity of Dismissal Rationale: Although findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary in Rule 12 and Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., decisions, a District Court is required under this rule to specify the grounds for granting a motion with sufficient particularity to apprise the parties and the appellate court of the rationale for the ruling. The lower court was reversed for failing to state that no genuine issue of material fact existed. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989).

Request for Remand for More Specific Findings — Denied as Caused by Party: A party who failed to take advantage of his opportunity to present specific evidence to the District Court in a dissolution of marriage action was denied a remand for more specific findings because such findings were caused by his actions and, furthermore, the Supreme Court determined there was substantial evidence to sustain the District Court's judgment. In re Marriage of Merry, 213 M 141, 689 P2d 1250, 41 St. Rep. 2009 (1984).

Failure to Find Property Subject to Distribution — Conflicting Findings Requiring Remand: Where the District Court found, in a dissolution proceeding, that a coin collection was acquired by the wife's wages during the marriage and therefore constituted property subject to division and awarded the collection to the wife but failed to include the collection in a list of property subject to division, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court for amendment of the findings in a manner consistent with the Supreme Court opinion. Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

Effect of Inconsistent Findings: In a case seeking to modify a child custody decree, the trial court made conflicting findings based on evidence presented by both the mother and the father. The Supreme Court stated that the trial court's findings did not reveal the basic facts on which the trial court relied. The case was remanded with directions to enter findings of fact to resolve the conflicts in the evidence. Wilmot v. Wilmot, 199 M 477, 649 P2d 1295, 39 St. Rep. 1535 (1982).

Actual Fraud in Execution of Contract for Deed — Compliance With Pollution Laws — Doctrine of "Implied Findings": Where the plaintiffs sued for damages caused by the defendants' fraud in the execution of a contract for deed for the sale of a shale and concrete block plant, alleging misrepresentation by the defendant company and its agents as to the plant's status of compliance with air pollution laws, the court did not err in finding the defendants guilty of actual fraud. Actual fraud is always a question of fact, and there was ample evidence upon which the court could find that the factual requisites for actual fraud had been satisfied. Although the court did not make a specific finding that the plaintiff relied upon the false representations by the defendants, the Supreme Court will engage the doctrine of "implied findings" so long as those findings are not inconsistent with express findings and assume that the court found reliance upon the defendants' misrepresentation. Poulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 192 M 69, 626 P2d 1822, 38 St. Rep. 218 (1981), holding on "implied findings" followed in Interstate Brands Corp. v. Cannon, 218 M 380, 708 P2d 573, 42 St. Rep. 1670 (1985), H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000), and St. v. Wooster, 2001 MT 4, 304 M 56, 16 P3d 409 (2001). Interstate was followed in In re Mental Health of S.C., 2000 MT 370, 303 M 444, 15 P3d 861, 57 St. Rep. 1584 (2000).

Findings Sufficient to Determine Net Worth — Discretion of Court: While the District Court in a divorce dissolution failed to make a specific finding of net worth, the findings as a whole are sufficient to determine the net worth and to decide whether the distribution was equitable. All of the major assets were valued by the court, and the court specifically found that the husband had a greater opportunity to acquire a residence in the future and that the wife's age, skills, and custodial status justified allocation of the house to the wife. The District Court has far-reaching discretion in resolving property divisions, and its judgment will not be altered unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. Nunnally v. Nunnally, 192 M 24, 625 P2d 1159, 38 St. Rep. 529 (1981).

Necessity of Proper Findings and Conclusions — Incorporation of Property Settlement: An action for the dissolution of marriage was brought, and dissolution was granted. The parties entered into a property settlement a week before the decree of dissolution was entered. About 3 months later, one party brought a motion to incorporate the agreement in the court's final decree. The other party objected to the adoption of the visitation provisions. After a hearing, the District Court entered a supplemental decree of dissolution, incorporating all the terms of the property settlement agreement. On appeal, the appellant argued that the trial court erred in incorporating the property settlement without making specific findings of fact regarding the impact of the visitation provided for on the best interests of the child. The Supreme Court held that the purpose of the findings and conclusions required under the rule of civil procedure was to provide a foundation for the court's judgment. The record should include the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment would lack support. The finding of fact and conclusion of law that the visitation provision in the property settlement agreement was in the best interests of the child failed to set forth the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusion. Without those factors, the Supreme Court was unable to determine the propriety of the determination. The case was remanded for the required factual findings. Jones v. Jones, 190 M 221, 620 P2d 850, 37 St. Rep. 1973 (1980), distinguished in In re Marriage of Steab, 2013 MT 124, 370 Mont. 125, 300 P.3d 1168. See also In re Marriage of Johnson, 1999 MT 254, 296 M 311, 989 P2d 356, 56 St. Rep. 1011 (1999).

Maintenance and Support Order — Invalidated for Lack of Findings and Conclusions: A District Court order of maintenance and child support that failed to comply with Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., by finding the facts specially and stating conclusions of law separately was held invalid. Park v. Park, 190 M 180, 619 P2d 1200, 37 St. Rep. 1874 (1980).

Particularity of Findings on Property Distribution — Not Necessarily Required if Directive Items Considered: On appeal relating to his divorce settlement agreement, the former husband contended that the trial court erred in making an "equitable" grant of personal property without making certain findings, such as the net worth of the marital estate. The Supreme Court reiterated an earlier holding that a District Court need not set forth its findings with particularity if there is substantial evidence that the court was aware of and considered the directive items of 40-4-202. The trial court held a hearing on all elements in a marital estate, and there was no substantial evidence that the court did not consider the whole estate in finding that the separation agreement was deficient. The existence of a valid agreement presumes that the net worth of the parties has been considered in the disposition of their property by the agreement. There was substantial evidence here that the net worth of the parties was established by the District Court and by the settlement agreement. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Factual Support for Maintenance Award Required: Maintenance payments require an affirmative showing as a condition precedent to their award. The existence or lack of this condition precedent is to be shown by a recordation of the essential and determining facts upon which the court rested its conclusions of law and without which the judgment lacks support. Schultz v. Schultz, 183 M 20, 597 P2d 1174 (1979).

General Findings: Very general findings of fact and conclusions of law will support a judgment when they substantially follow the allegations of the pleadings. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Incomplete Findings Sufficient: If the findings ascertain the ultimate facts and sufficiently conform to the pleadings and the evidence to support the judgment, they will be regarded sufficient, though not as full and complete as might be desired. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Statement of Ultimate Fact as Conclusion of Law: A statement of ultimate fact retains its character as such, although it could also be read as a conclusion of law. Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978).

Modification of Maintenance and Support — Factual Determinations Imperative: The pertinent factors in 40-4-203 and 40-4-204, with findings of fact to support them, should be set out in the District Court's decision. Otherwise the appellate court has nothing upon which to base its review. Moreover, under 40-4-208 the District Court can grant modification or termination of maintenance and support only if there is a showing of circumstances making the payments unconscionable, which compels proper findings and conclusions. Capener v. Capener, 177 M 437, 582 P2d 326 (1978).

Failure of Probate Court to Make Findings and Conclusions: When the District Court entered an order admitting a will to probate but failed to make findings of fact and conclusions of law stating its basis for the order, the order was reversed and case remanded with instructions to provide such information in order that the Supreme Court not be forced to speculate as to the reasons for the District Court's decision. In re Craddock, 173 M 8, 566 P2d 45 (1977), distinguished in In re Marriage of Steab, 2013 MT 124, 370 Mont. 125, 300 P.3d 1168.

Findings of Ultimate Versus Evidentiary Fact: The court need only make findings of ultimate facts and not evidentiary facts. The court need not find proposed facts submitted by a party which are evidentiary facts related to an ultimate fact found against the party. Erickson v. Fisher, 170 M 491, 554 P2d 1336 (1976).

Sufficiency of Findings: Lower court ruling that "no cause of action or claim exists or has been proven" and "the same is hereby dismissed" was sufficient compliance with rules despite plaintiff's contention that findings of fact and conclusions of law did not meet requirements of rules. Mondakota Gas Co. v. Becker, 151 M 513, 445 P2d 745 (1968).

Failure to Make Findings as Grounds for Reversal: Upon proper request it is the duty of the District Court to make findings, in the absence of which the cause presents grounds for reversal. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Findings Referring to Complaint: Even though findings based upon the allegations of the pleadings are valid they must be weighed as to sufficiency by the complaint or pleadings upon which they are based and if the findings of fact refer to the complaint, then to be sufficient, the complaint must state a cause of action. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Findings Mixed With Opinion: Written findings of fact and conclusions of law should be separately stated in case tried by the court without a jury, and not made a part of any other document, even though not expressly requested by the parties. The purpose of such treatment of the findings and conclusions is that no question may arise as to their properly being a part of the judgment roll or of the record on appeal. Opinion, intermingled with other matters, containing the court's view of the evidence was equivalent to its findings of fact, and may be made a part of the record by amendment to show what he considered proved, the balance being disregarded. Coffman v. Niece, 110 M 541, 105 P2d 661 (1940).

Separate Findings and Conclusions: In every case specific findings should be made upon all material issues of fact raised by the pleadings, followed by the appropriate conclusions of law, indicating the judgment to be entered thereon. Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 43 M 102, 115 P 25 (1911).

FINDINGS NOT CLEARLY ERRONEOUS

Finding of Permissive Use of Cotenants' Fractional Interest Not Clearly Erroneous: Foley brought an action to quiet title to ranch property, claiming that title had been acquired from the cotenants by adverse possession of fractional interests acquired by two siblings in the distribution of their father's estate. Foley had operated the ranch since 1947, paid all taxes on the property, and built two homes, a garage, haysheds, barns, irrigation works, and fences. None of the surviving siblings ever claimed an interest in the profits from the ranch, and Foley never offered to share them. Foley never sought permission from the siblings to build any structure on the ranch or to use the property other than as he wished. The siblings professed that they always wanted Foley to operate the ranch as he saw fit, provided that the property not be mortgaged or sold. When Foley and his wife divorced in 1996, the District Court ordered the sale of the ranch to satisfy the settlement agreement. Title problems frustrated the sale, prompting the quiet title action. Following a bench trial, the District Court concluded that as a matter of law, Foley was a tenant in common with the two surviving siblings who had not quitclaimed their interests to Foley and that one cotenant could not gain title to another cotenant's interest by adverse possession. The court also found as a matter of fact that Foley's use of the cotenant's interests had been permissive. Foley contended on appeal that the findings and conclusions were erroneous. The testimony on the question of whether Foley's use was permissive was conflicting, with Foley testifying that he had always asserted his complete ownership of the ranch and that his longstanding arguments with his siblings established his claim as hostile, while the wife of Foley's deceased brother testified that until these proceedings, Foley had never asserted that she or her late husband had no interest in the ranch, but instead had asked her to sign over her interest on several occasions. Her testimony provided substantial credible evidence that, at least until he tried to sell the property, Foley's use of his siblings' fractional interests was in conformity with their wishes and was permissive. The District Court was in the best position to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses and to give each its proper weight. The finding that Foley was a permissive user of his cotenants' fractional interest was not clearly erroneous and was thus affirmed. Foley v. Arvidson, 2000 MT 388, 304 M 43, 16 P3d 389, 57 St. Rep. 1650 (2000).

Constructive Fraud for Failure to Disclose Risk of Erosion to Field Planted in Old River Channel: The sellers of farm land and an irrigation system failed to disclose to the buyers that the field at pivot three was an old river bed that had been filled but not riprapped and that the field was subject to increased risk of erosion. The buyers spent $99,575 to fix the impairment and sued for damages. The District Court found that the sellers were liable for constructive fraud for failure to disclose, and the sellers contested the District Court findings. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court was capable of finding that a risk of increased erosion existed without the benefit of expert testimony. Further, the court's conclusion, that filling the old river bed and creating a greatly increased risk of erosion was a serious impairment, was not clearly erroneous. Moreover, the court did not err in holding that the buyers had no way of knowing of the increased risk, even though a conversation with the the sellers' employee who performed the backfill work would have revealed the problem. The buyers were not required to speak with the sellers' employees before purchasing, particularly given the fact that when the field at pivot three was cleared and leveled, it looked like any other field. The sellers also contended that the buyers had merely to ask their own consultant, who would have informed them of the origin and obvious condition of the field. However, the buyers' consultant did not inspect the fields until after closing of the sale and thus could not have provided the buyers with any knowledge. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Action to Quiet Title in Mining Company Shares — Credible Evidence of Outstanding Shares — District Court Upheld: Safronoff and others were defendants in an action to quiet title to outstanding shares of the defunct Sun Mining, Inc., which was involuntarily dissolved by the state. The District Court reviewed all of the evidence before it, including a list of outstanding shares prepared by Sun Mining's secretary-treasurer shortly before the company was dissolved, the number of shares held by each shareholder according to each shareholder's stock certificate, and oral testimony, and found that the secretary-treasurer's list was the only credible evidence. Safronoff appealed the decision of the District Court, contending that he should have been awarded additional shares. Relying upon Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106 (1992), the Supreme Court applied the "clearly erroneous" standard to the District Court's findings of fact and held that although there were conflicts in the evidence before it, the District Court reasonably relied upon this evidence and that the District Court's findings of fact were not clearly erroneous. Duncan v. Allen, 1998 MT 316, 292 M 180, 970 P2d 1036, 55 St. Rep. 1296 (1998).

Decedent's Estate — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: On May 31, 1994, Joseph executed a will bequeathing his estate to his former wife, Mary. On June 14, 1994, while Joseph was in a nursing home, Joseph and Mary signed a declaration of marriage. On July 1, 1994, Joseph executed a will renouncing the marriage and bequeathing the estate to a sister. Mary initiated informal probate proceedings under the May 31 will, and the sister initiated informal probate proceedings under the July 1 will. The court ordered that the July 1 will be admitted to formal probate and declared void the declaration of marriage. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in invalidating the declaration of marriage but affirmed the portion of the court's order admitting the July 1 will to probate. Mary failed to show reversible error in any of the challenged findings. In re Estate of Flynn, 274 M 199, 908 P2d 661, 52 St. Rep. 1190 (1995).

Court Not Required to Make Findings on All Evidence Submitted: Vanderburg argued that the trial court had erred because it failed to make 11 additional findings of fact based on evidence that had been submitted. The Supreme Court held that the trial court is not required to make findings based on all evidence submitted and that in the present case, the findings of fact were sufficient to support the court's judgment. In re Seizure of $23,691.00, 273 M 474, 905 P2d 148, 52 St. Rep. 1063 (1995).

Findings in Case of Fraudulent Oil Well Sales Not Clearly Erroneous: Boedecker was convicted of fraudulently selling interests in oil well property to Berlin without disclosing his interest in the transaction or the fact that production had been sold to another company, without taking reasonable care in evaluating the property sold to Berlin, and without consulting with Berlin in another sale transaction. Citing Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), followed in Daines v. Knight, 269 M 320, 888 P2d 904, 52 St. Rep. 8 (1995) the Supreme Court held that the standard of review was whether the findings of fact were clearly erroneous and that the Supreme Court would further examine whether the findings were supported by substantial credible evidence, whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, and determine whether the Supreme Court was left with a conviction that a mistake has been committed. The Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence supporting all of the District Court's findings and that they were not clearly erroneous. Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180, 51 St. Rep. 569 (1994). See also Strom v. Logan, 2001 MT 30, 304 M 176, 18 P3d 1024 (2001).

Finding of Business Interruption Losses Affirmed: DeTienne Associates sued Montana Rail Link (MRL) after an explosion caused by one of MRL's locomotives damaged the hotel owned by DeTienne. DeTienne introduced evidence of business interruption losses. Citing Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), the Supreme Court upheld the findings because the District Court's findings were supported by substantial credible evidence, the District Court did not misapprehend the effect of the evidence, and the Supreme Court was not left with a firm and definite conviction that a mistake had been committed. DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 264 M 16, 869 P2d 258, 51 St. Rep. 125 (1994).

Supported Findings Challenged on Basis of Sometimes Irrelevant Inferences From and Interpretations of Those Findings: In an action to invalidate provisions of a trust, appellants' challenges to seven specific findings depended on appellants' inferences from and interpretations of the findings. Some of appellants' points were irrelevant. The findings were supported by the record and were not clearly erroneous. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Equitable Distribution of Investment Account: The District Court properly exercised its equity power in dividing the proceeds of an investment account by taking into consideration other equities existing between the parties connected with the main subject of the suit and by granting relief necessary to an entire adjustment of the subject. Tondu v. Akerley, 259 M 194, 855 P2d 116, 50 St. Rep. 754 (1993).

Challenge of Juror for Cause — Standard of Review: In clarifying the standard of review applicable to challenge of a juror for cause, the Supreme Court adopted the standard for findings of fact set out in this rule. Because factual determinations of juror appropriateness are being made by the trial court, the "clearly erroneous" standard applies to review of a trial court's decision to deny a challenge for cause. The Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the trial court absent a showing that the lower court's findings are clearly erroneous, even if there is evidence in the record to support contrary findings. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991). This standard was applied to criminal cases in St. v. Cope, 250 M 387, 819 P2d 1280, 48 St. Rep. 949 (1991).

STAB Recalculation of Value of Grain Storage Facilities Properly Ordered by District Court: When the State Tax Appeal Board (STAB) ignored evidence regarding the loading capacity of three grain elevators in calculating the value of the elevators for taxation purposes, the District Court properly ordered STAB to recalculate the value based on the simple arithmetic evidence. United Grain Corp. v. Dept. of Revenue, 248 M 297, 811 P2d 555, 48 St. Rep. 440 (1991).

No Unlawful Interference With Ditch Easement: Plaintiff contended that construction of a pond constituted an unlawful interference with his ditch easement, depriving him of water and reducing the value of his property. The District Court's findings that the pond had nothing to do with plaintiff's water shortage, but rather that the shortage was caused by an upstream user exercising his full right to the water, were not clearly erroneous and were therefore affirmed on appeal. Boylan v. Van Dyke, 247 M 259, 806 P2d 1024, 48 St. Rep. 188 (1991).

Psychotherapy for Paranoid Wife Appropriate Expense: The husband appealed a maintenance award to the wife that included an amount to pay for her psychotherapy. The Supreme Court ruled that there was substantial evidence proving that the wife suffered from a paranoid mental disorder that if not treated would impair her ability to find employment. The court also found that there was ample evidence for the lower court to find that physical abuse by the husband was causative of the wife's psychological problems. In re Marriage of Ernst, 243 M 114, 793 P2d 777, 47 St. Rep. 1034 (1990).

Failure to Notify Second Mortgagor of Sales and Future Advances Not Breach of Fiduciary Duty: Absent findings of clear error, a District Court decision that a first mortgagor breached no fiduciary duty to second mortgagor by failing to notify of property sales and future advances was affirmed. The court properly found it was the second mortgagor's obligation to discover the existence and extent of the future advance clause by requesting a copy of the deed of trust and to investigate more closely the actual terms of the instrument prior to entering the second mortgage. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

Child Custody — Reliance on Expert Testimony Not Clearly Erroneous: The lower court heard testimony from numerous witnesses, including experts, as to the issue of child custody. The court did not abuse its discretion in relying heavily on the testimony and observations of two of the experts concerning the children's wishes, interrelationship of the children with their parents, and the mental and physical health of all individuals. In re Marriage of Ereth, 232 M 492, 757 P2d 1312, 45 St. Rep. 1223 (1988).

False Representations — Ability to Construct Hog Barns — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: There was testimony showing defendant knowingly made material false representations that he could construct water-flush hog barns—promises that he could not keep. Plaintiff had a right to rely on defendant and was injured because of that reliance. Although there were conflicting findings, the Supreme Court found no clear error constituting abuse of discretion. Roberts v. Mission Valley Concrete Indus., Inc., 222 M 268, 721 P2d 355, 43 St. Rep. 1254 (1986).

Six Findings of Fact Omitted — No Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiff contended six findings of fact omitted by the District Court resulted in erroneous conclusions of law detrimental to her. Specifically, she claimed she was entitled to a larger judgment. She acknowledged any one of the alleged abuses would not be sufficient to mandate a new trial or amended judgment, but together they constituted sufficient abuse to warrant action. The Supreme Court noted it would not disturb findings of fact in a nonjury civil action unless they were clearly erroneous. The court then declined to disturb the District Court's findings as being clearly erroneous in this case. Sharbono v. Darden, 220 M 320, 715 P2d 433, 43 St. Rep. 400 (1986).

Inclusion of Retirement Pension as Marital Asset: In a dispute concerning valuation of marital assets, the wife argued that because she contributed in the course of the marriage her teacher's salary as compared to the ranching losses contributed by the husband, it was inequitable to include her teacher's retirement pension as a marital asset. The trial court included as a marital asset that portion of the value of the pension rights earned during the marriage, as established by the testimony of an economist. The wife failed to meet her burden of showing that such finding was clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court upheld the trial court findings in light of substantial credible evidence, ruling that under In re Marriage of Rolfe, 216 M 39, 699 P2d 79, 42 St. Rep. 623 (1985), retirement benefits are classed as part of the marital estate. In re Marriage of Sirucek, 219 M 334, 712 P2d 769, 42 St. Rep. 2065 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Pryor, 224 M 488, 731 P2d 895, 43 St. Rep. 2358 (1986).

Bank Foreclosure of Mortgage — Supported by Substantial Credible Evidence: Plaintiff bank foreclosed on certain parcels of real estate pledged as collateral for business loans after the bank refused an extension of the note unless the loan principal balance was substantially reduced. The trial court had before it substantial credible evidence to find the bank properly could foreclose the mortgage without liability for damages to the defendants' business. There was also substantial credible evidence for the court's denial of the defendants' counterclaim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Therefore, the standard for review set forth in this rule is met. Cent. Bank of Mont. v. Eystad, 219 M 69, 710 P2d 710, 42 St. Rep. 1850 (1985).

Substantial Credible Evidence of Medical Malpractice — Ingrown Toenail — Amputation of Leg: Substantial credible evidence supported a jury verdict of medical malpractice when treatment of a state prison inmate's ingrown toenail resulted in the amputation of his leg, even though the attending physicians contended that the inmate suffered from a preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs which was the cause of the amputation. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

Agreement Represents Intention of Parties: A loan consolidation and extension agreement between the parties superseded prior oral negotiations, and it was not clearly erroneous for the trial court to find that the agreement represents the intention of the parties. The finding is supported in the testimony of the bank officers and the execution of the written instruments following the oral negotiations. First Nat'l Bank of Missoula v. McGuinness, 217 M 409, 705 P2d 579, 42 St. Rep. 1288 (1985).

Execution and Delivery of Quitclaim Deed Supported in Evidence — Effect: The District Court found that a quitclaim deed was executed and delivered by the Morins to the Mapstons before a typewritten note was signed by Mapstons to convey the subject property to Morins. This central finding of fact was held to be clearly supported in the evidence. The legal effect of the finding is that the quitclaim deed constituted a gift to Mapstons, no consideration being necessary. The transfer vested all actual title which Morins then had, since no different intention was expressed or necessarily implied. The typewritten note cannot be specifically enforced by Morins because they had not received an adequate consideration for the contract and because the contract lacks mutuality. Moreover, no involuntary trust was created. Morin v. Mapston, 217 M 403, 705 P2d 118, 42 St. Rep. 1283 (1985).

Custodial Parent Found Unstable and Alcoholic — Modification Granted: The Supreme Court refused to set aside, as not supported by evidence, a District Court order granting a change of a child's custody from the mother to the father when evidence indicated that: (1) the mother's lifestyle and living situation lacked stability; (2) the mother had been arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol with the child in her vehicle; (3) the mother had attended a residential alcoholism treatment center but had failed to stop drinking or follow up on her problem after her discharge; and (4) the father was able and willing to provide a more stable environment for the child. In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729, 42 St. Rep. 856 (1985).

Workers' Compensation — Out-of-Pocket Expenses — Findings Supported by Evidence: The Workers' Compensation Court found that out-of-pocket expenses incurred by claimant's mother during claimant's hospital stay were not medically necessary and denied request for reimbursement. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that substantial evidence supported the verdict, and that the Supreme Court may not set aside the findings of the Workers' Compensation Court unless the findings are clearly erroneous. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Motor Vehicle Damage Award: The trial court's findings of fact with regard to the damage to the plaintiff's vehicle and reasonable costs of repairs were clear and specific. The testimony of two auto repairmen constituted substantial credible evidence upon which the court could base its findings of fact on this issue. Findings will not be overturned unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against them. Round v. Reikofski, 216 M 54, 699 P2d 72, 42 St. Rep. 634 (1985).

Evidence of Emancipation of Minor Child: When evidence in a URESA action indicated that the minor child lived away from the obligee but was not earning enough money to support herself, the District Court's determination that the minor child was not emancipated was not clearly erroneous. State of Oregon ex rel. Worden v. Drinkwalter, 216 M 9, 700 P2d 150, 42 St. Rep. 599 (1985).

Construction of Exclusionary Clause — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: District Court determined that arrangement by which insured purchased truck for use of son-in-law in exchange for free hauling of insured's hay and cattle was on a share expense basis, and as such not excluded from coverage under insurance policy provision that excluded coverage for lease or rental. Supreme Court affirmed District Court judgment and held that the policy clause was ambiguous, capable of at least two interpretations, and as such capable of construction against the insurance company. The District Court findings were not clearly erroneous and therefore must be sustained. Bauer Ranch, Inc. v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 215 M 153, 695 P2d 1307, 42 St. Rep. 255 (1985).

Equitable Division of Property and Water Rights — No Compensation or Attorney Fee: The court held that under the clearly established standard of review of a nonjury civil action, the trial court did not err in finding in a partition action that the defendants were entitled to the one-half share in the West Gallatin Canal Company, that the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation for the water right awarded, and that plaintiff was not entitled to attorney fees for bringing the partition action. The court examined the equity of the proceeding in its entirety and concluded that the fact that one party may have received less water than it started with does not make the partition inequitable. The partition of the property and appurtenant water rights was based on substantial credible evidence and resulted in an equitable division among the cotenants. Kravik v. Lewis, 213 M 448, 691 P2d 1373, 41 St. Rep. 2228 (1984), followed in Frank DeHaan, Inc. v. Gallatin-Madison Ranch Co., 250 M 304, 820 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 963 (1991).

No Common-Law Marriage — Absence of Immediate Creation or Mutual Agreement to Marry: As in Sartain, cited below, the Supreme Court applied the standard of review set forth in Cameron, also cited below, and found that the purported common-law marriage lacked the essential of immediate creation. A common-law marriage cannot be created piecemeal but rather comes instantly into being or does not come at all. The District Court correctly applied Montana common-law marriage standards. In re White, 212 M 228, 686 P2d 915, 41 St. Rep. 1705 (1984).

The Supreme Court concluded that there is substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings of fact that no common-law marriage existed between Sherri and deceased and that deceased's ex-wife, Peggy, should be appointed personal representative. The findings of fact are not clearly erroneous and were not set aside. Because of contradictions in the evidence, the court respected the Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., requirement that due regard be given to the opportunity of the District Court to judge the credibility of witnesses and applied the standard of review set forth in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978). The District Court properly applied Montana common-law marriage standards. Those standards were applied in Estate of Murnion, 212 M 107, 686 P2d 893, 41 St. Rep. 1627 (1984), in finding a mutual agreement to marry. In contrast, there was no evidence of any such agreement between Sherri and deceased. In re Sartain, 212 M 206, 686 P2d 909, 41 St. Rep. 1691 (1984).

Maintenance Award — Findings Sufficiently Specific Where Appellant of Little Help and Lacks Credibility: The parties were married to each other twice. Following the second dissolution, the wife was awarded maintenance until remarriage, death, or passage of 10 years. The District Court found that the property distributed to wife was income-consuming as opposed to income-producing property. The wife was facing a monthly deficit situation. The husband, through financial wheeling and dealing, had previously taken considerable amounts from the estate of the wife. The husband failed to substantiate his financial position, and his credibility was questionable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court had done its best to make statutory findings with no help from the husband. The wife's current standard of living was considerably lower than during the marriage. The award of maintenance was proper and was supportable based on the facts and the weight given to the witness' credibility. Thompson v. Thompson, 208 M 156, 676 P2d 223, 41 St. Rep. 237 (1984).

Contradictory Evidence in Custody Dispute — Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where there was contradictory evidence introduced by the parties to a custody dispute, the Supreme Court held that the findings of fact, while lacking in detail, were sufficiently supported by record evidence, especially that of a county social worker, to support the District Court's findings that the welfare of the parties' children was endangered by being in their mother's custody. C.C.W. v. H.M.W., 205 M 498, 668 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 1455 (1983).

No Fraud Found in Sale of Real Property — Theory of Negligent Misrepresentation Abandoned — Findings and Conclusions Not Clearly Erroneous: Where the plaintiffs agreed to purchase a bar and restaurant from the defendant seller and later brought an action for damages against the county and the county sanitarian, claiming that the sanitarian misrepresented the capacity of the sewer system and conditions of a county license, the findings and conclusions of the District Court were supported by substantial evidence and were not clearly erroneous. The District Court found that the plaintiffs failed to prove their claim of fraud and that the theory of negligent misrepresentation had been abandoned by the plaintiffs. The record contained conflicting evidence but showed that there could have been a misunderstanding between the parties, and a misunderstanding will not support a claim for fraud in the inducement. The statements made by the defendant may have been negligent, but the District Court properly concluded that by failing to argue the theory of negligent misrepresentation, the plaintiffs evidenced an intention to abandon that theory. Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Substantial Evidence of "Injury": Substantial evidence exists to support the District Court's finding that claimant suffered an injury within the meaning of 39-71-119 since medical evidence indicated that he had a preexisting condition, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, that was made worse by his inhalation of air containing a high concentration of grain dust. Ridenour v. Equity Supply Co., 204 M 473, 665 P2d 783, 40 St. Rep. 1012 (1983).

Architect and Not Contractor Liable for Inadequate Specifications: There was sufficient evidence presented to the District Court to support its findings that the architect's water system specifications for a new school building were inadequate. A contractor is not responsible for errors or defects in the plans and is not liable, absent negligence on his part, when the owner's plans and specifications prove defective. Ace Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. School District, 204 M 81, 662 P2d 1327, 40 St. Rep. 678 (1983).

Diversion of Joint Business Account Funds for Personal Use: The accountant for one party to a joint business account testified as an expert and stated that about one-half of a $9,000 sum the party withdrew from the account was used for personal purposes and that in his opinion the remainder was used for business purposes. The other party testified that the whole amount was impermissibly withdrawn and used for the withdrawing party's own benefit. The accountant's testimony did not conclusively establish that the money was not diverted from the account for nonbusiness purposes, and a finding that the money was withdrawn and converted to the personal use of the withdrawing party was based upon substantial credible evidence and was affirmed. Rose v. Rose, 201 M 86, 651 P2d 1018, 39 St. Rep. 1971 (1982).

Award of Costs and Attorney Fees — Use of Contingency Agreement: Defendants defaulted on a promissory note. The bank and defendants negotiated a new note and executed a security agreement. This note provided the debtor would be liable for collection costs, including reasonable attorney fees, upon default. Defendants defaulted, and the bank repossessed and sold the security. A deficiency remained. The bank retained an attorney under a contingency fee agreement to collect the deficiency, and suit was filed. Defendants' answer raised defenses necessitating research and investigation. The attorney discovered defendants owned unmortgaged land, which they were attempting to transfer. The bank attached the land and acted as its own surety and purchased a separate surety bond. The trial court included the bond in allowable costs and awarded $5,000 in attorney fees to the bank. The bond was required under 27-18-204, and under the note was clearly a cost of collection. The attorney estimated 50 hours of work. The trial court followed the guidelines of Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975), for awarding attorney fees and found that since he would be entitled to more under the contingency agreement, which was not binding on the court, the award was reasonable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court's findings and conclusions adequately supported the award. First Nat'l Bank v. Beckstrom, 200 M 323, 651 P2d 45, 39 St. Rep. 1778 (1982).

Award of Child Support — Not Clearly Erroneous: Only when the findings of the District Court are clearly erroneous will they be set aside. There was substantial credible evidence in the record to affirm the District Court's judgment on child support; thus the determination of the father's child support obligation is not clearly erroneous. McConnell v. Dempster, 200 M 276, 650 P2d 799, 39 St. Rep. 1740 (1982).

Action on Promissory Notes Held in Trust — Real Party in Interest: The plaintiff bank filed an action to collect payment on four promissory notes, and the defendant contended that the bank was not a real party in interest to the case. The Supreme Court found that the District Court's finding that the plaintiff was the holder of legal title to each of the promissory notes and that it was therefore a real party in interest was supported by substantial evidence in both the transcripts and exhibits. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

Sufficient Rejection of Nonconforming Goods: Plaintiff sold defendants an irrigation system and pump. Plaintiff substituted a different type of pump for the one ordered by defendants. Plaintiff and his supplier installed the system, and defendants paid for everything but the pump and its installation. Plaintiff and his supplier supervised the digging of the sump for the installation of the pump but did not test it. The pump became clogged before any water ever came out of it. The supplier cleaned the pump and had an agent reinstall it. Defendants tried unsuccessfully to get the system to work and called plaintiff to complain several times. Defendants finally told plaintiff to come and get the pump and refused to pay for it. They later purchased a different pump, which operated the system properly. Plaintiff sued for the price of the pump and installation costs. The District Court entered judgment for the defendants. Plaintiff contends that the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law were insufficient, failing to adequately address the provisions of the U.C.C. governing rejection of nonconforming goods. The Supreme Court found that although the findings and conclusions could have been better, there was substantial evidence to support the conclusions that: (1) the goods were nonconforming; (2) there was a failure to cure the defects of the pump; and (3) the use of the pump was in fact a prolonged effort to determine why the pump failed to work and to cure the defect, and as such was not an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership. There was no acceptance by the defendants, no use inconsistent with the ownership of the plaintiff, and no delay in offering the return of the nonconforming pump significant enough to justify a conclusion that defendants had accepted the pump. Steinmetz v. Robertus, 196 M 311, 637 P2d 31, 38 St. Rep. 2067 (1981).

Refusal to Reopen Default Divorce Upheld — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution but failed to answer or otherwise appear. A default was entered, and 1½ years later the appellant moved to set aside the default and to obtain an accounting from his former spouse with respect to various items of personal property. The court refused to reopen the divorce decree and denied his motion for an accounting. The court found, with respect to the personal property, that appellant had made a gift of the personal property to his former spouse. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no basis in the record to determine that the District Court was clearly erroneous in finding that a gift had been made. Because of that, he was not entitled to an accounting and the District Court properly denied his motion. In re the Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981).

Extra Capacity Factor in Allocating Cost of Service — Finding of Substantial Evidence Not Clearly Erroneous: The Public Service Commission's (P.S.C.) decision to reject the city's proposed extra capacity factor, which was based upon a contract provision between the city and an adjoining water district to allocate cost of services to the water district, was upheld by the Supreme Court. The P.S.C. had substantial evidence before it in determining the extra capacity factor to be assigned to the district, and the decision, which was based on actual water use and comparisons from large water consumers similar in extent of demand to the water district, was not clearly erroneous. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

Normalization of Test-Year Data in Rate Determination — Finding of Sufficient Evidence Not Clearly Erroneous: The Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) has no statutory duty to normalize test-year data; it is within the Commission's discretion to determine when normalization is necessary, and the Supreme Court will not substitute its judgment for that of the P.S.C. on appeal. The P.S.C. had sufficient evidence before it upon which to reach a determination, and the P.S.C. did not act unreasonably nor did it establish a rate that was so low as to be confiscatory. Helena v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 194 M 173, 634 P2d 192, 38 St. Rep. 1560 (1981).

What Constitutes Excuse of Performance — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: On appeal in a breach of contract action, the seller argued that the evidence showed he intended to deliver the calves to the buyer by the extended delivery date of December 15 but was excused from performance because of bad weather. The trial court, however, chose to believe that the seller did not so intend, which belief was supported by the facts. The findings were not clearly erroneous. Therefore, the trial court was upheld. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

What Constitutes Excuse of Performance by Reason of Rejection: On appeal in a breach of contract action, the seller argued that the buyer had wrongfully rejected delivery after January 1. (The contract called for delivery in mid-November, but an extended delivery date of December 15 had been discussed.) The rejection allegedly made performance impossible due to the buyer's hindrance. The trial court found that the seller had never delivered any calves and concluded that the failure of the seller to make even partial performance amounted to a complete breach of the contract. The court's finding was supported by the evidence that the seller failed to tender delivery after January 1, that all he did was state on several occasions that he would be unable to deliver until January 1, and that the buyer had always demanded delivery by the (earlier) agreed date. After January 1, the seller took the calves to Billings and sold them at a price higher than the contract price without offering them to the buyer. Accordingly, the trial court's findings were held not clearly erroneous. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

Family Farm — Installment Payments for Spouse's Share: Petitioner and respondent were divorced. In the decree dissolving the marriage, the trial judge divided the major asset, the family farm, awarding 55% to the husband and 45% to the wife. The farm had been in the husband's family since 1917. The husband was to pay the wife's share in four equal annual installments. The wife contends that the farm should have been sold so that she would have the opportunity of sharing in any gain realized on the property. She also contends that the settlement scheme is unfair because it allows the husband to retain income-producing property while she receives only cash. The dissolution decree was consistent with the policy of keeping a farm or ranch intact and operated as a unit upon dissolution whenever there is a reasonable means of providing a wife her equitable share of the property short of selling the land. The value of the estate is a question of fact for the District Court, and there was no showing that the valuation was "clearly erroneous". Giving the wife a lien on the property until the payments are made adequately protects her interests. Gomke v. Gomke, 192 M 169, 627 P2d 395, 38 St. Rep. 578 (1981), followed in In re Marriage of Bell, 220 M 123, 713 P2d 552, 43 St. Rep. 226 (1986).

Attorney's Fees Substantiated by the Evidence: Attorney's fees awarded to the wife in a marriage dissolution case were not excessive where the District Court's finding of the number of hours necessary to represent the wife is substantiated by evidence in the record. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Lump-Sum Award Double to Wife Where Husband Has Greater Earning Capacity — Findings Not Clearly Erroneous: A lump-sum award to the wife in a marriage dissolution of a proportion of the marital estate twice the husband's award was not an abuse of discretion by the District Court where the husband did have a greater earning capacity, despite his unemployment at the time of dissolution and immediately prior to the dissolution. Section 40-4-202 requires the District Court to consider the opportunity of the parties for future acquisition of capital asset and income. "Opportunity" is a broad word that includes the capacity of the parties to earn future income.

The findings were therefore not clearly erroneous. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

No Finding of Enticement to Obtain Personal Jurisdiction: The District Court's finding that it had personal jurisdiction over respondent in a marriage dissolution is supported by the record and thus will be allowed to stand on appeal under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. Respondent's contention that he was enticed into the jurisdiction was found to have no basis since respondent stated that he was a resident of the state and he was taking care of his own and other family affairs. Karr v. Karr, 192 M 388, 628 P2d 267, 38 St. Rep. 506 (1981).

Findings of Reliance Not Clearly Erroneous: In an action by the plaintiff contractor against the defendant motor carrier for breach of contract, the finding by the District Court that the plaintiff relied upon the bid of the defendant was supported by substantial evidence. The evidence showed that the memorandum of the defendant was delivered to the plaintiff for the purpose of consummating a proposal previously offered by the defendant and that the plaintiff advised the defendant that the plaintiff would notify the defendant when the contract was to be performed. These findings were not clearly erroneous and therefore could not be set aside by the Supreme Court. Empire Steel Mfg. Co. v. Carlson, 191 M 189, 622 P2d 1016, 38 St. Rep. 101 (1981).

Sufficiency of Evidence of Oral Agreement Additional to Written Divorce Settlement Agreement: On appeal relating to his divorce settlement agreement, the former husband argued that there was insufficient evidence of an oral agreement between him and his former wife covering matters not in the written agreement. The Supreme Court said that there was no preponderance of evidence contrary to the findings at trial. The only evidence that the oral agreement did not exist was the husband's denial. The husband had put a car at his wife's disposal for several months after their separation, which action could properly be interpreted as an action in furtherance of his obligations under the oral agreement. The findings of the District Court were based on sufficient evidence to properly support the trial court's judgment. Harris v. Harris, 189 M 509, 616 P2d 1099, 37 St. Rep. 1696 (1980).

Attorney's Fees — Reliance by Courts on Experts: In determining attorney's fees, the court as a jury is not bound absolutely to the testimony of expert witnesses. It can reduce or increase the figures submitted to it by experts as reasonable attorney's fees, and as long as its findings are not clearly erroneous the determination made in its discretion will not be disturbed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925 (1980).

Findings to Support Breach of Contract: The parties entered into a written agreement under which defendant was to selectively cut all merchantable timber on plaintiff's land that had been or was infected by the pine beetle. The evidence showed that defendant cut trees that were not merchantable and merchantable trees not affected by the pine beetle. He was also clearcutting sections of timber. This evidence was sufficient to support the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law that defendant had breached the contract. Madison Fork Ranch v. L & B Lodge Pole Timber Prod., 189 M 292, 615 P2d 900 (1980).

Child Support Determination — Error on Financial Matters: When the District Court's findings in determining child support were contradictory to the evidence of the husband's income, and when debt payments were allocated differently in two places in the decree, the findings were clearly erroneous, and thus cannot stand and must be reviewed again by the District Court. Benjamin v. Benjamin, 189 M 158, 615 P2d 218 (1980).

Recovery Limited to Specific Injury Statute: The workers' compensation court decided that the claimant was not entitled to permanent total disability benefits and limited his recovery to benefits under 39-71-707 (since repealed) and to such temporary total disability compensation benefits as he had received while convalescing. The decision was upheld since credible and substantial evidence appeared in the record in support of the workers' compensation court. McGee v. Indus. Indem. Co., 182 M 149, 595 P2d 1156 (1979).

Prior-Acquired and Gifted Property — Disposition: The trial court found the wife had not contributed financially to property gifted to the husband during the marriage and property acquired by the husband prior to the marriage and that her contribution as a homemaker had not facilitated maintenance of that property. Any increase in the value of the property was the result of inflation. Such findings were not clearly erroneous, unsupported by the evidence, or made arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or in excess of the bounds of reason. In re Jorgensen, 180 M 294, 590 P2d 606 (1979).

Independent Contractor Status Supported by Substantial Evidence: The trial court's finding that a general contractor did not lose his independent contractor status when the defendants began making direct payments to the contractor's employees and subcontractors in order to keep them from walking off the job was supported by substantial evidence. Kosmerl v. Barbour, 180 M 208, 589 P2d 1017 (1979).

Contracts: Where plaintiff's performance under a contract was prevented in part by the defendant and in part by the weather, the District Court did not err in awarding defendant only one-fourth of the balance due under the contract. Rosenquist v. Harding, 179 M 521, 587 P2d 416 (1978).

Validity of Election — Alternative Form of Government: The findings of fact and conclusions of law of the District Court upholding the validity of city and county alternative form of government elections and proceedings leading thereto were supported by substantial evidence. Schuman v. Study Comm'n of Yellowstone County, 176 M 313, 578 P2d 291 (1978).

Substantial Evidence — Findings Not Affected by Newly Discovered Evidence: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law, and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which at best was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977).

Easement by Prescription — Findings Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where the District Court's judgment entered upon findings and conclusions declared the plaintiffs to be the owners of an easement by prescription for the use of a roadway across the defendant's land, the findings that the defendant's use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted were supported by substantial credible evidence. Lunceford v. Trenk, 163 M 504, 518 P2d 266 (1974), followed in Rasmussen v. Fowler, 245 M 308, 800 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 2134 (1990).

Findings of Fact: The findings of fact set forth by the judge were sufficient to meet the requirements of this rule. Mondakota Gas Co. v. Becker, 151 M 513, 445 P2d 745 (1968).

STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

Standard of Review of Findings and Conclusions of District Court Sitting Without Jury: The Supreme Court reviews the findings of a District Court sitting without a jury to determine if the findings were clearly erroneous. Findings are clearly erroneous if substantial credible evidence does not support them, if the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, or if a review of the record leaves the Supreme Court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake was committed. The evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party when determining whether substantial credible evidence supports the findings. A District Court's conclusions of law will be reviewed to determine whether the conclusions are correct. Ray v. Nansel, 2002 MT 191, 311 M 135, 53 P3d 870 (2002), following Guthrie v. Hardy, 2001 MT 122, 305 M 367, 28 P3d 467 (2001), and followed in In re Mental Health of A.S.B., 2008 MT 82, 342 M 169, 180 P3d 625 (2008), with regard to review of civil commitment proceedings.

Scope of Review on Appeal:

The Supreme Court reviews the findings of a trial court sitting without a jury to determine if the findings are clearly erroneous. Clear error occurs if: (1) the findings are not supported by substantial credible evidence; (2) the trial court has misapprehended the effect of the evidence; or (3) a review of the record leaves the Supreme Court with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed. Evidence will be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Here, evidence was substantial that three separate agreements memorialized one transaction for the sale and purchase of three ice cream distributor businesses, that a related consulting agreement was merely a promissory note wherein the seller agreed to finance the balance of the purchase price, and that the seller did not "sell, transfer, assign, and deliver" one of the distributor agreements to the buyer as promised. Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Appellants must show by a clear preponderance of the evidence that the findings of fact of the District Court are incorrect, and it is their burden to do so before the Supreme Court may disturb those findings of fact. Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978).

Action to Quiet Title in Mining Company Shares — Credible Evidence of Outstanding Shares — District Court Upheld: Safronoff and others were defendants in an action to quiet title to outstanding shares of the defunct Sun Mining, Inc., which was involuntarily dissolved by the state. The District Court reviewed all of the evidence before it, including a list of outstanding shares prepared by Sun Mining's secretary-treasurer shortly before the company was dissolved, the number of shares held by each shareholder according to each shareholder's stock certificate, and oral testimony, and found that the secretary-treasurer's list was the only credible evidence. Safronoff appealed the decision of the District Court, contending that he should have been awarded additional shares. Relying upon Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285 (1991), and St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106 (1992), the Supreme Court applied the "clearly erroneous" standard to the District Court's findings of fact and held that although there were conflicts in the evidence before it, the District Court reasonably relied upon this evidence and that the District Court's findings of fact were not clearly erroneous. Duncan v. Allen, 1998 MT 316, 292 M 180, 970 P2d 1036, 55 St. Rep. 1296 (1998).

Common-Law Marriage — District Court Overturned: The standard of review of a District Court's findings of fact is whether the findings are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court has adopted a three-part test to determine whether a District Court's findings of fact are clearly erroneous. A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if it is not supported by substantial evidence, if the District Court misapprehended the effect of the evidence, or if, after reviewing the record, the Supreme Court is left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been made. In this case, involving an alleged common-law marriage, the Supreme Court overturned the District Court's conclusion that a common-law marriage did not exist, stating that although there was substantial evidence to support the lower court's findings of fact, the Supreme Court's review of the record led it to the conclusion that the District Court misapprehended the effect of the evidence. In re Estate of Hunsaker, 1998 MT 279, 291 M 412, 968 P2d 281, 55 St. Rep. 1144 (1998).

Alleged Failure to Disclose Agency Relationship — Resolution of Conflicting Evidence — Alternative Findings Not Required: Garrison purchased property on Flathead Lake through Averill, a real estate broker. Later, Garrison filed suit against Averill and the seller of the property, alleging that he, Garrison, considered Averill his agent and relied on Averill to represent his interests and that Averill was aware of that reliance. Garrison also argued that the District Court ignored testimony from his expert to the effect that Averill breached the standard of care by failing to document his disclosure to Garrison of his agency relationship with the seller. Garrison also alleged that Averill was negligent and that the negligence caused Garrison's damages. The Supreme Court pointed out testimony in the record from Averill's expert and concluded that the District Court had not ignored the testimony presented by Garrison but simply resolved conflicting evidence against Garrison. Citing Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341 (1992), the Supreme Court held that just because there is evidence in the record on which the District Court could have based certain findings of fact does not require the District Court to make those findings. Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997).

Supreme Court Clarifies That Standard of Review for Estate Cases at Equity Is the "Clearly Erroneous" Test: In reviewing a lower court's decision that a will could be admitted to probate because it was not the product of undue influence, the Supreme Court stated that the standard of review in estate cases at equity was inconsistent and contradictory. Under the statute, the test has tended to be whether substantial credible evidence supports the lower court's findings, while under the rule, the test has been whether the lower court's findings are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court held that nothing in the statute precludes the use of the "clearly erroneous" test, while the rule, by its terms, mandates its use. Therefore, with respect to estate cases at equity, the standard of review would be the "clearly erroneous" test. In re Estate of Tipp, 281 M 120, 933 P2d 182, 54 St. Rep. 90 (1997).

Valuation of Farm Property — Adoption of Appraisal as Factual Issue Determined by District Court — "Clearly Erroneous" Standard Applicable: Upon the dissolution of Alan's and Linda's marriage, the District Court adopted the appraisal of Alan's expert witness, to the exclusion of the appraisal by Linda's expert. Linda raised numerous objections to the appraisal by Alan's expert. Citing Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the valuation of property is a factual issue to be determined by the trial court and that when reviewing findings of fact on this subject, the Supreme Court is precluded from substituting its judgment for that of the trier of fact and may only set aside the findings of the trial court if they are clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court set out specific reasons why the appraisal by Alan's expert was adopted and the appraisal by Linda's expert rejected. In re Marriage of Meeks, 276 M 237, 915 P2d 831, 53 St. Rep. 365 (1996), followed and clearly erroneous standard applied in In re Marriage of Geror, 2000 MT 60, 299 M 33, 996 P2d 381, 57 St. Rep. 285 (2000).

Substantial Evidence of Negligence: Although in conflict with defendant's version of facts, substantial evidence existed to support plaintiff's claim. It was foreseeable that a freestanding light standard could fall and injure anyone in its path and that someone could act with a minimal amount of force in a manner to intervene with the standard's stability. The Supreme Court will not retry a case simply because the jury chooses to believe one side's evidence to the exclusion of the other and will not disturb a jury's negligence findings unless the results are inherently impossible to believe. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

In reviewing the trial of a suit for damages suffered in a car accident, the Supreme Court refused to overturn a jury verdict of no negligence by respondent when the evidence indicated the following: (1) the respondent was traveling at a reasonable rate of speed; (2) respondent's headlamps were on and aimed properly; and (3) appellant and his companion were walking on the road, facing away from traffic, and wearing dark clothes on a dark night. Kukuchka v. Ziemet, 219 M 155, 710 P2d 1361, 42 St. Rep. 1916 (1985).

Evidence of Adequate Medical Care — Jury Finding of Lack of Medical Malpractice Affirmed: On appeal from judgment based on a jury verdict finding no medical malpractice for injuries sustained by a premature infant, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding sufficient evidence derived from expert testimony to establish a reasonable basis for the jury conclusion that medical care met or exceeded the applicable standard of care under the circumstances. Silvis v. Hobbs, 251 M 407, 824 P2d 1013, 49 St. Rep. 62 (1992).

Adoption by Workers' Compensation Court of Claimant's Proposed Findings, Conclusions, and Judgment: Appellant claimed reversible error by the Workers' Compensation Court's substantial, although not verbatim, adoption of claimant's proposed findings, conclusions, and judgment. Although under 39-71-2903 that court is governed by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act rather than by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, there is nothing in the Montana Administrative Procedure Act or the rules of the Workers' Compensation Court that prohibits the verbatim adoption of the prevailing party's proposed findings, conclusions, and judgment in a manner similar to that allowed for District Courts under this rule. Wolfe v. Webb, 251 M 217, 824 P2d 240, 49 St. Rep. 1 (1992), followed in In re Marriages of Boyer & Overman, 261 M 179, 862 P2d 384, 50 St. Rep. 1277 (1993).

Attorney Not Public Figure as Matter of Law — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Defendant attorney filed a defamation action against the Great Falls Tribune for damages arising from a published article, later retracted, that incorrectly reported that he was sought for criminal charges. In reversing the judgment and remanding the case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment because its factors did not specify with sufficient particularity the rationale underlying its ruling that the defendant was a public figure as a matter of law. Article II, sec. 7, Mont. Const., provides that in libel suits, the facts and the law are determined by the jury under the direction of the court. Review of the record revealed the existence of genuine issues of material fact that must be determined by a jury. Kurth v. Great Falls Tribune Co., 246 M 407, 804 P2d 393, 48 St. Rep. 13 (1991).

Condemnation Findings Not Challenged at Trial Court Level: A condemnation case was remanded for the lower court to determine certain factual questions concerning the city's proposed takeover of a privately owned water company. Upon appeal of the remanded case, the city did not allege that findings were clearly erroneous or unsupported by evidence. Therefore, the Supreme Court was bound by the findings. Missoula v. Mtn. Water Co., 236 M 442, 771 P2d 103, 46 St. Rep. 494 (1989).

Findings and Conclusions Not Completely Verbatim — Evidence of Judge's Thoughtful Consideration: A party specified as error a judge's verbatim adoption of findings of fact and conclusion of law proposed by the other party. The Supreme Court determined that they were not adopted completely verbatim and held that the judge's editing of findings and selective use of conclusions, as well as reliance on his own conclusions, evidenced thoughtful consideration by the judge deciding the case. Felton Inv. Group v. Taurman, 222 M 238, 722 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 1228 (1986).

Reasonable Visitation Provision Replaced by Fixed Visitation Schedule — No Abuse of Discretion: Following dissolution of marriage, mother was granted custody of two minor children with reasonable visitation awarded to father. In the ensuing months, the father was permitted to visit the children only once and further attempts to arrange visitation were not successful since the mother had no phone and would not respond to messages. The father petitioned the District Court to grant a fixed visitation schedule, and the petition was granted. Although not required under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), the order contained findings and conclusions, including evidence that the District Court Judge considered the best interests of the children and the conclusion that the mother's suggested graduated basis visitation schedule required reasonableness that was lacking in both parties. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's aid was necessary to clarify the meaning of "reasonable visitation" and found no abuse of discretion in the District Court Judge's conclusion. In re Marriage of Vinecke, 221 M 58, 716 P2d 638, 43 St. Rep. 633 (1986).

Proposed Findings and Conclusions of Counsel Adopted Verbatim:

The test applied by the Supreme Court to determine if the District Court's use of proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law was proper is whether the proposed findings are sufficiently comprehensive and pertinent to the issues to provide a basis for decision and whether they are supported by the evidence presented. In re Marriage of Benner, 219 M 188, 711 P2d 802, 42 St. Rep. 1943 (1985), followed in In re Marriage of Purkett, 222 M 225, 721 P2d 349, 43 St. Rep. 1217 (1986).

The Supreme Court rejected appellants' contention that, by adopting verbatim the bank's proposals, the District Court led itself into egregious error because it made no findings relating to appellants' affirmative defenses and counterclaims. Noting that this was a serious defect in the findings, the Supreme Court proceeded to treat the case as one of summary judgment and, relying on the finding that there was no specific agreement not to foreclose, held that there was no genuine issue of material fact raised in the defense and counterclaim issues that would merit remand. First Nat'l Bank of Missoula v. McGuinness, 217 M 409, 705 P2d 579, 42 St. Rep. 1288 (1985).

The court rejected defendants' argument that the District Court failed to exercise independent judgment by adopting the plaintiffs' proposed findings. The plaintiffs' findings, as adopted by the District Court, are supported by the record. The standard for review of findings made by a District Court is the same whether the District Court has prepared them or has adopted a party's proposed findings and conclusions. Bowman v. Prater, 213 M 459, 692 P2d 9, 41 St. Rep. 2236 (1984).

It is not good practice for the District Court to adopt verbatim (here, by mere photocopying) one party's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law because it may lead to error. However, once the District Court adopts findings and conclusions, they become the court's own and may not be overturned on appeal unless they are clearly erroneous. The record in this case contains substantial credible evidence to support the court's findings and conclusions. R.L.S. & T.L.S. v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983), followed in Turner v. Ferrin, 232 M 146, 757 P2d 335, 45 St. Rep. 946 (1988).

Although the practice is disapproved, the fact that District Court substantially adopted the findings proposed by counsel for one of the parties does not change the standard for review, which is that the findings are to stand if supported by law and evidence. LeProwse v. LeProwse, 198 M 357, 646 P2d 526, 39 St. Rep. 1053 (1982). See also Kowis v. Kowis, 202 M 371, 658 P2d 1084, 40 St. Rep. 149 (1983), In re Marriage of Jacobson, 228 M 458, 743 P2d 1025, 44 St. Rep. 1678 (1987), In re Marriage of Hagemo, 230 M 255, 749 P2d 1079, 45 St. Rep. 183 (1988), In re Marriage of Purdy, 234 M 502, 764 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 2084 (1988), In re Marriage of Walls, 278 M 413, 925 P2d 483, 53 St. Rep. 974 (1996), and In re Marriage of McDermott, 2003 MT 283, 318 M 13, 79 P3d 245 (2003). Purdy was followed in In re Marriage of Stufft, 276 M 454, 916 P2d 767, 53 St. Rep. 467 (1996).

Notwithstanding the duty imposed in Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., upon a District Court to "find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon", the rule is not automatically breached when a court adopts verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions submitted by the prevailing party, especially where, as here, the District Judge invited both parties to submit proposed findings and conclusions prior to making his decision. Adopted findings, though not the product of the District Judge's mind, are formally his and will stand if supported by the evidence. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981), followed in Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

The appellant argued that the District Court erred by adopting the proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law, and decree submitted by respondent. She suggested that a lower standard for review should exist for the review of findings and conclusions drafted by counsel than exists under the "clearly erroneous" standard of Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court declined to adopt this suggestion. The findings of fact and conclusions of law entered here by the court were comprehensive and supported by the evidence. They contained no clear error. Jensen v. Jensen, 193 M 247, 631 P2d 700, 38 St. Rep. 1109 (1981), followed in Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986), and in Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988).

Commodity Credit Corporation Payments — Loan Not Sale: Substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion that a farm corporation treated loans of the federal Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) as corporate debt. The CCC loans have few of the aspects of a true sale. There is no transfer of title. Actual title or ownership of the grain is not specifically transferred until the farmer either activates the nonrecourse clause or pays his loan. The government pays the farmer for storing the grain during the term of the loan, but aside from that has no other power to use the grain. Hass v. Hass Land Co., 217 M 246, 704 P2d 63, 42 St. Rep. 1170 (1985).

Substantial Evidence to Support Order of Commitment — Scope of Review: The Supreme Court found substantial evidence to support the lower court's order of commitment. The oral testimony of Dr. Hughes, various medical reports submitted by the psychiatrists, and hospital records were relied upon by the judge. Appellant expressly asked the Supreme Court to review the weight of Dr. Hughes' testimony. That is not the role of an appellate court. The trier of fact makes findings, and the Supreme Court will not disturb them unless shown to be clearly erroneous. In re G.S., 215 M 384, 698 P2d 406, 42 St. Rep. 451 (1985).

Employee of General Contractor Expert on Tile Installation — Standard of Review: In an action for breach of warranty brought by the general contractor against a subcontractor regarding installation of a tile floor, plaintiff's employee was allowed to testify as an expert witness on the subject of tile installation. The court rejected subcontractor's argument that the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the witness was an expert. Although the court expressed concern that witness was allowed to express his opinion on a skill of which he had no practical or personal involvement prior to preparation for trial, the fact that it would reach a different conclusion on the determination than that of the trial court does not render the trial judgment infirm. The trial court's ruling must be upheld unless shown to be clearly erroneous. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Christensen, 215 M 372, 697 P2d 1344, 42 St. Rep. 440 (1985). This standard applied in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

No Indication of Weight Trial Court Placed on Inadmissible Evidence — New Trial: In the appeal of a conviction under 61-8-401 for driving under the influence of alcohol, the Supreme Court ruled inadmissible blood test results entered into evidence by the trial court. The Supreme Court further ruled that it could not decide whether there was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant without the blood test results because the Supreme Court had no indication of the weight the trial court placed upon the test in its decision. The case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. McDonald, 215 M 340, 697 P2d 1328, 42 St. Rep. 414 (1985).

District Court Findings Presumed Correct: The appellate standard for review is clear. The findings of the trial court are presumed to be correct if supported by substantial evidence. Robinson v. Schrade, 215 M 326, 697 P2d 923, 42 St. Rep. 401 (1985).

Medical Evidence Entered by Deposition — No Substantial Evidence to Deny Claim — Liberal Construction: Because the record on appeal of a Workers' Compensation Court decision consisted mainly of testimony by deposition, the court's function on review is different than the usual limited standard of review. When the critical evidence, particularly medical evidence, is entered by deposition, the Supreme Court is in as good a position as the Workers' Compensation Court to judge the weight to be given to such record testimony. A review of the medical experts' depositions in this case reveals a sharp conflict in the medical evidence presented in regard to the claimant's injury. The court held that the testimony of the expert relied on in the Workers' Compensation Court's findings did not amount to substantial evidence and that there was no causal relation between claimant's current symptoms and the original injuries suffered while under defendant's employ. Moreover, the Legislature has mandated that the Workers' Compensation Act be liberally construed. Shupert v. Anaconda Aluminum Co., 215 M 182, 696 P2d 436, 42 St. Rep. 277 (1985), followed in Frost v. Anaconda Co., 216 M 387, 701 P2d 987, 42 St. Rep. 889 (1985), and Weber v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 270 M 239, 890 P2d 1296, 52 St. Rep. 162 (1995).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Terminate Parental Rights: Evidence was held sufficient to support trial court's findings that appellant failed to comply with court-approved treatment plan and that appellant's condition which rendered her unfit to be a parent is unlikely to change within a reasonable time. Substantial credible evidence supports the findings, and they may not be set aside unless clearly erroneous. In re R.M.B., Youth in Need of Care, 213 M 29, 689 P2d 281, 41 St. Rep. 1925 (1984).

Substantial Evidence to Support Findings: The function of an appellate court in reviewing findings of fact in a civil action tried by the District Court without a jury is not to substitute its judgment for the trier of fact but to determine whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Although there is conflicting evidence, the record indicates substantial evidence upon which the District Court based its decision. Eliason v. Wallace, 209 M 358, 680 P2d 573, 41 St. Rep. 758 (1984), followed in Gypsy-Highview Gathering System, Inc. v. Dept. of State Lands, 231 M 330, 753 P2d 317, 45 St. Rep. 657 (1988).

Role of Supreme Court on Review:

The Supreme Court's function on review does not include retrial of the case. The Supreme Court may not substitute its judgment for that of the trial court. The reviewing court is confined to determining whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law. The court reviews the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The evidence may be inherently weak and still be "substantial". General Mills, Inc. v. Zerbe Bros., Inc., 207 M 19, 672 P2d 1109, 40 St. Rep. 1830 (1983), following Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978); In re Estate of LaTray, 183 M 141, 598 P2d 619 (1979); Olson v. Westfork Properties, Inc., 171 M 154, 557 P2d 821 (1976); Hornung v. Estate of Lagerquist, 155 M 412, 473 P2d 541 (1970); followed in In re Estate of Lehner, 220 M 129, 714 P2d 130, 43 St. Rep. 231 (1986), and in Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992). See also In re Marriage of Beitz, 211 M 111, 683 P2d 485, 41 St. Rep. 1247 (1984), and Emasco Ins. Co. v. Waymire, 242 M 131, 788 P2d 1357, 47 St. Rep. 636 (1990).

The standard for review of a District Court's findings is the same whether the court prepared the findings or adopted a party's proposed findings: the test, then, is whether the court abused its discretion by acting arbitrarily without employment of conscientious judgment or exceeded the bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. The findings must stand if supported by the record. Error in adopting proposed findings is more an ethical than a legal breach and occurs when the proposed findings are relied upon to the exclusion of the proper consideration of facts and the exercise of independent judgment. In re Marriage of Goodmundson, 201 M 535, 655 P2d 509, 39 St. Rep. 2295 (1982), followed in In re Marriage of Merry, 213 M 141, 689 P2d 1250, 41 St. Rep. 2009 (1984). See also Johnson v. Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438, 40 St. Rep. 1255 (1983).

Action to Increase Child Support — Standard of Appellate Review:

Five years after entry of the parties' original divorce decree, the District Court, on motion of the mother, ordered that the father's monthly child support payments be increased from $125 to $200. On appeal, the Supreme Court, noting that it will reverse the District Court only if its findings are clearly erroneous, declined to overrule the District Court. The Supreme Court stated that the factors relied upon by the District Court, i.e., the increase in the child's age and needs, inflation, and the fact that the wife's expenses exceed her income, rendered the terms of the original decree unconscionable within the meaning of 40-4-208. Johnson v. Johnson, 205 M 259, 667 P2d 438, 40 St. Rep. 1255 (1983).

On appeal of an action to increase a child support payment, the Supreme Court will view the record in a light most favorable to the prevailing party. Findings of a District Court will not be set aside unless they are clearly erroneous. When there is substantial credible evidence, though perhaps conflicting, the judgment of the District Court will not be overturned. Nicolai v. Nicolai, 193 M 203, 631 P2d 300, 38 St. Rep. 1100 (1981).

Substantial Credible Evidence in Support of District Court's Finding That Operation of Bar Did Not Create Nuisance: Plaintiffs, owners of a building in which defendants, lessees, operated a bar, filed an unlawful detainer action against defendants pursuant to 70-27-108. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants, by allowing loud music and noise in the bar, were violating an implied covenant not to operate their bar in such a manner as to create a nuisance. The trial judge ruled that the lease could not be canceled under any theory of nuisance because defendants were doing what they had a right to do, operate a bar. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's finding that the bar was not being operated as a nuisance, it was unnecessary to determine whether Montana law recognizes in real property leases an implied covenant on the part of the lessee to use the leased premises so as not to injure the lessor by creating a nuisance. Martinson v. Thompson, 205 M 264, 667 P2d 423, 40 St. Rep. 1259 (1983).

Evidence Insufficient As a Matter of Law: Testimony at trial did not clearly and convincingly establish that respondent, due to his mental condition, was unable to protect his life or health at the time of the trial. Therefore, the evidence that respondent was "seriously mentally ill" within the meaning of 53-21-102 was insufficient as a matter of law, and the District Court commitment order was vacated. In re R.T., 204 M 493, 665 P2d 789, 40 St. Rep. 1025 (1983).

Findings and Conclusions as to Water Rights Held Inadequate — Judgment Vacated and Remanded:

Although the Supreme Court has discouraged District Courts from the practice of adopting the prevailing party's proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law virtually verbatim, once adopted by the District Court the "clearly erroneous" standard of Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., supports them on appeal. In re Marriage of Speer, 201 M 418, 654 P2d 1001, 39 St. Rep. 2204 (1982), followed in Glasser v. Glasser, 206 M 77, 669 P2d 685, 40 St. Rep. 1518 (1983).

When a midstream and downstream water user filed suit against the upstream user to have the District Court declare the relative water rights of the parties, the findings of fact and conclusions of law entered by the District Court were so bare and inadequate as to provide no basis for meaningful appellate review. Because it could not be determined from the District Court's bare conclusions (i.e., that the parties had failed to prove their case by a preponderance of the evidence and had abandoned their rights) what the factual or evidentiary basis for the District Court's decision was, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment as to all of the three parties, remanded the case to the District Court, and directed it to enter findings and conclusions that are reflective of the evidence presented at trial and the legal contentions of the parties. 79 Ranch, Inc. v. Pitsch, 193 M 229, 631 P2d 690, 38 St. Rep. 1048 (1981).

Ambiguity of Contract Clause — Conclusion of Law: Contract ambiguities are questions of fact, and on appeal the Supreme Court would ordinarily limit their review to the "clearly erroneous" standard of review. The initial determination of whether or not an ambiguity exists is one of law. Thus, the determination by the District Court that a default clause is ambiguous is a conclusion of law freely reviewable. When on review the Supreme Court finds that the clause is not ambiguous, the court is free to rely on its own interpretation of the clause. SAS Partnership v. Schafer, 200 M 478, 653 P2d 834, 39 St. Rep. 1883 (1982).

Evidence to Support Findings: On appeal, the court will not substitute its judgment for that of the trier of fact. Findings will not be overturned unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against them, recognizing that evidence may be weak or conflicting yet still support the findings. On review, evidence will be reviewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126, 39 St. Rep. 1867 (1982). See also Wallace v. Wallace, 203 M 255, 661 P2d 455, 40 St. Rep. 430 (1983), followed in Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Expert Testimony Review — Substantial Evidence Most Favorable to Prevailing Party: Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. At all times defendant denied any damage. The parties presented conflicting expert testimony as to whether the increase in the water table level was due to precipitation or the dam. The Supreme Court's standard of review is whether the findings of fact and conclusions of law are supported by substantial evidence (citing Kearns v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 173 M 239, 567 P2d 433 (1977)). The evidence must be reviewed in a light most favorable to the prevailing party in District Court (citing Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1331 (1977)). There was substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's findings. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 9 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

Findings Contradicted and Unsupported: The determination by the District Court that the wife's bachelor's degree in economics would enable her to find appropriate employment to support herself in a manner similar to that enjoyed during the marriage was contradicted by other findings and was unsupported by the record. Therefore, it was clearly erroneous and had to be reversed. Bowman v. Bowman, 194 M 233, 633 P2d 1198, 38 St. Rep. 1515 (1981).

Appellate Review of Facts — Action of an Equitable Nature: In equitable causes where issues are close, a degree of deference will be accorded the findings of the trial court since it is in a better position to make decisions of fact. Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires findings of fact made by the District Court to be upheld unless they are clearly erroneous, but the rule does not make any distinction between equitable causes and cases at law; thus the Supreme Court in reviewing an action of an equitable nature must look to 3-2-204(5) and independently review all questions of fact as well as questions of law. In causes where the issues are not close, the standard for this review is to uphold the District Court on questions of fact unless there is a decided preponderance of the evidence against its findings. Rase v. Castle Mtn. Ranch, Inc., 193 M 209, 631 P2d 680, 38 St. Rep. 992 (1981).

Findings Supporting Continued Maintenance Properly Made — Issue Not Before the Court: Where the marriage of the parties was previously dissolved and the wife awarded maintenance without being required to seek employment in order that she be able to care for her handicapped child at home, the District Court did not err, upon a petition for discharge of the maintenance award, in adopting the respondent's proposed findings and conclusions. With the exception of a finding regarding increased financial need, there was sufficient evidence before the court showing no change in the child's need for special care to support the findings and conclusions that were adopted, no matter who drafted them. As the issue of increased spousal maintenance was not before the court, that finding must be vacated. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Prevailing Party Not Presenting Expert Testimony: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home structural problems requiring repair occurred. At trial plaintiffs were awarded damages against the defendant. On appeal defendant claimed that findings that the roof had not been constructed as planned and bid, and that construction defects by defendant brought about the instability and unsafe nature of the house, were not supported by credible evidence especially since the District Court did not accord any weight to the testimony of defendant's expert architect. The Supreme Court rejected the claim, stating that when substantial evidence in the record supports the findings of the District Court, the fact that the prevailing party does not present expert testimony does not mean that the testimony produced by experts on the other side is inherently superior. When the evidence is conflicting but the findings are supported by substantial credible evidence, the findings of the District Court will be upheld. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Nature of District Court Order — Mandamus — Action at Law: When the order of the District Court commands a school district to perform a duty that devolves upon it by operation of law, the order is in the nature of mandamus. Mandamus is an action at law. Therefore 3-2-204 does not apply. The District Court findings are to be reviewed on appeal under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. In re the "A" Family, 184 M 145, 602 P2d 157 (1979).

Findings by the Court: The findings of a trial court in a nonjury trial will not be reversed upon appeal, unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against the findings. Steward v. Casey, 182 M 185, 595 P2d 1176 (1979).

Conflicts in Evidence: Although conflicts may exist in the evidence presented, it is the duty and function of the trial judge to resolve such conflicts. His findings will not be disturbed on appeal where they are based on substantial though conflicting evidence. Kostbade v. Buckingham, 182 M 137, 595 P2d 1149 (1979).

Conflicting Evidence in Findings: If a trial court's findings are sustained by competent and substantial although conflicting evidence, they will not be disturbed on appeal. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Review of Evidence on Appeal: The evidence will be reviewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party, and the credibility of witnesses and weight accorded their testimony is for the District Court's determination in nonjury trials. Farmers St. Bank v. Mobile Homes Unlimited, 181 M 342, 593 P2d 734 (1979).

Review of Property Division: The rule for review of property division in marital cases is whether the District Court acted arbitrarily, without use of conscientious judgment, or exceeded the bounds of reason in view of all the circumstances. Kuntz v. Kuntz, 181 M 237, 593 P2d 41 (1979).

Workers' Compensation — Standard of Review: The findings and conclusions of the workers' compensation court, like those of District Courts, may not stand if there is a preponderance of the evidence against them when viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The findings of fact will not be set aside unless they are clearly erroneous. However, the Supreme Court is in as good a position to judge record testimony, as opposed to oral testimony, as the trial court. Hert v. Newberry, 178 M 355, 584 P2d 656, 587 P2d 11 (1978), clarified and rehearing denied in Hert v. Lumberman Mut. Cas. Co., 179 M 160, 587 P2d 11 (1978). Hert was held to no longer be authority for admissibility of medical records, in light of the 1990 adoption of ARM 24.5.317, in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Trial Court to Determine Ultimate Facts: The trial court's function in nonjury cases is to find ultimate facts from conflicting evidence, and those findings are sufficient if sustained by competent and substantial although conflicting evidence. Holloway v. Univ. of Mont., 178 M 198, 582 P2d 1265 (1978), followed in Kuhlman v. Rivera, 216 M 353, 701 P2d 982, 42 St. Rep. 863 (1985).

Court's Function — Determination of Substantial Credible Evidence: The court's function on review is not to substitute its judgment in place of the trier of facts but rather it is confined to determining whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Although conflicts may exist in the evidence presented, it is the duty and function of the trial judge to resolve such conflicts. His findings will not be disturbed on appeal where they are based on substantial though conflicting evidence. Olson v. Westfork Properties, Inc., 171 M 154, 157 P2d 821 (1976), followed in In re Support of Rockman, 217 M 498, 705 P2d 590, 42 St. Rep. 1323 (1985), and In re Adoption of E.S.R., 218 M 118, 706 P2d 132, 42 St. Rep. 1448 (1985).

Preponderance of Evidence: Findings of fact made by trial court will not be disturbed where they are supported by preponderance of evidence. W. Foundry, Inc. v. Matelich, 150 M 228, 433 P2d 789 (1967).

Former Rule 52(b). Amendment

Amendment of Final Judgment — Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Costs and Fees When No Entry of Final Judgment Filed: A party may appeal from a final judgment. A final judgment conclusively determines the rights of the parties and settles all claims in controversy in an action or proceeding, including any necessary determination of the amount of costs or attorney fees awarded or sanctions imposed. In this case, neither party served notice of entry of judgment, so the District Court retained jurisdiction to alter or amend the judgment because the 10-day period for filing a motion to amend the judgment had not begun to run. Thus, defendant's motion for an award of attorney fees was timely, even though it was filed almost 7 weeks after summary judgment, and the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were warranted and if so, the amount of the fees. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2008 MT 329, 346 M 162, 194 P3d 650 (2008).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

Successor Judge Not to Issue Amended Findings of Facts Without Review of Original Trial Transcript — Reversible Error: It was reversible error for a District Court Judge who did not preside over an original bench trial to issue amended findings of fact without having the benefit of a transcript of the original proceeding. That judge does not have the necessary basis to act as an advised and intelligent factfinder, either in the first instance or in an amendatory fashion. Unless the parties have stipulated to the relevant and controlling facts, a judge who is asked to amend findings of fact entered by another judge cannot act on the motion to amend without reviewing the relevant portions of the trial transcript. FIRS Holding Co., Inc. v. Lemley, 272 M 490, 901 P2d 571, 52 St. Rep. 831 (1995).

Court Error in Arriving at Conclusion of Law Before Finding Facts: The plaintiff, Marry, was injured in an automobile accident involving a Deputy Sheriff. The lower court found the parties equally at fault and ordered that neither receive damages. Marry appealed on the basis that even if she were 50% negligent, she suffered more damages and should receive some money from the defendant. On reconsidering the case, the lower court stated that it was its intention that the plaintiff not receive any money and amended one of its findings to hold that Marry's negligence was greater than the defendant's and she was not entitled to recovery. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the lower court did not reexamine the evidence in amending its order. It formulated its conclusion of law first and then changed the findings of fact to conform to the conclusion already arrived at. Marry v. Missoula County Sheriff's Dept., 263 M 152, 866 P2d 1129, 50 St. Rep. 1751 (1993).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to or Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., or this rule. A notice of appeal filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Issues Adequately Presented to Jury — Motion to Amend Verdict Properly Denied: Resolution of any conflicts in the evidence is in the province of the trier of fact. Therefore, when the issues were properly presented to the jury, it was not error for the trial court to deny a motion to alter or amend the verdict. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

Amendment Within Discretion of Court: The decision to amend and the manner of amendment lie squarely within the discretion of the court. The court is under no obligation to tailor its amendment to fit the specifications of the parties. Wagner v. Cutler, 232 M 332, 757 P2d 779, 45 St. Rep. 1092 (1988).

Contract Providing Attorney Fees as Part of Record — Fees Mentioned in Pretrial Order: A motion to amend pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., to include attorney fees was denied on the basis that defendants abandoned their claim for attorney fees by neglecting to state a claim in their pretrial order and because no evidence relative to fees was introduced at trial and therefore could not be added as a posttrial issue. The Supreme Court noted that attorney fees were contractually agreed to by the parties, so the issue of whether fees should be awarded was not one that would have been argued at trial. Further, since the contract was before the court as evidence and since the issue of attorney fees was raised twice in the pretrial order, the issue was not outside the court's record. The case was remanded for determination of reasonable attorney fees. Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788, 44 St. Rep. 1467 (1987).

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987).

Motion to Amend as "Refresher" When Considerable Time Elapsed: After original findings and conclusions were entered, husband moved to amend. The motion was granted, and judgment on the amended findings and conclusions was entered. Wife contended the motion to amend should have been rejected. The Supreme Court found that due to elapsed time between trial and issuance of original findings and conclusions (10 months), the motion served mainly as a reminder or "refresher" to the trial court that the complex and extensive property of the parties may not have been entirely equitably divided in the original findings and conclusions. Such use of a motion to amend was held not to be unreasonable. In re Marriage of Gallinger/Weissman, 221 M 463, 719 P2d 777, 43 St. Rep. 976 (1986).

No Findings of Fact Made — Denial of Motion to Amend Proper: When the trial court rendered judgment as a matter of law and no findings of fact were made, the court's denial of the appellant's motion to amend his complaint was proper. This rule provides a method by which a trial court's findings of fact may be amended. Klundt v. St., 219 M 347, 712 P2d 776, 43 St. Rep. 1 (1986).

Findings of Court in Error — No Waiver of Indemnity Reimbursement From State: Appellant contracted with the state to build a segment of highway. Respondent subcontracted with appellant to do certain concrete work on bridges. The state designed cuts through a mountainous area that were too steep and had to be redone for stability. This delayed the project and the availability of concrete, increasing costs of construction. Appellant entered a supplemental agreement with the state that purported to waive claims for extra costs. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court finding that this provision precluded appellant from indemnity reimbursement from the state for extra money paid to respondent because of the delay. Under the waiver provision, the contractor could still claim expenses from conditions not within the knowledge of the parties at execution of the agreement. Unavailability of concrete because of delay was such a condition. The court noted that the judgment against the state was subject to 18-1-404. E.F. Matelich Constr. Co. v. Goodfellow Bros., Inc., 217 M 29, 702 P2d 967, 42 St. Rep. 1004 (1985).

Time for Motion to Amend Motion: Neither a motion to amend findings nor a motion for a new trial may be amended after the time allowed for filing the original motion has passed. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Distinction Between Modification and Clarification of Decree: A final dissolution decree was entered on March 3, 1983. Because of later disputes between the parties concerning the property settlement, the District Court held two hearings and then entered an order: (1) setting March 3, 1983, as the date of valuation for some corporate stock that was awarded to the wife; and (2) giving the wife the right to choose the stock. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that neither action by the District Court was a modification of the dissolution decree in violation of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, but rather each was a clarification of the decree. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Ex Parte Maintenance Order Entered After Final Decree Upheld: It was proper for the District Court to award wife temporary maintenance ex parte even though the effect of the award was amendment of the dissolution decree without holding the hearing required by Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that since the intent of the District Court's earlier order, i.e., that the wife be maintained pending final disposition of the matter, was not being carried out, it was within the District Court's discretion to grant the wife temporary maintenance. In re Marriage of Rohrich, 211 M 130, 683 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 1261 (1984).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Motion to Be Based on Record Alone: A motion to amend the findings and judgment was supported by an affidavit stating that appellant's former attorney was suffering from severe emotional problems during the trial. The motion was properly denied, as it must be based on the record as it existed at the time the findings were made. Matters outside the record may not be considered. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Notice of Appeal Filed — District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Enter Nunc Pro Tunc Order: The findings, conclusions, and decree of dissolution were filed on December 2, 1980. Appellant filed a motion to alter the court's findings and conclusions on December 4, 1980, and filed a notice of appeal on January 7, 1981. On January 20, 1981, the District Court entered amended findings and conclusions and dated them, nunc pro tunc, December 12, 1980. The Supreme Court held that a trial court cannot enter supplemental findings after a notice of appeal has been filed. Bartmess v. Bartmess, 193 M 200, 632 P2d 299, 38 St. Rep. 1097 (1981).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Modification Order: The lower court order modified the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing Notice of Appeal — Findings and Conclusions Improperly Amended: In an action for damages resulting from the defendants' breach of contract by failing to complete the construction of a road for the plaintiff, the trial court committed reversible error in attempting to amend its findings of fact and conclusions of law after the defendants filed a notice of appeal. Since 1954 it has been the rule in Montana that when a notice of appeal is filed, personal and subject matter jurisdiction pass from the District Court to the Supreme Court. When the District Court amended its findings and conclusions after filing of the notice of appeal, it did so without jurisdiction and the amendments were therefore void. Julian v. Buckley, 191 M 487, 625 P2d 526, 38 St. Rep. 128 (1981). See also St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by Amendment After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Perfection of Appeal — Motion to Amend Findings Not Required: When a party's trial memorandum indicated that the opposing party's proposed findings were insufficient in two regards, the failure to move for amendment of the trial court's findings in that regard is not fatal to an appeal raising the same issue. Metcalf v. Metcalf, 183 M 266, 598 P2d 1140 (1979).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made. Thus, the District Court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Distinction — Reopening Case: The time for filing motions under this rule applies when a party desires the findings and conclusions altered, not when a case is reopened to take further testimony. Compton v. Alcorn, 171 M 230, 557 P2d 292 (1976).

Amendment of Findings — New Trial Unnecessary: Where trial court's decision was not supported by findings of fact, proper procedure would have been to proceed under this rule providing that court may amend its findings or make additional findings and amend its decision accordingly. Higdem v. Whitham, 167 M 201, 536 P2d 1185 (1975).

Amendment of Findings and Judgment: A motion to alter, amend, and supplement findings of fact, conclusions of law and the judgment combined with a motion for a new trial, filed on September 28, 1965, was a motion contemplated by this rule and Rule 59(e) and was not governed by the time limits of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Rozan v. District Court, 147 M 532, 416 P2d 19 (1966).

Findings of Court in Error — Railroad's Negligence: Court erred in finding railroad, inter alia, liable for injuries of plaintiff due to its willful, wanton, and reckless negligence. Sztaba v. Great N. Ry., 147 M 185, 411 P2d 379 (1966).

Former Rule 52(d). Time for determining motions

Improper Grant of New Trial After Time to Move for New Trial Expired: A substitute District Court Judge assumed jurisdiction of a marriage dissolution case 1 day after the husband moved for reconsideration or a new trial. The motion for a new trial was granted 76 days later. The wife contended that the court exceeded its jurisdiction because the motion was granted more that 60 days after being filed, in violation of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The husband argued that an equitable exception to the rules should be granted because the presiding judge was substituted between the time when the motion was filed and when it was ruled upon. The Supreme Court declined to make an exception, reiterating that the time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment are mandatory and strictly enforced. The District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering a new trial after the time to rule on the motion had expired, so the order was reversed. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Denial by Failure to Rule on Motion — Not Error When Underlying Issues Upheld on Appeal: When a District Court fails to rule within 45 days as provided in this rule, the motion is considered denied. However, such denial does not constitute error if the same issues raised in the motion were appealed and on appeal the District Court's judgment was held to be correct on such issues. Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986).

Former Rule 53. Masters

Acceptance of Special Master's Report in Partnership Dissolution Case Not Error: The District Court appointed an accountant as a special master to examine and report on a complicated partnership dissolution. One of the partners complained that the District Court erred in adopting the findings of a special master because the special master did not comply with this rule, failing to hold proceedings on the record and preparing findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. The special master complied with the directive of the District Court by holding hearings with the parties, receiving evidence, and issuing a report, and although the findings and conclusions were not in a typical legal format, they were not clearly erroneous, and the District Court was required to accept the special master's report. McCormick v. Brevig, 2004 MT 179, 322 M 112, 96 P3d 697 (2004).

Special Master's Report Properly Considered and Findings Adopted: The Fiedlers stipulated to the procedures to be followed in disposing of partnership property, agreeing that a special master would handle the sale and distribution of the property. On appeal, Joseph Fiedler contended that the special master exceeded the authority granted by the District Court, resulting in prejudicial treatment and improper distribution of the partnership assets. The Supreme Court held that the parties were bound by the stipulation, noting that there had been ample consideration of the special master's report and that the trial court had not misapprehended the effect of the evidence. Absent clear error, the special master's findings of fact were properly accepted. Fiedler v. Fiedler, 266 M 133, 879 P2d 675, 51 St. Rep. 691 (1994).

Former Rule 53(a). Appointment and compensation

Reversal of Hearing Examiner's Findings — Power of Workers' Compensation Court to Order New Trial: The Workers' Compensation Court appointed a hearing examiner to hear evidence in an injury case, but it was for the court to make the final decision. The examiner's findings, conclusions, and proposed decision were submitted to the court for approval. It was within the court's power to order a new trial on the ground that the examiner apparently disregarded or was not aware of evidence crucial to the case. Gould v. Liberty Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 233 M 494, 766 P2d 213, 45 St. Rep. 1671 (1988), distinguishing Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983).

Contract Allowing Costs to Prevailing Party — Contrary Subsequent Agreement: In an action in which each party claimed breach of a contract, where the parties agreed to an order that each would pay one-half of a special master's fee, the order was not in error, even though the contract provided for costs to the prevailing party. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Appointing Ministerial Officer to Assess Damages: The court erred in appointing a ministerial officer to determine the cost of repairs which the court would assess as damages; it makes the award indefinite and delegates an exclusive judicial function. McMahon v. Falls Mobile Home Center, 173 M 68, 566 P2d 75 (1977).

Former Rule 53(c). Powers

Report of Special Master Not Generally Subject to Rules of Evidence: Absent a specific request from a party, a report from a special master is not generally subject to the Montana Rules of Evidence. McCormick v. Brevig, 2007 MT 195, 338 M 370, 169 P3d 352 (2007).

Challenge of Special Master's Findings to Be Timely Made in Written Objection: Under this rule, the trial court shall accept the special master's findings, in nonjury actions, unless they are clearly erroneous. The burden of challenging the special master's findings is on the party objecting. The related burden of establishing that a finding is clearly erroneous is also on the party objecting. The intent of this rule is that all objections to a special master's report must be timely made in a party's written objections. The Supreme Court will no longer entertain objections that are not made to the District Court at that juncture. In re Marriage of Doolittle, 265 M 168, 875 P2d 331, 51 St. Rep. 450 (1994).

Failure to Submit Order of Reference to Master — Harmless Error: When a special master is appointed, the District Court must give the special master an order of reference to follow. In this case, the court failed to submit an order of reference and the special master's proposed decision went directly to the District Court. The court in turn stated its finding that there was an equitable division of marital debts and assets. Although the court erred by not following the procedure outlined in Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., the court found that the special master, as instructed, had equitably divided the marital property and liabilities. The acceptance of the special master's decision did not materially affect the parties' rights and did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Proceedings Supplementary to Execution — Method of Examination: Where referee is appointed to conduct proceedings supplementary to execution in response to an application for an order requiring judgment debtor to appear and answer concerning his property, notice to the judgment debtor need not be given before ordering his examination or the examination of third persons in absence of statutory requirement. The time and place for appearance of the debtor are properly left to be fixed by the referee within bounds of the statute. Bair v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 112 F2d 247 (9th Cir. 1940), affirming Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Bair, 34 F. Supp. 857 (D.C. Mont. 1939).

Books and Accounts Examined: A Writ of Supervisory Control will not be granted to compel the vacation of an order of reference made by the District Court, in an action on a contract in which plaintiff claimed to be entitled to certain commissions, and alleged that an examination of a long and complicated account was necessary to a determination of the cause, before it had ascertained whether in fact a contract existed between the parties, where the return showed that plaintiff had already examined the books of the relator company at its invitation, that some of the books and accounts had been produced and examined before the referee, and where no claim was made that books or accounts not pertinent or material to the inquiry were required to be produced. State ex rel. Butte Land & Inv. Co. v. District Court, 37 M 226, 95 P 843 (1908).

Former Rule 53(d). Proceedings

Failure to Submit Order of Reference to Master — Harmless Error: When a special master is appointed, the District Court must give the special master an order of reference to follow. In this case, the court failed to submit an order of reference and the special master's proposed decision went directly to the District Court. The court in turn stated its finding that there was an equitable division of marital debts and assets. Although the court erred by not following the procedure outlined in Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., the court found that the special master, as instructed, had equitably divided the marital property and liabilities. The acceptance of the special master's decision did not materially affect the parties' rights and did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Former Rule 53(e). Report

Acceptance of Special Master's Report in Partnership Dissolution Case Not Error: The District Court appointed an accountant as a special master to examine and report on a complicated partnership dissolution. One of the partners complained that the District Court erred in adopting the findings of a special master because the special master did not comply with Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., failing to hold proceedings on the record and preparing findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court disagreed. The special master complied with the directive of the District Court by holding hearings with the parties, receiving evidence, and issuing a report, and although the findings and conclusions were not in a typical legal format, they were not clearly erroneous, and the District Court was required to accept the special master's report. McCormick v. Brevig, 2004 MT 179, 322 M 112, 96 P3d 697 (2004).

Failure to File Motion or Affidavit Requesting Custody Modification — Adoption of Special Master Report Improper When Jurisdiction Lacking: Both the father and the mother filed motions for contempt of court, claiming failure by the other party to abide by past court orders regarding custody and visitation. A special master was appointed to make a final report concerning all pending custody, visitation, child support, medical expenses, and contempt issues between the parties. The special master submitted a report recommending changing primary physical custody from the mother to the father, and the report was adopted. However, the only pending issue was the question of contempt. Neither party moved for or filed an affidavit requesting a custody modification. Under Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., a special master's authority is limited to the issues or acts stated in the order of reference to the special master. Thus, the District Court erred in adopting the special master's report recommending a custody change because the court lacked jurisdiction to do so absent a motion or affidavit for modification. In re Marriage of Lundby, 1998 MT 122, 289 M 74, 959 P2d 485, 55 St. Rep. 486 (1998), distinguishing In re Marriage of Stout, 216 M 342, 701 P2d 729 (1985).

Failure to Submit Order of Reference to Master — Harmless Error: When a special master is appointed, the District Court must give the special master an order of reference to follow. In this case, the court failed to submit an order of reference and the special master's proposed decision went directly to the District Court. The court in turn stated its finding that there was an equitable division of marital debts and assets. Although the court erred by not following the procedure outlined in Rule 53, M.R.Civ.P., the court found that the special master, as instructed, had equitably divided the marital property and liabilities. The acceptance of the special master's decision did not materially affect the parties' rights and did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Dreesbach, 265 M 216, 875 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 374 (1994).

Rule Not Permissive — Objection Required: In an attempt to excuse an untimely objection, husband contended that the use of the word "may" in subsection (2) of this rule makes the rule strictly permissive rather than mandatory because it does not say that a party must object or lose the right to contest the findings. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that there can be no other reason for setting a 10-day limit than to require that objecting parties meet that limit or waive their rights to object. "May" refers to the permission given to "any party" to object; however, the objection must be made within 10 days. In re Marriage of Hayes, 259 M 302, 856 P2d 229, 50 St. Rep. 805 (1993).

Master's Report Conclusive Unless Clearly Erroneous: The plaintiff, in a partnership dissolution action, argued that the lower court had erred in finding that a tavern he had given his ex-wife during his divorce was partnership property and that the court erred in placing a $50,000 value on the property. The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to find that the tavern had been originally purchased with partnership funds and therefore remained a partnership asset. The court also ruled that the valuation placed on the property was that arrived at by a court-appointed master and that unless clearly erroneous, the valuation was binding on the lower court. Mehl v. Mehl, 241 M 310, 786 P2d 1173, 47 St. Rep. 292 (1990), followed in Frank v. Birky, 250 M 11, 817 P2d 696, 48 St. Rep. 850 (1991).

Hearing on Report: No hearing is necessary when no objections are made to report by parties after being notified by clerk that special master has filed his report. State ex rel. Ross v. District Court, 150 M 233, 433 P2d 778 (1967).

Advisory Findings: Where, under an order of reference, a referee has no power to decide any of the issues made by the pleadings, his findings are not conclusive on the court, but advisory merely, and it is not necessary for the court to make a formal order setting aside the findings of the referee before proceeding to make findings of its own. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 575, 63 P 375 (1901).

Force of Report Determined by Reference: Where the reference provided that a referee should take testimony, and state a complete account between the parties, but did not authorize him to hear and to determine the issues, his findings cannot be given the effect of a special verdict since the force to be given to the report of a referee depends not only upon the nature of the action, but upon the terms of the order of reference. Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 575, 63 P 375 (1901).

Delay in Reporting — Effect: The failure of a referee to file his report within the statutory time after the closing of the testimony does not invalidate the report or the judgment rendered thereon. Emerson v. Bigler, 21 M 200, 53 P 621 (1898).

Referee Limited by Reference: The terms of an order of reference determine the scope of the referee's authority, and a referee who is appointed to state an account between parties has no authority to determine the whole issue. The court can disregard the findings of the referee, allowing or disallowing specific items in the account. Bradshaw v. Morse, 20 M 214, 50 P 554 (1897). See also Murphy v. Patterson, 24 M 575, 63 P 375 (1901).

Former Rule 54. Judgments — costs

Absence of Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law, and Judgment Precluding Review of DUI Case — Remand: Goldsmith was stopped on the University of Montana-Missoula campus and charged with DUI. His license was taken for failure to submit to breath tests, and Goldsmith petitioned the District Court to have the license returned, but the court deferred to the officer's experience and simply denied the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court made no findings of fact or conclusions of law and did not enter judgment on the petition. Because the Supreme Court did not have sufficient information upon which to base a review, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice and the case was remanded for entry of findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment as required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Goldsmith v. Dept. of Justice, 2007 MT 221, 339 M 65, 168 P3d 1041 (2007).

Former Rule 54(a). Definition — form

Absence of Findings to Support Conclusion of Law — Doctrine of Implied Findings Inapplicable — Reversal: The Supreme Court will not apply the doctrine of implied findings when there is a glaring absence of findings, general or otherwise, to support a given conclusion of fact. Instead, reversal is warranted. Waters v. Blagg, 2008 MT 451, 348 M 48, 202 P3d 110 (2008).

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Award Attorney Fees Beyond Mandatory Time Limit: Final judgment was entered on January 8, 2003, and the next day plaintiffs filed a motion requesting attorney fees. Defendant objected, and the District Court conducted a hearing on the matter on February 25, 2003. The court finally granted the motion on April 3, 2003. Defendant contended on appeal that the award was untimely, and the Supreme Court agreed. Under Rule 59(g),

M.R.Civ.P., a mandatory jurisdictional time limit requires a ruling on a motion for attorney fees within 60 days after final judgment or the motion is considered denied. The District Court had until March 10, 2003, to rule on the motion, but failed to do so. Thus, the court lacked jurisdiction to enter an order granting attorney fees in April, and the award was reversed. Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004).

Multiple Claims — No Appeal Available Absent Final Judgment — Remand: Plaintiff brought several employment claims against the state. The District Court certified judgment for the state on one claim, and plaintiff moved for partial summary judgment on another, but the motion was denied. However, there was no final judgment certified on that claim, so no appeal on that issue was available. Because the motion for partial summary judgment was not final and appealable, the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings on that claim. Losleben v. Oppedahl, 2004 MT 5, 319 M 269, 83 P3d 1271 (2004).

No Final Judgment When Multiple Parties Involved but Summary Judgment Granted to Only One Party — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required: Purchasers of real property sued the seller and the seller's agent over an alleged access problem. The District Court granted summary judgment to the seller, but denied summary judgment for the seller's agent because material facts remained in dispute regarding the agent's disclosure of information pertaining to the access problem. Plaintiffs then appealed the summary judgment that was granted to the seller. The Supreme Court held that the order granting summary judgment to the seller was not a final judgment and thus was not appealable because in an action involving multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but not all of the parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the District Court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. In this case, there was no indication or certification by the District Court that the matter should be certified as final, and absent a final judgment, no appeal was available. The appeal was dismissed without prejudice and remanded for further proceedings. Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001). See also Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268 (1993).

Oral Decree of Dissolution Improperly Granted at Hearing — Continuing Jurisdiction by District Court: At a hearing on the parties' petition for dissolution, the court orally granted the petition but reserved its judgment on the issues of custody, maintenance, and support. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly granted an oral decree of dissolution and was without jurisdiction to do so. The Supreme Court noted that under 40-4-103(4), a decree includes a judgment and that under this rule, a judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties. In this case, because the District Court did not intend its decree to be its final determination, the Supreme Court held that the District Court had continuing jurisdiction over the rights of the parties following the oral decree. In re Marriage of Bukacek, 274 M 98, 907 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 1141 (1995).

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Finality of Judgment — Award of Attorney Fees: A general contractor was awarded damages under a materials and labor bond. Attorney fees, an element of damages provided for in the bond, were to be determined at a later hearing. Because the attorney fees were based on the bond, the subject matter of the action, the judgment was not final and could not be appealed until actual determination of attorney fees. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Judgment Unsupported by Conclusions — Child Support Modification: Where the petitioner sought the modification of a divorce decree in order to increase the amount of child support payments she was receiving from $100 to $210 monthly and appealed the order of the trial court, the Supreme Court did not reach the issues presented by the petitioner because the judgment entered in the case clearly conflicted with the trial court's findings and conclusions. The trial court concluded that the additional $100 be paid to petitioner but the judgment provided that the additional $100 be kept by the respondent in a trust fund. Because the judgment was not supported by the conclusions, the Supreme Court remanded the case and directed the trial court to enter a judgment consistent with the findings and conclusions. Dempster v. McConnell, 191 M 153, 622 P2d 680, 38 St. Rep. 121 (1981).

Failure to Enter Findings or Judgment on Counterclaim: When the trial court did not enter a judgment or make a general finding on defendant's counterclaim alleging defective performance, it cannot be implied that the claim was without merit. The cause was remanded for entry of findings and judgment disposing of the counterclaim. Bauer v. Cook, 182 M 221, 596 P2d 200 (1979).

Action Not "Pending Before the Court": Suits which had been reduced to judgment were not, once time for appeal had passed, "pending before the court" so as to make them amenable to consolidation, and court could not properly consolidate suits with similar suits by other claimants which had not been reduced to judgment. Peavey Co. v. Agri-Services, Inc., 163 M 394, 517 P2d 718 (1974).

Order Equivalent to Final Judgment: An order dismissing a complaint and denying leave to amend was equivalent to final judgment although judgment had not been entered. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Judgment Not Final by Its Terms: A judgment in a water rights case which ordered admeasurement and distribution of water pursuant to prior decree, installation of headgates, and retention of jurisdiction during 1962 irrigation season, stating that the judgment was interlocutory and that final judgment would be made after 1962 season, was not appealable as a final judgment. Whitcomb v. Helena Water Works Co., 142 M 171, 382 P2d 822 (1963).

Dismissal as Judgment: An order dismissing an action is a final judgment from which an appeal can be perfected if the order has the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties. Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Injunction Appealable: A judgment and order granting an injunction in interpleader action was appealable. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Denial of Prohibition Not Judgment: Order of District Court denying petition for Writ of Prohibition to restrain Justice Court from further proceedings in criminal action was not a judgment. State ex rel. Aho v. Justice Court, 131 M 585, 313 P2d 542 (1957).

Accounting Not a Judgment: An order for an accounting is not a judgment since it is not a final determination of the rights of the parties. It is not final, but is a necessary step to determine what if anything the plaintiff has coming from the defendant. Corcoran v. Fousek, 125 M 223, 233 P2d 1040 (1951).

Quashing of Writ Not Judgment: In proceeding for Writ of Certiorari an order sustaining a motion to quash and dismissing the proceeding was a judgment. State ex rel. Walker v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 120 M 413, 187 P2d 1013 (1947), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 246 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Order for Sale of Estate Property: A proceeding for the sale of estate property is a continuous one, and the order of confirmation of the sale is the only judgment or final order in the proceeding finally determining the rights of the parties. In re Ryan's Estate, 114 M 281, 134 P2d 732 (1943).

Findings and Conclusions Not Judgment — Time for Appeal: Findings and conclusions of the court in a case tried as an equity action are not the judgment of the court so that the time for taking a cross-appeal commenced to run from the date of the judgment based on the findings, rather than from the date of the findings and conclusions, which were merely the basis for the judgment. Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

Divorce Denied — Case Still Pending: Although an order dismissing an action is a final judgment, where District Court merely denied a divorce on the ground the plaintiff had not been a resident of the state for 1 year and did not dismiss the case, the action was still pending, there was no final determination of the rights of the parties and no final judgment. Hence, no appeal could be taken and supervisory control was proper to review the action of the trial court. State ex rel. Duckworth v. District Court, 107 M 97, 80 P2d 367 (1938).

"Final Judgment" to Be Determined by Contents: An order of the District Court having the effect of finally determining the rights of the parties is a judgment, irrespective of the title given it; it must be judged by its contents and substance. State ex rel. Meyer v. District Court, 102 M 222, 57 P2d 778 (1936), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Action Still "Pending" if Appealed: While a judgment is defined as the final determination of the rights of the parties to an action or proceeding, the action must be regarded as still pending until final determination on appeal or until the time for appeal has passed. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Order Allowing Attorney's Fees: An order made in an estate matter allowing an attorney's fee for services rendered to a special administrator was not a "judgment" within the meaning of 31-1-110, allowing interest on judgments, such an order being no more than a settlement of one of the matters arising in a probate proceeding preparatory to a final judgment. In re Bielenberg's Estate, 98 M 546, 40 P2d 49 (1935).

Workmen's Compensation Award as Judgment: The final determination by the District Court of the rights of the employer and employee with relation to an award made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, Ch. 96, L. 1915, is a judgment. Paulich v. Republic Coal Co., 97 M 224, 33 P2d 514 (1934).

Denial of Writ of Review Not Judgment: Where a court refused to take jurisdiction of an application for Writ of Review, thus in effect declining to issue process to bring the other party into court, the order in that behalf was not a judgment from which an appeal lay. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235 (1931).

Interlocutory Judgment as Final Judgment: A final judgment is not necessarily the last one in an action; a judgment which is conclusive of any question in a case is final as to that question. Kline v. Murray, 79 M 530, 257 P 465 (1927).

Decree in Equity Similar to Judgment at Law: Decrees in equity are judgments and are, so far as they award a recovery of money, in nowise different from judgments at law. Kline v. Murray, 79 M 530, 257 P 465 (1927); State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909); Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1908), explained in Lewis v. Lewis, 109 M 42, 94 P2d 211 (1939).

Order Overruling Motion to Strike: Where an affidavit has been filed in support of a motion to modify a decree of divorce, an order overruling a motion to strike such affidavit is not an "appealable order" nor a "judgment". Weed v. Weed, 55 M 599, 179 P 827 (1919), distinguished in State ex rel. Monteath v. District Court, 97 M 530, 37 P2d 567 (1934).

Dismissal of Action Not Judgment: An order entered in the minutes of the court sustaining a demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to the complaint, and directing a dismissal of the action is not a judgment. Pentz v. Corscadden, 49 M 581, 144 P 157 (1914), distinguished in Kelly v. Harris, 158 F. Supp. 243 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Decree in Equity as Final Decree: If, after a decree in equity has been entered, no further questions could come before the court except such as are necessary for carrying the decree into effect, it is final. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899); Arnold v. Sinclair, 11 M 556, 29 P 340 (1892).

Judgment Declaring a Trust as Final: A judgment declaring a trust and removing the trustee is a final order, notwithstanding that it directs the trustee to file an inventory and an account of all property received by him as trustee. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899).

Judgment on the Pleadings: An order of court granting a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings is a judgment in defendant's favor. Whitbeck v. Mont. Cent. Ry. & Great N. Ry., 21 M 102, 52 P 1098 (1898).

Former Rule 54(b). Judgment upon multiple claims or involving multiple parties

Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment Considered Denied if Not Ruled on Within Sixty Days: Pursuant to Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to alter or amend a judgment is considered to be denied by operation of law if the motion is not ruled upon within 60 days of filing. Meloy v. Speedy Auto Glass, Inc., 2008 MT 122, 342 M 530, 182 P3d 741 (2008).

Inability to Apply "Capable of Repetition Yet Evading Review" Exception to Mootness Doctrine Based on Failure to Preserve Appeal: The Billings Gazette requested documents related to the conduct of certain Billings school teachers. The teachers' union and the teachers declined to produce the documents based on the teachers' privacy. The District Court decided that as public employees, the teachers had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the information and ordered the school district to release the documents. The school district complied, but the teachers' union and the teachers appealed the order. The Supreme Court found that because the documents in question had already been released and the teachers could not be restored to their original position, the issue was moot. Nevertheless, the teachers' union and the teachers requested that the Supreme Court address the merits of the issue under the exception to the mootness doctrine for constitutional questions that are capable of recurring but which could evade effective review. Because the inquiry of whether the expectation of privacy clearly exceeds the merits of public disclosure must be undertaken in the context of the facts of each case, it could not be said that there was a reasonable expectation that the same action comprising the same factual scenario would arise again, so the Supreme Court declined to apply the exception. In addition, the teachers failed to use applicable civil procedures to preserve their ability to appeal, so the Supreme Court declined to address the merits of the privacy issue. In re Petition of Billings High School District No. 2 v. Billings Gazette, 2006 MT 329, 335 M 94, 149 P3d 565 (2006), following Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996).

District Court Decision Regarding Constitutionality of One Issue Precluding Consideration of Other Constitutional Questions — Certification to Supreme Court Proper: Baumgardner raised numerous issues concerning the constitutionality of 2001 amendments to the Public Employees' Retirement System. The District Court decided that the amendments were an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power but did not consider other issues related to the amendments. The Public Employees' Retirement Board moved to certify the judgment as final, and the motion was granted. On appeal, Baumgardner contended that certification was improper because the District Court did not resolve all of the pending issues. The Supreme Court disagreed. Once the amendments were declared unconstitutional on the delegation question, there was no need for the District Court to consider other challenges to the constitutionality of the amendments, so certification was appropriate, and the case was properly submitted to the Supreme Court. Baumgardner v. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 2005 MT 199, 328 M 179, 119 P3d 77 (2005).

Improper Certification of Partial Summary Judgment as Final Order When Issues Still Pending — No Supreme Court Jurisdiction to Hear Appeal: In order for an order to be properly certified to the Supreme Court, the criteria in Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980), and Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101 (1995), must be met, including a clear articulation of the reasons and factors underlying the decision for certification, so the appellate court has some basis for distinguishing between well-grounded orders that have considered all the relevant factors and mere boilerplate approval unsupported by facts of legal analysis. Here, the certification order failed to address numerous claims that were not clearly resolved in District Court and that were still technically pending. Thus, the case was not ready for appellate review, and because the District Court failed to enumerate the factors in Roy and Weinstein, the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The certification order was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Kohler v. Croonenberghs, 2003 MT 260, 317 M 413, 77 P3d 531 (2003), followed in In re Marriage of Armstrong, 2003 MT 277, 317 M 503, 78 P3d 1203 (2003), and Monroe v. Cogswell Agency, 2006 MT 319, 335 M 61, 152 P3d 690 (2006).

No Supreme Court Jurisdiction to Address Certified Question Absent Final Judgment in District Court — Use of Rule to Gain Advisory Opinion Improper: Following a prior remand (see Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2000 MT 206, 300 M 530, 6 P3d 965 (2000)), a question arose regarding whether the previous appeal resolved issues related to viability of the parties' counterclaims. Plaintiff therefore requested that the District Court certify the question to the Supreme Court to clarify what the original order meant and to save the trial court and the parties the time and effort of misreading the decision and going through a trial process that might ultimately be ruled unnecessary on subsequent appeal. The motion was granted, but the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal with prejudice. Courts should not certify difficult issues to the Supreme Court in order to obtain guidance for the remainder of the case because the purpose of certification is not to provide an advisory opinion to the District Court. Use of the certification process was improper in this case because there were neither multiple claims nor multiple parties. The District Court abused its discretion in certifying its order as final, so there was no final judgment for the Supreme Court to consider. Because the District Court abused its discretion, the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, so the case was remanded for adjudication of the counterclaims. Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2003 MT 56, 314 M 378, 66 P3d 294 (2003), followed in Satterlee v. Lumberman's Mut. Cas. Co., 2007 MT 325, 340 M 176, 178 P3d 689 (2007). See also Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

No Final Judgment When Multiple Parties Involved but Summary Judgment Granted to Only One Party — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required: Purchasers of real property sued the seller and the seller's agent over an alleged access problem. The District Court granted summary judgment to the seller, but denied summary judgment for the seller's agent because material facts remained in dispute regarding the agent's disclosure of information pertaining to the access problem. Plaintiffs then appealed the summary judgment that was granted to the seller. The Supreme Court held that the order granting summary judgment to the seller was not a final judgment and thus was not appealable because in an action involving multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but not all of the parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the District Court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. In this case, there was no indication or certification by the District Court that the matter should be certified as final, and absent a final judgment, no appeal was available. The appeal was dismissed without prejudice and remanded for further proceedings. Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001). See also Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268 (1993).

Failure to Participate in Water Court Hearing — Attorney Fees Assessed as Sanction for Defense of Unreasonable Appeal: Despite warnings from the Water Court of the consequences, plaintiffs chose not to participate in a Water Court hearing, thereby creating no record of their issues and preserving none of their arguments for appeal. They appealed anyway, contending that the Water Court's findings were in error. The Supreme Court first found that the findings and conclusions were correct, then sanctioned plaintiffs pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P.

(now superseded), finding that defendant was entitled to attorney fees incurred in defending an appeal that was taken without any substantial or reasonable grounds, that delayed the case, and that wasted the resources of defendant and the Supreme Court. Swinger v. Collins, 1999 MT 202, 295 M 447, 984 P2d 151, 56 St. Rep. 787 (1999).

Party Voluntarily Intervening Subject to Adverse Judgment: Double AA Corporation sought specific performance to require Newland & Company, a trust company, to convey land that it held in trust and had entered into a contract to sell to Double AA. Sievers intervened in the case, arguing that specific judgment should not be granted on the basis that he had purchased part of the remainder interest in the trust property and had a first option to purchase the property based on the remainder interest. Sievers sought a ruling from the lower court that he had the first option to purchase the property. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in ruling that Sievers did not have a first right of purchase even though not all of the remainder interest holders had intervened in the case to protect their interests. Even though they had not intervened, the remainder interest holders were aligned with the trustee, and any decision that Sievers might have obtained that was adverse to the trustee would also have been adverse to them. Double AA Corp. v. Newland & Co., 273 M 486, 905 P2d 138, 52 St. Rep. 1073 (1995), distinguishing Warnack v. Coneen Fam. Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715 (1994).

Claims Arising From Same Facts Treated as Single Claim — Roy Factors Not Satisfied — Factors Inappropriately Considered for Certification: Weinstein sued the university for breach of contract following his dismissal as head of the Mansfield Center. Weinstein included in his complaint several claims based on theories arising from the same fact situation. Two of the defendants were dismissed. Weinstein sought and received certification pursuant to this rule from the District Court. The Supreme Court reiterated the factors listed in Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980), to be considered in determining whether the District Court abused its discretion in granting certification. Citing cases decided under Rule 54(b) of the federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Supreme Court held that because all of Weinstein's claims arose from a single factual situation, the case constituted a partial adjudication of a single claim and because the case against the remaining defendant arose from the same facts as the cases against the two dismissed defendants, the Supreme Court was in reality being asked to decide a case remaining in the District Court. The Supreme Court found that these factors mitigated against granting certification under this rule. The Supreme Court also held that other reasons relied upon by the District Court for certification, such as to control further litigation, to enhance settlement, and because an appeal was likely, were insufficient and inappropriate reasons to grant certification. For all of these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in granting certification, and the Supreme Court was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101, 52 St. Rep. 578 (1995).

Multiple Claims and Multiple Parties — Express Direction for Entry of Judgment Required for Final Judgment: In an action involving multiple claims and multiple parties, a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties may be entered only upon an express determination by the court that there is no just reason for delay and upon an express direction for entry of judgment. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993), followed in Trombley v. Mann, 2001 MT 154, 306 M 80, 30 P3d 355 (2001).

Direct Appeal of Venue Question — Certification of Judgment Not Required: Following summary dismissal of all Missoula defendants, the trial court granted the motion of defendant Kalispell doctor for a change of venue to Flathead County, certifying the summary judgment order as final pursuant to this rule. When the venue question was appealed to the Supreme Court, the doctor asserted that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to determine whether venue was properly transferred because the order under this rule did not mention the order changing venue. However, under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), direct appeal of an order changing or refusing to change venue is allowed, and as such, certification under this rule is not required. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Offset of Tort Judgment With Amount Owed on Contract Underlying Tort as Within Equity Power of Court: Defendant fraudulently induced plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property. The District Court required her to file an accounting reflecting the principal balance due her from each of the plaintiffs for property purchased under the contracts for deed, and the court then offset and credited the amounts due plaintiffs from the judgment against the balance of the principal owed by plaintiffs under the contracts for deed. Although the contracts themselves were not at issue, the respective obligations of the parties arose from the same transaction and damages were related to the value of the premises and the purchase price, which was the basis of the principal under the contract.

It was within the equity power of the court to allow a setoff of debts under these circumstances because that power exists independent of statute when grounds for equitable interposition are shown, such as fraud or insolvency. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993). On remand, the District Court found that although one cotenant had quitclaimed all interest in the property to the plaintiff cotenant, the right to personal damages did not pass with the transfer of the property. Clarifying Dew, supra, the Supreme Court noted that the discussion regarding the equity power of the District Court was confined solely to its ability to set off the principal balances on the contracts for deed against the damages plaintiff sustained. As such, the District Court was not invested with the broad equitable power to award plaintiff 100% of the personal damages attributable to fraud when he was not entitled to such an award by law. Because the underlying action was for personal damages, not property damages, the court properly determined that plaintiff was entitled to only 50% of the personal damages arising from defendant's fraud. However, the court miscalculated the amount of accrued interest owing, so the case was remanded for a recalculation of damages. Dew v. Dower, 269 M 286, 888 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1388 (1994). See also S. Surety Co. of N.Y. v. Maney, 121 P2d 295 (Okla. 1941).

Theories of Recovery Limited Through Instructions Following Filing of Amended Complaint — No Prejudice: An original complaint alleged theories of bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Three weeks prior to trial, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that defendant asserted changed the theories to equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Prior to settling of instructions, the District Court, on its own motion, dismissed plaintiff's claims of equitable estoppel, fraud, bad faith, and punitive damages and allowed the case to go forward on theories of constructive fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The action by the court in limiting the theories of recovery through instructions had the effect of removing much of defendant's claimed prejudice through the allowance of the amended complaint. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Setoff or Counterclaim Pleaded — One Judgment Required: When a setoff or counterclaim is pleaded, it becomes part of a single controversy between the parties, requiring only one verdict and one judgment according to the facts. Therefore, the grant of two separate judgments arising out of the same general issue constituted an improper procedure. (See 20 Am. Jur. 2d Counterclaim, Recoupment, and Setoff 157.) Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989), following Stensvad v. Miners & Merchants Bank of Roundup, 196 M 193, 640 P2d 1303 (1982).

Water Right of State in Bean Lake — Drainage Adjudication Process — Appealability of State's Claim Under Finality of Decision Rules: As part of the statewide water rights adjudication process, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks filed a claim for a pre-1973 "use" water right appropriation for recreation, fishing, and wildlife purposes in the waters of Bean Lake. In recent consolidated cases relating to drainage areas, the Supreme Court dismissed appeals because a certificate had not been obtained under this rule. In effect, the court held that the causes were not final for purposes of appeal. In this case, the court accepted jurisdiction under its power of general supervisory control over the Water Courts. The Department had filed 15 to 17 similar claims in various drainages, the same issues would recur, and a decision in the present case would help speed the water adjudication process. In re Water Rights in Dearborn Drainage, 234 M 331, 766 P2d 228, 45 St. Rep. 1948 (1988).

Determination of Final Water Rights Judgment Under Rule — Appeal From Water Court: This rule provides for and allows a water right claimant to seek and procure from the Water Court an express direction for the entry of a final judgment as to his claim upon the express determination of the Water Court that there is no just reason for delay. Such action under this rule constitutes a final judgment within the meaning of 85-2-235, which provides for appeals from the Water Court. In re Adjudication of Sage Creek Water Rights, 234 M 243, 763 P2d 644, 45 St. Rep. 1876 (1988).

Agency Question of Fact: In a zoning variance controversy, plaintiffs claimed a city-county planning board and city board of adjustments granted the variance without proper notice, without a hearing, and without considering legal requirements. The District Court dismissed the claim as to defendant and granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed, saying the plaintiff may be able to show the planning board is directly liable to plaintiffs because of its acts through its agent. Borrowing on California precedent, the court held that allegations of agency are questions of fact and should not be decided on a motion for summary judgment. The court noted that in dealing with government entities this is not always true because a principal cannot delegate authority it does not possess. This can be determined by establishing the authority which, as a matter of public record, citizens are charged with knowing. The court also noted that while a government principal's authority may be limited by law, the principal may exceed that authority in its day-to-day activity, thereby existing in fact although precluded by law. The dismissal and summary judgment were reversed. Stillman v. Fergus County, 220 M 315, 715 P2d 43, 43 St. Rep. 396 (1986).

Certification Requirements Not Mere Formality: Plaintiff, appearing pro se, failed to seek or obtain certification of a matter for appeal. The mere statement of the judge in a partial final judgment that "there is no just reason for delay in entering this judgment as a final judgment" is not sufficient to meet the certification requirement. The Rule 54(b) certification requirement is not a mere formality but is a necessary and valuable tool for preventing piecemeal litigation and waste of the resources of both the litigants and the courts. McDonald v. Unirex, Inc., 221 M 153, 721 P2d 302, 43 St. Rep. 330 (1986), followed in Milk River Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Big Hook Land & Cattle Co., 239 M 496, 783 P2d 359, 46 St. Rep. 1861 (1989).

Order Not Appealable When All Issues Not Decided and Undecided Issues Not Certified: An order of the District Court, not certified under Rule 54, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), entering summary judgment for one party, ruling that party entitled to attorney fees, and ordering a later hearing for the purpose of determining the amount of the attorney fees, was not a final order for the purpose of filing an appeal. Boles v. Ler, 213 M 266, 692 P2d 1, 41 St. Rep. 2106 (1984).

Appeal of Water Court Order Regarding Two Parties Before Final Decree — Rule 54(b) Certification of Tort Issues: A Water Court order awarding priorities between two parties is a final and appealable order even though the basin-wide adjudication has not been completed. It is necessary that their respective irrigation water allowances be determined without waiting for the basin-wide decree before appealing to the Supreme Court. The fact that trespass and damage claims have not yet been decided does not deprive the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The Water Court properly entered a Rule 54(b) certification. The determination of these claims is beyond the jurisdiction of the Water Court, but they cannot be decided until the water rights are resolved. Hill v. Merrimac Cattle Co., Inc., 211 M 479, 687 P2d 59, 41 St. Rep. 1504 (1984).

Damage Award to Appropriator of Costs of Lawsuit Filed to Enforce Rights: In a water rights dispute, upstream junior appropriators damaged downstream senior appropriators' headgate. A lawsuit over their respective water rights ensued, and the senior appropriators were successful both at trial and on appeal. At trial, the jury awarded the senior appropriators their court costs and attorney fees as damages. The Supreme Court refused to overturn the award, ruling that the costs of the lawsuit were consequential to the interference with the headgate and not so remote as to preclude recovery. Cate v. Hargrave, 209 M 265, 680 P2d 952, 41 St. Rep. 697 (1984).

Permissible to Provide Reasons for Certification After Appeal Filed: The failure of the District Court to provide its reasons for a proper certification until after the notice of appeal was filed does not render the certification defective as long as the guidelines of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., have been complied with. Klaudt v. Flink, 202 M 247, 658 P2d 1065, 40 St. Rep. 64 (1983), overruling Churchhill v. Holly Sugar Corp., 192 M 533, 629 P2d 758, 38 St. Rep. 860 (1981).

Determination and Certification Necessary: Absent (1) an express determination that there is no just reason for delay and (2) certification as final judgment, an order adjudicating the rights and liabilities of less than all parties is not appealable. Benders v. Stratton, 202 M 150, 655 P2d 989 (1982); followed in Granite Ditch Co. v. Anderson, 204 M 10, 662 P2d 1312, 40 St. Rep. 630 (1983).

Dismissal of Claims Without Certification Held Not Appealable — Multiple Parties: Where the claims of two of the three plaintiffs for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and trespass were dismissed for failure to state a claim, the dismissal was not appealable without certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. In Tobacco River Lumber, Inc. v. Yoppe, 176 M 267, 577 P2d 855 (1978), the Supreme Court held the dismissal of the claims of one of several parties to be appealable because the practical effect of the dismissal was to leave the party without judicial relief. However, in the instant case the remaining plaintiff sought the same relief as those whose claims were dismissed. The order dismissing those claims must therefore be considered interlocutory and not final. Benders v. Stratton, 202 M 150, 655 P2d 989, 39 St. Rep. 2389 (1982).

Order Denying Motion for Summary Judgment Not Appealable Notwithstanding Certification: The defendant appealed the District Court's denial of a motion for summary judgment after the District Court certified its order under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court held that the order was not appealable notwithstanding the District Court's certification because under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), an order denying a motion for summary judgment is an interlocutory order, which fact cannot be changed by certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Order Not Appealable When Certified Judgment Never Docketed in Record: The District Court made an express order that the Clerk of Court enter final judgment in a case certified for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., but a final judgment was never docketed in the record. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide an appeal. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Award of Attorney Fees Not Separate Claim: A general contractor was awarded damages under a materials and labor bond. Attorney fees, an element of damages provided for in the bond, were to be determined at a later hearing. Because the attorney fees were based on the bond, the subject matter of the action, multiple claims were not involved. The judgment was not final and could not be appealed until actual determination of attorney fees. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Denial of Certification of Partial Summary Judgment Not Subject to Appeal: If a trial court abuses its discretion in certifying an order of partial summary judgment as final under this rule, an appellate court is without jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981), followed in Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101, 52 St. Rep. 578 (1995). See also Taylor Rental Corp. v. Ted Godwin Leasing, Inc., 199 M 280, 648 P2d 1168, 39 St. Rep. 1358 (1982).

Certification of Judgment as Final — Factors Considered by Appellate Court: An appellate court will normally consider the following factors when considering a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification: (1) the relationship between the adjudicated and unadjudicated claims; (2) the possibility that the need for review may be mooted by future developments in the District Court; (3) the possibility that the reviewing court might be obliged to consider the same issue a second time; (4) the presence or absence of a counterclaim that could result in a setoff against the judgment sought to be made final; and (5) miscellaneous factors such as delay, economic and solvency considerations, shortening the time of trial, triviality of competing claims, expenses, and the like. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981); Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980); followed, in part, in Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982), and followed in Satterlee v. Lumberman's Mut. Cas. Co., 2007 MT 325, 340 M 176, 178 P3d 689 (2007).

Certification of Partial Summary Judgment — Judicial Policy: When reasonable alternatives are available, the Supreme Court will not allow a case to be fragmented to allow successive appeals by a process of lower court grants of partial summary judgment followed by certification of finality. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981).

Vacation of Partial Summary Judgment — Certification as Abuse of Discretion: On appeal from partial summary judgment disallowing one of three items of damages and certified as final below, determination of the appeal would finally settle the matter and might reduce trial time, but the trial court abused its discretion in certifying the issues for appeal and the partial summary judgment was vacated without prejudice. The delay caused by the appeal would result in undesirable consequences, such as added costs, unwarranted delay, and additional attorney fees. Further, the issue on appeal might be mooted by the final decision of the District Court, as well as by a finding of no liability for that item of damages; and reasonable alternatives to fragmented appeal were available, such as a bifurcated trial, first on liability, then on damages. Reidy v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 196 M 127, 637 P2d 1196, 38 St. Rep. 2188 (1981).

Certified Appeal Allowed Despite Failure to Comply With Procedural Rules: A seller was granted summary judgment against a buyer. Several months later, the court amended its order nunc pro tunc and certified the case for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Despite failure to comply with the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded), the Supreme Court chose to hear the appeal under former Rules 3, 10, and 21, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Multiple Claims and Parties — Certification Required for Appeal Because of Impleader of Third Party: Where the plaintiff corporation brought an action against the defendant insurance company to collect an account and the defendant impleaded a third-party defendant, a final judgment against the defendant insurance company was interlocutory in nature and could not be appealed absent an express determination by the court that there was no just reason for delay. Rule 14, M.R.Civ.P., expressly provides that an entry of judgment upon either the original claim or the third-party claim must comply with Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Because the court did not make the express determination required, the appeal is premature. Pioneer Concrete & Fuel, Inc. v. Apex Constr., Inc., 190 M 229, 620 P2d 854, 37 St. Rep. 2023 (1980).

Differing Considerations for Summary Judgment and Final Judgment: The considerations which result in a grant of summary judgment are not the same considerations relevant to an order of final certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Under summary judgment procedure, the essential inquiry is whether material facts are disputed. Under Rule 54(b) procedure, the inquiry is whether, after balancing the competing factors, finality of judgment should be ordered to advance the interests of sound judicial administration and public policy. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Improper Where Rights of All Parties Have Not Been Adjudicated: An order granting summary judgment is not final where the rights and liabilities of all parties have not been adjudicated. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Certification of Judgment as Final — Discretion of Judge — Findings to Be Set Out: It is within the discretion of the District Court to grant or deny a request to certify a judgment as final. The decision should not be entered lightly. The District Court must find that there is "no just reason for delay" and the factors underlying that decision must be clearly articulated. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980), followed in Monroe v. Cogswell Agency, 2006 MT 319, 335 M 61, 152 P3d 690 (2006). See also Weinstein v. Univ. of Mont., 271 M 435, 898 P2d 101, 52 St. Rep. 578 (1995).

Certification of Judgment as Final — Guidelines: The guiding principles for a Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification may be summarized as follows: (1) the burden is on the party seeking final certification to convince the District Court that the case is the "infrequent harsh case" meriting a favorable exercise of discretion; (2) the District Court must balance the competing factors present in the case to determine if it is in the interest of sound judicial administration and public policy to certify the judgment as final; and (3) the District Court must marshal and articulate the factors upon which it relied in granting certification so that prompt and effective review can be facilitated. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980), followed in Monroe v. Cogswell Agency, 2006 MT 319, 335 M 61, 152 P3d 690 (2006).

Summary Judgment Against Less Than All Defendants — Appeal Improper: A summary judgment in favor of one of two defendants was not a final order under the provisions of Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., and in the absence of compliance with the certification requirements of that rule the summary judgment was not appealable. Roy v. Neibauer, 188 M 81, 610 P2d 1185 (1980).

Hazard Insurance — No Issue: Although the plaintiffs claimed that defendant insurers were negligent regarding the issuance and delivery of a hazard insurance policy, the policy issued conforms to the contract it was extended to cover and its lack of delivery was not shown to affect recovery, thus the defendant insurers were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Dooling v. Perry, 183 M 451, 600 P2d 799 (1979).

Interlocutory Judgment: When a District Court does not direct entry of a final judgment on the claim of invalidity of a marriage or make an express determination that there is no just reason for delay in entering final judgment on that claim, there is no right of immediate appeal because the judgment is interlocutory and may be changed at any time prior to entry of a final judgment adjudicating all the claims, rights, and liabilities of all the parties. Adams v. Adams, 183 M 26, 598 P2d 197 (1979).

Requirements of Rule: Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., requires the trial court to determine that there is no just reason for delay and to direct the entry of judgment before judgment will be final as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties in a multiple claim or multiple party action. Krusemark v. Hansen, 182 M 291, 597 P2d 48 (1979).

Failure to Enter Findings or Judgment on Counterclaim: When the trial court did not enter a judgment or make a general finding on defendant's counterclaim alleging defective performance, it cannot be implied that the claim was without merit. The cause was remanded for entry of findings and judgment disposing of the counterclaim. Bauer v. Cook, 182 M 221, 596 P2d 200 (1979).

Lack of Jurisdiction for Appeal: When multiple claims for relief or multiple parties are involved in an action, the court may direct the entry of a final judgment as to one or more but fewer than all of the claims or parties only upon an express direction for the entry of judgment. The District Court did not make an express determination that there was no just reason for delay and an express direction for the entry of a final judgment in compliance with Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. For this reason the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to entertain on appeal. Knoepke v. SW. Ry., 182 M 74, 595 P2d 376 (1979).

Immediate Appeal From Partial Judgment: This is a proper case for a Writ of Supervisory Control because relator wife has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by appeal. Neither 40-4-108 nor former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provides for immediate appeal from a partial judgment. Instead, the right of immediate appeal from a judgment on part but not all of the claims for relief in a single action is governed by Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. State ex rel. Marlenee v. District Court, 181 M 59, 592 P2d 153 (1979).

Amendment to Include Codefendant: Case would be remanded to District Court for purpose of amending, by incorporating appropriate terms, judgment which omitted to name defaulting codefendant who was jointly and severally liable on obligation. White v. Nollmeyer, 151 M 387, 443 P2d 873 (1968).

Writ of Supervisory Control Denied: When appeal is available from a summary judgment, the Supreme Court will not issue a Writ of Supervisory Control without extremely extenuating circumstances. Circumstances here were insufficient. State ex rel. Kober v. District Court, 147 M 116, 410 P2d 945 (1966).

Optional Claims May Be Dispensed With: Holder of note secured by contracts of unconditional guarantee and real estate mortgage may plead alternatively as to theory of recovery with court having authority under the rules to dispense with any claim left unadjudicated. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation v. Cowgill, 143 M 98, 387 P2d 435 (1963).

Promissory Note — Judgment Not Bar to Action: A judgment against one of several makers of a promissory note, jointly and severally liable thereon, does not merge the instrument so as to bar an action thereon against the others. Lepper v. Jackson, 102 M 259, 57 P2d 768 (1936).

Joint and Several Liability: Where several defendants are jointly and severally liable, the District Court may enter judgment against one or more of them, letting the action proceed against the others. Stauffacher v. Great Falls Pub. Serv. Co., 99 M 324, 43 P2d 647 (1935); State ex rel. Stiefel v. District Court, 37 M 298, 96 P 337 (1908).

Dismissal of Joint Tortfeasor — Modification of Common-Law Rule: The common-law rule that a joint judgment against two alleged tortfeasors may not be reversed as to one and permitted to stand as against the other, has been modified, and the Supreme Court will in a negligence action where the evidence does not justify a verdict against one defendant reverse the judgment with direction to dismiss the action as to him, and affirm it as to the other shown to have been negligent. Mellon v. Kelly, 99 M 10, 41 P2d 49 (1935).

Employer and Employee — Concurrent Negligence: The plaintiff, in an action against a railway company and one of its employees for injuries caused to him in being ejected from a freight train by one of the company's brakemen, has the option to proceed against either or both of the defendants by whose concurrent negligence the wrong was done. Golden v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 435, 104 P 549 (1909). See also Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915); Grorud v. Lossl, 48 M 274, 136 P 1069 (1913); Verlinda v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 44 M 223, 119 P 573 (1911); Knuckey v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 314, 109 P 979 (1910); Rand v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 398, 107 P 87 (1910).

Assignment to Partners — Partners Dismissed: Where several parties are sued as assignees for the benefit of creditors, and a partnership is alleged to exist between them, but it appears from the findings that the assignment was not to the firm but to one of the partners individually, a judgment may be properly entered against the individual partner and the action dismissed as to the others. Knatz v. Wise, 16 M 555, 41 P 710 (1895). See Logan v. Billings & N. Ry., 40 M 467, 107 P 415 (1910).

No Authority of Court to Order Refund of Taxes Paid Without Protest Absent Legislative Authorization: The District Court ordered that numerous parties who properly petitioned to be excluded from an irrigation district should be reimbursed for back taxes paid by the parties as of the date of their petitions. The irrigation district appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Tax refunds are a matter of legislative discretion, and absent specific legislative authorization, a court has no power to refund taxes paid without protest. RSG Holdings v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 214, 322 M 369, 96 P3d 1131 (2004), followed in Petitioners I-549 v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2005 MT 100, 326 M 527, 111 P3d 664 (2005). See also Geil v. Missoula Irrigation District, 2004 MT 217, 322 M 388, 96 P3d 1127 (2004).

Guardian Entitled to Award of Attorney Fees for Appointment as Guardian — Award in Nonadversarial Proceeding Held Not to Violate General Rule for Award of Attorney Fees — Award Approved Though Not Requested in Original Petition for Appointment: Appellant contested the payment of $30,000 in legal fees from the estate of a ward to the attorney representing the guardian appointed by the District Court, arguing that the general rule is that attorney fees are not payable to a prevailing party without special statutory provisions to the contrary and that the original petition for appointment of the guardian did not include a request for payment of attorney fees. The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the District Court awarding the fees. The Supreme Court pointed out, citing opinions from other states, that the general rule regarding payment of fees applies to adversarial proceedings and that the appointment of a guardian is not an adversarial proceeding but is a proceeding in rem to promote the bests interests of the ward and to protect the ward's estate. The Supreme Court also held that under this rule, the District Court may grant relief to which a party is entitled regardless of whether the party has specifically requested the relief granted. The Supreme Court noted that the payment of the guardian's legal fees by the estate of the ward is relief to which the guardian would be entitled under 72-5-428(1) if the petition for appointment was brought in good faith and the appointment was in the bests interests of the ward. In re Estate of Bayers, 1999 MT 154, 295 M 89, 983 P2d 339, 56 St. Rep. 607 (1999).

Appeal of Judgment Involving Declaratory Judgment and Injunction: Defendant argued that an appeal that concerned declaratory judgment was premature because plaintiff did not seek Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., certification of the court's order. However, because plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment involved both the declaratory judgment and an injunction issue and because plaintiff validly exercised the right to appeal the court's denial of the request for an injunction, the appeal was not considered premature and the entire case was subject to review by the Supreme Court. Hennen v. Omega Enterprises, Inc., 264 M 505, 872 P2d 797, 51 St. Rep. 369 (1994).

Judgment to Grant Relief Entitled: The District Court did not err in awarding damages in excess of those requested in a complaint and petition for supplemental relief. Petitioner's failure to request specific money damages or coercive damages did not hinder the court's ability to order the relief necessary to effectuate its judgment. Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Trial Necessary on Facts in Support of Relief Not Specifically Requested: This rule allows a court to grant relief to which a party is entitled even if such relief was not demanded in the party's pleading. However, the court may not grant relief not specifically requested when the facts and issues necessary to support that relief have not been tried and proved at trial. Therefore, the District Court's order to proceed with a sale of trust property was in error when the validity of the sale agreement and the equitable question of specific performance were never properly raised and litigated. In re George Trust, 253 M 341, 834 P2d 1378, 49 St. Rep. 424 (1992), following the rationale in Smith v. Zepp, 173 M 358, 567 P2d 923 (1977).

Theories of Recovery Limited Through Instructions Following Filing of Amended Complaint — No Prejudice: An original complaint alleged theories of bad faith, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and fraud. Three weeks prior to trial, plaintiff filed an amended complaint that defendant asserted changed the theories to equitable estoppel, fraud, and bad faith. Prior to settling of instructions, the District Court, on its own motion, dismissed plaintiff's claims of equitable estoppel, fraud, bad faith, and punitive damages and allowed the case to go forward on theories of constructive fraud and negligent misrepresentation. The action by the court in limiting the theories of recovery through instructions had the effect of removing much of defendant's claimed prejudice through the allowance of the amended complaint. Phil-Co Feeds, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank in Havre, 238 M 414, 777 P2d 1306, 46 St. Rep. 1380 (1989).

Judge's Discretion to Award Maintenance When Not Specifically Requested: A court's discretion to award relief to which a party is entitled, even if it is not requested, under this rule is subject in dissolution proceedings to established statutory dissolution guidelines. Under 40-4-203, a court is required to make specific findings regarding maintenance. The findings are subject to review. In re Marriage of Hughes, 236 M 427, 770 P2d 499, 46 St. Rep. 482 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Haney, 267 M 107, 882 P2d 497, 51 St. Rep. 981 (1994).

Retroactive Child Support: Once the issue of child support is before the trial court, pursuant to the parties' pleadings, the court has jurisdiction to award retroactive child support from the time of separation and is not limited to the child support prayed for or agreed to by the parties. In re Marriage of Di Pasquale, 220 M 497, 716 P2d 223, 43 St. Rep. 557 (1986).

Effect of Statement of Damages on Amount Recoverable for Federal Jurisdiction Purposes: This case was removed to federal court but remanded to the Montana District Court, based on jurisdictional amounts. While discussing the options a plaintiff has with regard to the specification of damages for purposes of removal to federal court in light of the provisions of 25-4-311, 25-4-313, and 25-4-314, the federal District Court discussed Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. The court said it did not interpret the rule, which provides that the statement of claims is not a limitation on what the plaintiff ultimately may recover, as imposing on a plaintiff's option of avoiding federal jurisdiction by seeking less than the requisite amount for diversity jurisdiction. Rollwitz v. Burlington N., 507 F. Supp. 582, 38 St. Rep. 264 (D.C. Mont., 1981).

Hazard Insurance — No Issue: Although the plaintiffs claimed that defendant insurers were negligent regarding the issuance and delivery of a hazard insurance policy, the policy issued conforms to the contract it was extended to cover and its lack of delivery was not shown to affect recovery, thus the defendant insurers were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Dooling v. Perry, 183 M 451, 600 P2d 799 (1979).

Attorney Fee — Quiet Title Action: Even though defendant in a quiet title action for a tax deed had not prayed for a reasonable attorney fee she should have been allowed one as the successful party. Plaintiff was not entitled to attorney fees as "successful party" because that designation was intended to mean the party obtaining the tax deed and not the party receiving reimbursement for taxes, penalties, and interest paid. Niles v. Carbon County, 174 M 20, 568 P2d 524 (1977).

Forfeiture Improper — Grant of Relief Not Requested: Interpreting the forfeiture clause of a mine sale contract against plaintiffs, the parties for whose benefit the provision was created, it can hardly be said that the contract requires forfeiture for failure to produce 300 yards of material each working day. The appropriate remedy is an award of damages for breach of contract, even though not requested in the pleadings. Smith v. Zepp, 173 M 358, 567 P2d 923 (1977).

Divorce — Failure to Request Property Settlement: Where pleadings of both parties in divorce proceedings showed that they expected the court to make orders relative to the property, the court had authority to vest all the property in the husband and order alimony paid where justified by the facts, even though neither party had asked for that specific disposition. Libra v. Libra, 157 M 252, 484 P2d 748 (1971).

Inconsistent Theories for Recovery: The rule that a party may not adopt one theory of the case in his complaint and recover upon another, or adopt one theory in the trial court and insist upon a different one on appeal, is not affected by the provision that the District Court may grant plaintiff any relief consistent with his complaint and fairly embraced within the issues. Outlook Farmers' Elevator Co. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 70 M 8, 223 P 905 (1924).

Relief Justified by Facts: If upon the facts stated, from any point of view, the plaintiff is entitled to relief, the complaint will be sustained. Simonsen v. Barth, 64 M 95, 208 P 938 (1922); Hamilton v. Hamilton, 51 M 509, 154 P 717 (1916); Hicks v. Rupp, 49 M 40, 140 P 97 (1914); Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Thomas, 48 M 222, 137 P 380 (1913); Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1908); Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 M 61, 92 P 49 (1907); Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 M 298, 78 P 519 (1904); State ex rel. Russel v. Tooker, 18 M 540, 46 P 530 (1896); Kleinschmidt v. Steele, 15 M 181, 38 P 827 (1895); Davis v. Davis, 9 M 267, 23 P 715 (1890); Leopold v. Silverman, 7 M 266, 16 P 580 (1888); Gillett v. Clark, 6 M 190, 9 P 823 (1886); Morse v. Swan, 2 M 306 (1875).

Unintelligible Complaint — Relief Properly Denied: Where the complaint not only does not state a cause of action but is unintelligible, the rule that if from the facts stated it is apparent that plaintiff is entitled to some relief, the pleading will be upheld, does not obtain. Wing v. Brasher, 59 M 10, 194 P 1106 (1921).

Relief Consistent With Complaint to Be Awarded: When there is appearance and answer by the defendant, any relief may be awarded which is consistent with the complaint and embraced within the issues, but the award may not extend further in any case. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910); Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 M 298, 78 P 519 (1904).

Allegation as Prayer for Relief: Though a complaint has no formal prayer for judgment, it is sufficient if it contains an allegation showing the limits of the plaintiff's claim, as such an allegation serves the same practical purpose as a formal prayer for judgment. Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 304, 109 P 275 (1910).

Stipulation for Judgment Prayed — Multiple Defendants: Where in a foreclosure suit the principal defendants enter into a stipulation that the judgment may be entered against them in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, it is error for the court to direct, in its decree, not only the sale of the property and the application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of the mortgages, but also the application of the surplus to the satisfaction of judgments set up in the plaintiff's replication to the answer of another defendant holding liens on the property. Manuel v. Turner, 36 M 512, 93 P 808 (1908).

Prayer Not Stated: Informality of the prayer in a complaint, or the total absence of one, is not ground for demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed). Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 M 61, 92 P 49 (1907).

DEFAULT JUDGMENT

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Custody — Relief Not Specifically Demanded: In an action seeking termination of the parental rights of the natural parents, the award of full care and custody of the child to her aunt and uncle, the institution of a restraining order against the mother's boyfriend to prevent him from molesting the child, and for such other relief as the District Court deemed proper, the District Court had authority to name the child's aunt and uncle her general guardians under the fourth paragraph of the prayer for relief. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Interest Award Exceeding Prayer: When an award of interest on the purchase price recovered in a default judgment exceeded the amount in the prayer, it was ordered amended. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Divorce — Failure to Preserve Alleged Error: Where proper notice of hearing on application for judgment of divorce was given defendant in accordance with Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P., and no relief different from that demanded in the complaint was granted in violation of this rule, an appeal on those grounds was dismissed by Supreme Court upon its own motion where no application to set aside default or judgment was made under Rule 60(b). Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 148 M 195, 418 P2d 859 (1966).

Relief Limited by Complaint: The relief granted as to defaulting defendants cannot exceed that which is demanded in the complaint. Steinbrenner v. Love, 113 M 466, 129 P2d 101 (1942); Stillwater County v. Kenyon, 89 M 354, 297 P 453 (1931).

Quiet Title Action — Inconsistent Allegations: In an action to quiet title, the complaint spoke in the present tense, no reference being made to claim of title as of an earlier date. One of defendants answered and plaintiff replied setting up title as of the earlier date. Appealing defendants were served by publication and defaulted. The court should have decreed that plaintiff's title be quieted as of the date of filing of the complaint. Stillwater County v. Kenyon, 89 M 354, 297 P 453 (1931).

Mortgage Foreclosure: In a mortgage foreclosure suit, the court may order the land to be sold en masse without a foundation being laid therefor in the pleadings, and therefore the sale could be ordered as against defaulting defendants even though plaintiff did not in his prayer ask that it be so sold. Elston v. Hix, 67 M 294, 215 P 657 (1923).

GENERAL PRAYER FOR RELIEF

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P., was misplaced because that rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of the rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that Rule 70 was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993).

Appointment of Guardian: In an action seeking (1) termination of the parental rights of the natural parents, (2) the award of full care and custody of the child to her aunt and uncle, (3) the institution of a restraining order against the mother's boyfriend to prevent him from molesting the child, and (4) for such other relief as the District Court considered proper, the District Court had authority to name the child's aunt and uncle her general guardians under the fourth paragraph of the prayer for relief. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Divorce — Payment of Money: In divorce action it was not error for court to adjudge that plaintiff recover from defendant the amount which she had withdrawn from the bank although such relief was not requested in the prayer where the prayer asked "for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and equitable in the premise". Rogers v. Rogers, 123 M 52, 209 P2d 998 (1949), explained in Key v. Clements, 133 M 344, 323 P2d 603 (1958), distinguished in Chapman v. Chapman, 137 M 544, 354 P2d 184 (1960).

General Principles of Relief: A prayer in the complaint for such other and further relief as may be meet and agreeable to equity and good conscience warrants the granting of any relief to which plaintiff is entitled on the allegations and proof. Merk v. Bowery Min. Co., 31 M 298, 78 P 519 (1904).

Former Rule 54(d). Costs

Summary Judgment — Deposition Costs Recoverable if Deposition Used in Dispositive Manner: In summary judgment actions, deposition costs are recoverable when a deposition is used in a dispositive manner. Here, depositions were not necessary to decide defendant's summary judgment motion because the grant of summary judgment was based purely on statutory interpretation and undisputed facts not derived from the depositions, so defendant's motion for deposition costs was properly denied. Ritchie v. Ennis, 2004 MT 43, 320 M 94, 86 P3d 11 (2004). See also Roy v. Neibauer, 191 M 224, 623 P2d 555 (1981).

Easement Dispute — Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded — Foy and Randono Distinguished — Costs Sustained: Smalls brought a quiet title action against Goods for determination of an easement. Goods counterclaimed to quiet title to an easement for themselves. The District Court found in favor of the Smalls on the easement issue and awarded Smalls $8,536 in attorney fees and $759 in costs. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of attorney fees, holding that there was no applicable exception to the general rule that attorney fees cannot be awarded absent a contractual agreement or other special circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly relied upon Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), and Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). The Supreme Court stated that the Randono case stands for the proposition that fees may not be awarded as costs and that Foy is distinguishable in that in Foy, fees were awarded to a person who had sought to avoid legal action, unlike the Smalls who initiated litigation in this case. Although expressing no opinion on the applicability of Rule 11 and this rule to the case before it, the Supreme Court also pointed out that fees could be awarded as a sanction under Rule 11 and that costs could be awarded pursuant to this rule. However, the Supreme Court did sustain the award of costs to Smalls, noting that the purposes for which costs were awarded by the District Court were of the type of costs allowable under 25-10-201. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Plaintiff Awarded Fifty Percent Share in Mining Company as Prevailing Party for Purposes of Costs: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. At the outset of the case, each party claimed 100% of the shares of the mining company. The District Court awarded both Cowles and Sheeline 50% of the shares in the mining company and awarded costs to Cowles as the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in awarding costs to Cowles because he received the relief asked for at trial. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Award of Attorney Fees by Judge Who Did Not Try Case — No Abuse of Discretion: Parties had 2 months following judgment and prior to a change in jurisdiction to bring the matter of attorney fees before the judge who presided over a lien foreclosure action. Neither side did, and jurisdiction of the action was transferred from the 13th to the 16th Judicial District. Defendant later claimed the new judge abused his discretion by awarding fees in a case he did not try because he could not know all of the circumstances surrounding the foreclosure action. The Supreme Court held that a judge's jurisdiction over a case is a matter of law and that while it is preferable that the presiding trial judge consider the matter of attorney fees, it is not mandatory. Finding no abuse of discretion, judgment was affirmed. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Contempt Order — Costs Award Proper — Attorney Fees Award Improper: In reviewing a contempt order that arose out of a water rights dispute, the Supreme Court ruled that an award of costs to the irrigation district as the prevailing party was proper, but that an award of attorney fees to the district was not proper. The court reasoned that no applicable statute or contractual provision provided for attorney fees and that the case did not fit within the exceptions recognized in Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978). State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 216 M 327, 701 P2d 342, 42 St. Rep. 845 (1985).

Attorney Fees — General Rules for Determining Prevailing Party: No single factor solely determines the prevailing party for the purpose of attorney fees. The party awarded a money judgment is not necessarily the successful or prevailing party, though such a judgment is an important factor in deciding who prevailed. A party surviving an action involving a counterclaim, setoff, refund, or penalty and who has the net judgment should generally be considered the prevailing party. If a counterclaiming defendant receives only a portion of his requested relief, but the plaintiff's claim is totally denied, the defendant should receive his attorney fees. If plaintiff and defendant both seek relief and each is awarded part of the requested relief, the party prevailing on the main issue in controversy must be allowed attorney fees. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Contract Allowing Costs to Prevailing Party — Contrary Subsequent Agreement: In an action in which each party claimed breach of a contract, where the parties agreed to an order that each would pay one-half of a special master's fee, the order was not in error, even though the contract provided for costs to the prevailing party. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

No Explicit Authority for Award of Attorney Fees in Disqualification Action: As there is no provision in 3-1-802 that allows a judge to award attorney fees to a party or damages to a nonparty, such award is improper. Unless a statute provides explicitly for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party, a court cannot make such an award. In re Marriage of Gahr, 212 M 481, 689 P2d 257, 41 St. Rep. 1879 (1984).

Motion for Attorney Fees Following Judgment — Not Costs — Timeliness of Motion: The defendants signed a contract to purchase a tract of land from plaintiffs. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action commenced on the contract. Plaintiffs filed suit alleging that under the contract and various oral agreements, defendants had agreed to pay a real estate commission to plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding that written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission did not exist. No notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Defendants later moved to set an attorney fee award. The trial court ruled that under Title 25, ch. 10, attorney fees were not recoverable costs and that the motion for costs was not timely, as it was not filed within 5 days of judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees were awardable under the contract and that defendants' motion was essentially a motion to amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The motion was timely made since no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983).

Title Insurers' Failure to Defend Suit Against Insured — Insured's Costs Awarded: Adjoining landowner sued insured for interference with his easement rights, title insurance companies refused to defend, insured hired his own counsel, the suit was settled, and adjoining landowner again sued insured when insured refused to abide by the settlement. The insurers again refused to defend. The policy obligated insurers to defend any litigation founded upon a defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against. Insurers had failed to disclose and insure against the easements, though they were contained in the title records. The insurers acted in bad faith in refusing to defend the first suit but not in refusing to defend the second suit, since it arose from insurers' refusal to abide by the settlement in the first suit. Insurers were liable to insured for his costs in defending the first suit, and punitive damages could be imposed for failure to defend. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982).

Burden of Proof on Appeal: Where defendant objected to an item of awarded costs, the ruling of the trial judge on the item did not indicate on which of two grounds it was based, and defendant's raising of questions was thus not sufficient to carry defendant's burden of showing the item was not reasonable and necessary, the Supreme Court could not say whether the item was properly allowed and must therefore sustain the trial court's ruling. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Prima Facie Case for Costs: Verified memorandum of costs and disbursements of plaintiffs was prima facie evidence that the funds were necessarily expended and properly taxable to defendant unless, as a matter of law, they appeared otherwise on the face of the memorandum. Defendant had the burden of overcoming the prima facie case, and the award of costs was affirmed where defendant failed to carry its burden of showing the items of cost were not reasonable and necessary as found by the trial court. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Costs Awardable to Party Prevailing at Trial: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home structural problems requiring repair occurred. Plaintiffs prevailed at trial but were denied costs. Costs are awardable under Rule 54(d), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-10-101(3). The Supreme Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to costs at trial. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Deposition for Defendant's Benefit — Costs Disallowed: Section 25-10-201 particularly enumerates allowable costs under this rule. Where cost of taking plaintiff's deposition was made merely for the convenience of defendant's counsel, defendant cannot include such cost in his bill of costs because deposition was for his benefit. Deposition was never filed with the District Court, and plaintiff's counsel did not have any practical means of securing a copy. Johnson v. Furgeson, 158 M 170, 489 P2d 1032 (1971).

Dismissal to Include Costs: A judgment of dismissal carries with it a judgment for costs just as much as does a judgment on the merits. Graham v. Superior Mines, 100 M 427, 49 P2d 443 (1935).

Amended Memorandum of Costs — Filing Improperly Denied: The District Court should have permitted an amended memorandum of costs to be filed, in which no new items were sought to be added to the original, but the sole purpose of which was to furnish the objecting party with information relative to alleged expenditures, the absence of which from the original was claimed to be prejudicial. It is not necessary to make a preliminary showing that such information was omitted by inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Neary v. N. Pac. Ry., 41 M 480, 110 P 226 (1910).

Request for Costs Judgment Not Bar to Appeal: Where a plaintiff elects to stand on his complaint after demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) sustained, it is the duty of the court to render judgment against him for costs so as to place him in a position to appeal. Where the plaintiff is compelled to ask the court to enter such judgment, it is not such a consent to the judgment as to debar him of the right to appeal. Stevenson v. Matteson, 13 M 108, 32 P 291 (1893).

Former Rule 55. Default

State Not Required to File Response to Petition for Reinstatement — Default Judgment Properly Denied: The petitioner filed a petition for reinstatement of his driver's license. After the state failed to file an answer brief, the petitioner argued that he was entitled to a default judgment. The District Court concluded that the specific provisions of 61-8-403 that set forth the procedure for reinstatement do not require the state to file an answer. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the general responsive pleading requirements did not apply to reinstatement proceedings. Ditton v. Dept. of Justice, 2014 MT 54, 374 Mont. 122, 319 P.3d 1268.

Default Proper as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Alleging that she was defrauded out of nearly $1 million, Cass properly served defendants with a complaint, summons, and discovery requests. Defendants failed to respond to the discovery requests, and the District Court held defendants in default, awarding Cass $1,736,547.20. Defendants moved to set the judgment aside, but the request was denied, and defendants appealed, arguing that the default judgment should have been set aside pursuant to this rule when Cass filed an amended pleading. However, the record clearly showed that the District Court dismissed the case pursuant to Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., based on defendants' failure to comply with discovery requests and a court order to answer discovery, rather than on this rule for defendants' failure to defend. Although default could have been applied under either rule, the District Court obviously faced a litigant who simply was not going to respond to properly served discovery, so entry of default under Rule 37, M.R.Civ.P., was not an abuse of discretion, and the judgment was affirmed. Cass v. Composite Indus. of Am., Inc., 2002 MT 226, 311 M 406, 56 P3d 322 (2002).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment on Basis That Prior Default Judgment Barred Further Claim Under Insurance Policy: Generally, under this rule, a default judgment based on one party's failure to answer under Rule 8, M.R.Civ.P., permits the nondefaulting party to assert that all factual allegations in the pleadings are considered admitted in ascertaining liability. This general rule is an exception to an overriding principle that cases are to be tried on the merits and that judgments by default are not favored. Construing the interplay between the two procedural rules, the Supreme Court adopted the general rule in 6 Moore's Fed. Prac. 55.10 (2nd Ed. 1966) that although at "the time of entry of default, the facts alleged by the plaintiff in the complaint are deemed admitted", plaintiff's conclusions of law are not considered established. Further, although not factually identical to the present case, under Aldrich & Co. v. Donovan, 238 M 431, 778 P2d 397, 46 St. Rep. 1393 (1989), the deemed admissions resulting from one party's failure to respond to an amended counterclaim, because of a technicality, cannot sustain a claim for fraud in a subsequent motion for summary judgment. Here, plaintiff's husband's arson, fraud, concealment, misrepresentation, and false swearing were considered by the District Court to have been admitted through an otherwise valid default judgment based on the husband's failure to answer or appear, barring the wife's subsequent claim for insurance coverage and warranting summary judgment for the insurance company. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the determination whether the husband committed each of these acts is a conclusion of law that can be reached only after applying particular rules of law to specific findings of fact and cannot be "deemed admitted" through a default judgment absent any legitimate evidence in the record. Lane v. Farmers Union Ins., 1999 MT 252, 296 M 267, 989 P2d 309, 56 St. Rep. 990 (1999). See also Wheat v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 146 M 105, 404 P2d 317 (1965), and Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), which was overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Notice of Hearing of Default Judgment — No Conflict Between Uniform District Court Rules and Rules of Civil Procedure: The controlling rules relating to the entry of default judgments are found in this rule and, with respect to service, are found in Rules 5 and 6, M.R.Civ.P. The Uniform District Court Rules do not enlarge, vary, or control the provisions of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Former Rule 55(a). Entry

GENERAL

Default Judgment Distinguished: It is clear under this rule and Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P., that an entry of default by the Clerk of Court and an entry of default judgment by the District Court are two distinctly different acts. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Failure to Answer by Time of Application for Entry of Default — Default Properly Entered: Following defendant's failure to timely answer complaint, plaintiffs made timely application for entry of default. Defendant then answered, and 5 days later plaintiffs filed an affidavit for entry of default and default was entered by the Court Clerk. The Clerk properly entered the default, since no answer or appearance had been timely made at the time of the application for default. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Child Custody Disputes — Defaults Disfavored: The father sought a modification of custody of his children. His wife failed to file her response within the time provided by the rules. The father argued that he was entitled to custody of his children by default. The Supreme Court held that any doubt in the late filing of an answer should be resolved by trial on the merits of the case, and custody cases present a compelling reason for a hearing on the merits. Duffey v. Duffey, 193 M 241, 631 P2d 697, 38 St. Rep. 1105 (1981).

Failure to Attend Pretrial Conference — Default Properly Ordered: In an action by the plaintiff for damages caused by the defendant's failure to provide an irrigation system, the District Court did not err in entering a default judgment against the defendant for his failure to attend a pretrial conference. Entry of a default judgment is a drastic sanction to impose for failure to attend a pretrial conference, and the court should only resort to such a remedy in extreme situations where there is a clear record of continual delay, abuse, and disregard of the court's authority. Because the defendant displayed a continual disregard for the trial court's authority and because there was sufficient evidence to support the finding that the defendant received a copy of the order for the conference, there was no evidence that the District Court abused its discretion. Calaway v. Jones, 191 M 353, 624 P2d 991, 38 St. Rep. 340 (1981).

Effect of Entry of Default — Further Pleading Prevented: A party against whom a default has been entered has no standing to file further pleadings, absent fraud, unless the default is set aside. Carbon County v. Schwend, 182 M 89, 594 P2d 1121 (1979).

Bankruptcy Discharge — Effect on Default Judgment: Defendant in a tort action obtained a discharge in bankruptcy prior to entry of a default judgment but was denied in his application to the state court to set aside the default judgment in which defendant alleged that the judgment had been entered in violation of the stay occasioned by the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. Defendant's appeal of that denial to the Supreme Court was remanded to the District Court with directions to dismiss the default judgment against the defendant. Palmer v. Bracy, 177 M 433, 582 P2d 324 (1978).

Defendant Failed to Appear: When no one appeared on behalf of defendant at the trial, the court had no alternative but to grant plaintiff's motion for default judgment. Archer v. LaMarch Creek Ranch, 174 M 429, 571 P2d 379 (1977).

Notice of Default Not Required: Clerk of court is not required to give a notice of entry of default to the defendant. Johnson v. Matelich, 163 M 329, 517 P2d 731 (1973).

Answer Filed After Entry by Clerk: Plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default where defendants filed answer after entry of default by clerk and receipt of notice of hearing on motion for default, but before actual hearing on the motion, since entry of default by clerk requires no notice to party in default, answer was filed after defendants had received notice of motion for default and defendants failed to move to set aside entry of default for "good cause shown" as they were entitled to do under rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Unsigned Default to Be Corrected: The clerk's act in entering the default is purely ministerial and any mistakes of the clerk as distinguished from the judicial acts of the court are subject to correction by amendment of the court records. That the default was not "properly signed" would at best be but a clerical error or mistake which could not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Galbreath v. Aubert, 116 M 490, 157 P2d 105 (1944).

Withdrawal of Appearance: Where attorney filed demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) and answer in behalf of five defendants, but later discovered he was without authority as to one, and filed his withdrawal of the pleading as to the one, plaintiff by filing his praecipe for default recognized that there had been no appearance that would cure defective service of summons. Aronow v. Bishop, 112 M 611, 120 P2d 423 (1941).

Additional Time Impliedly Granted: Failure of plaintiff to cause defendant's default to be entered is an implied grant of further time in which to make appearance. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 81 M 459, 264 P 127 (1928).

Default After Appearance a Nullity: A judgment by default can be entered only where the defendant has wholly failed to make an appearance, either general or special; and where it is entered notwithstanding appearance made, it is premature and a nullity. Taylor v. Southwick, 78 M 329, 253 P 889 (1927).

Acquiescence by Plaintiff: Where defendant does not make appearance within the statutory limit and plaintiff permits further time to elapse without taking action, he thereby impliedly grants the former further time, and if appearance is made thereafter and before default is entered, it is timely, and subsequent entry of judgment by default is void. Edenfield v. Seal Co., 74 M 509, 241 P 227 (1925).

Rule Not Mandatory: The provision that where no appearance has been made by defendant within the time specified, "the clerk must enter" his default is directory only, not mandatory. Edenfield v. Seal Co., 74 M 509, 241 P 227 (1925); State ex rel. Kohl v. District Court, 46 M 348, 128 P 582 (1912).

Clerk's Power to Default: The power of the clerk to enter a default in any case is restricted to those in which no appearance either general or special has been made. Missoula Belt Line Ry. v. Smith, 58 M 432, 193 P 529 (1920).

Appearance by Counsel Only — No Default: The failure to appear in person at a trial after issues joined does not constitute a default, where counsel is present, and it was not necessary to move to set aside the order of the court directing the entry of a default. Sell v. Sell, 58 M 329, 193 P 561 (1920).

Default After Appearance: The mere appearance of a defendant does not prevent his default from being entered; judgment by default may be had when there has been a failure to do the things indicated. Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910).

Failure to Answer — Motion as Appearance: Where defendants filed no pleadings except a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction, until after the time to answer had expired, their default was properly entered without notice, though such motion be regarded as an appearance. Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910).

MOTION PREVENTING DEFAULT

Motion for Summary Judgment Held Sufficient to Prevent Default: Klock brought a civil action against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights. After the defendants' motion to dismiss was denied, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. Klock moved for entry of a default judgment, claiming that the defendants had failed to "answer" the complaint. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to grant Klock's motion, holding that a default judgment may be entered under this rule only if a party has failed to plead or "otherwise defend" against the complaint. The Supreme Court held that the defendants' motion for summary judgment satisfied the requirement that the defendants "otherwise defend" against the complaint. Klock v. Cascade, 943 M 1262, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997), followed in Havre Daily News, LLC v. Havre, 2006 MT 215, 333 M 331, 142 P3d 864 (2006).

Motion to Change Venue: Where a motion for a change of venue was timely served and filed in the action by defendant's attorney, defendant was not in default. USF&G Co. v. St., 136 M 148, 345 P2d 734 (1959); McLeod v. McLeod, 124 M 590, 228 P2d 965 (1951).

Appearance by Motion Preventing Default: Appearance by motion, whether general or special, prevents entry of default prior to disposition of the motion. Paramount Publix Corp. v. Boucher, 93 M 340, 19 P2d 223 (1933).

Challenge to Filing of Supplemental Complaint — Time for Answer Extended: The filing of a motion challenging the jurisdiction of the court to make an order permitting a supplemental complaint to be filed without notice, constituted a special appearance only and extended defendant's time for making appearance on the merits until the motion was determined. State ex rel. Bingham v. District Court, 80 M 97, 257 P 1014 (1927).

Challenge to Jurisdiction — Time for Answer Extended: The filing by the defendant of a motion challenging the jurisdiction of the court before he interposes his answer or demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) extends the time for making appearance on the merits until the motion is determined. Missoula Belt Line Ry. v. Smith, 58 M 432, 193 P 529 (1920).

Motion as Challenge to Jurisdiction: A motion requiring the attorney for the adverse party to produce his authority challenges the jurisdiction of the court. Missoula Belt Line Ry. v. Smith, 58 M 432, 193 P 529 (1920).

Former Rule 55(b). Judgment

General 984
Clerk's Error 987

GENERAL

Wrongful Discharge Claim Not for Sum Certain Subject to Default by Clerk of Court: Plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge claim requesting $140,000 in damages and other relief deemed just or proper. The amount apparently represented a combination of 4 years of plaintiff's salary and claimed weekly bonuses. After defendant failed to respond to the claim, the Clerk of District Court entered a default judgment in favor of plaintiff for a sum certain. Defendant subsequently sought to vacate the judgment on grounds that the award was incapable of being calculated to a sum certain. The District Court rejected the motion after determining that the amount was capable of being made certain. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Neither plaintiff's proposed aggregate total damages nor the fact that plaintiff's affidavit attested to such a sum automatically converted the claim to a sum certain. A mere estimate of damages does not constitute a sum certain. Although an employee alleging wrongful discharge may recover lost wages for a period not to exceed 4 years, the District Court never addressed whether plaintiff had undertaken efforts to find a new job with reasonable diligence, and this failure overlooked the question of fact that reasonably could have lowered the amount to which plaintiff would be entitled. The contingencies that were not considered with regard to defendant employer's obligation to pay bonuses and the lack of exploration into plaintiff's diligence in finding a replacement job rendered the default judgment a mere estimate of potential damages. Thus, the District Court slightly abused its discretion in refusing to set aside the default under the good cause standard of Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., and the case was remanded to allow defendant to file an answer. Bryden v. Lakeside Ventures, LLC, 2009 MT 320, 352 M 452, 218 P3d 61 (2009), following Hoyt v. Eklund, 249 M 307, 815 P2d 1140 (1991).

Improper Reliance on Plaintiff's Attorney's Affidavit to Support Default Judgment — Remand: Facts regarding the proper defendant in a contract case were disputed. Plaintiff's attorney submitted an affidavit purporting to establish that Weaver was the proper defendant, and the District Court relied on the affidavit to grant default judgment to plaintiff. Weaver appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. The attorney was not present at the time the parties discussed the contract terms and thus had no personal knowledge of the identity of the parties, the job description the parties agreed on, or billing arrangements. The attorney's affidavit addressed significant and disputed factual issues well outside the attorney's personal knowledge, so the District Court improperly relied on the affidavit to support entry of default judgment. Therefore, default judgment was vacated and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Mobley & Sons, Inc. v. Weaver, 2009 MT 312, 352 M 396, 218 P3d 472 (2009), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729. See also Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989), and McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

Prima Facie Case for Foreclosure — Default Judgment Proper: In order to make a prima facie case for foreclosure, a lender is required to show three elements: (1) the debt of the borrowers; (2) nonpayment of the debt; and (3) present ownership of the debt by the lender. Evidence of the presence of these elements, coupled with a sufficient showing of attorney fees, was adequate for a default judgment to be entered against debtors. NW. Farm Credit Serv., ACA v. Lund, 255 M 114, 841 P2d 490, 49 St. Rep. 910 (1992). See also First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48 (1989).

Parents Sued in Capacity of Guardians — Notice Insufficient to Establish Individual Liability: Defendants were sued in their capacity as guardians of their minor son for the expenses incurred in connection with the birth of an illegitimate child fathered by their son. A default judgment was rendered against defendants. The Supreme Court reversed and vacated the default judgment, holding that the guardians' duty to safeguard the rights of their son during the legal proceeding did not subject them to personal liability for their son's allegedly wrongful acts. The Supreme Court also held that because the title of the case, the allegations in the complaint, and all motions at trial addressed the defendants in their capacity as guardians, they had insufficient notice of any likelihood of personal liability. Breuer v. Poe, 245 M 22, 797 P2d 944, 47 St. Rep. 1812 (1990).

Computation of Notice Period for Default Judgment — General Rule Regarding Procedural Defects: Defendant claimed that insufficient notice had been given under subsection (2) of this rule for judgment by default when the notice period was computed under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Service was made upon defendant's counsel by mail. The question arose as to whether the rules intend that the noncourt days excluded under Rule 6(a) apply to additional days granted by virtue of mailing under Rule 6(e). The Supreme Court declined to rule on the question, instead affirming the default judgment on the grounds that: (1) defendant had ample notice of hearing; (2) the case was on the docket for more than 16 months after service of complaint and summons, but defendant took no other action except for a motion to dismiss; (3) defendant never answered the complaint; and (4) defendant did not allege or tender any proof that he had a meritorious defense to the suit for mortgage foreclosure. The court cited the general rule that a procedural defect with respect to notice of a default judgment must be considered with other factors before the judgment may be set aside. Therefore, even if notice was considered insufficient, in this case the other factors so outweighed the procedural defect as to require sustaining entry of the default judgment. Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Anderson, 233 M 339, 760 P2d 80, 45 St. Rep. 1537 (1988).

Final Order — Timeliness of Appeal: A default judgment was entered against defendant in March, his motion to vacate was denied in April, the judgment was renewed in August after a hearing on damages, and defendant appealed in September. The appeal was timely since the hearing on damages was mandatory under this section because the damages were unliquidated; therefore, the April order could not be final. The fact that a judge, not a clerk, entered the default judgment does not negate the need for a hearing on damages. The August judgment was the final judgment, and appeal from that judgment was timely taken. Paxson v. Rice, 217 M 521, 706 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1355 (1985).

Failure to Serve Notice — Default Rendered Voidable: Since the wife previously had appeared in this dissolution action, she was entitled to 3 days' written notice of the husband's motion for default judgment. The husband's failure to serve the requisite notice rendered the order of default judgment premature and voidable. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985), followed in Dean v. Hoepfner, 245 M 366, 801 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 2162 (1990), and in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Misrepresentation and Improper Process by Attorney — Sanctions: Since under 33-1-602 defendant, a foreign insurer, could only be served by service upon the Commissioner of Insurance, personal jurisdiction over insurer was not obtained when it was served at its Billings claim office. Thus, when plaintiffs' attorney appealed quashing of the service, the appeal was dismissed. Plaintiffs' attorney represented to the District Court's personnel that he had won the appeal and was entitled to a default judgment, and the personnel entered one against insurer for $150,000 punitive damages and $385 costs. The default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction, and the District Court correctly vacated it. As insurer was not properly served, the District Court properly ruled plaintiffs could not take depositions. The attorney was properly adjudged liable to insurer for $4,031.50 under 37-61-406, stating that an attorney guilty of deceit or collusion with intent to deceive the court or a party forfeits to the party injured by his deceit or collusion treble damages. LaFountaine v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 215 M 402, 698 P2d 410, 42 St. Rep. 496 (1985).

Entry of Default by Clerk Distinguished: It is clear under this rule and Rule 55(a), M.R.Civ.P., that an entry of default by the Clerk of Court and an entry of default judgment by the District Court are two distinctly different acts. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Failure to Appear at Hearing on Application for Default — Evidence Properly Taken: Plaintiffs gave defendant timely written notice that they would apply for judgment by default. The time for hearing was set, and neither defendant nor his representative appeared at the hearing. There was no reason for the court not to proceed to take evidence for the purpose of determining damages. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

What Constitutes an Appearance: Appellant was personally served with a petition for dissolution of marriage. He failed to answer or otherwise appear, and a default was entered. One and one-half years later appellant moved to set aside the default on the grounds that he was not given the 3-day notice provided by Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P. He argued that he sent the District Judge two letters, and those letters constituted an appearance for purposes of Rule 55(b). The court disagreed. The District Judge did not read the letters, as it was his policy not to engage in correspondence with litigants. The letters themselves were not served on counsel for the petitioner or the petitioner, and no appearance fee of any kind was paid in connection with the letters. Appellant did not appear and was not entitled to a 3-day notice. In re Marriage of Lance v. Lance, 195 M 176, 635 P2d 571, 38 St. Rep. 1772 (1981).

Notice of Subsequent Proceedings: If a party "appears" by filing a motion he is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Failure to Give Notice of Application — Jurisdiction Proper: District Court was not deprived of jurisdiction to enter default judgment by plaintiff's failure to give 3-day notice required by subdivision (2) of this rule where defendant had taken no action from the time of the entry of the default judgment until his death, a period of approximately 13 months, the judgment was attacked for the first time by his executrix after approximately 1 year and 7 months had elapsed, and almost 4 years had passed when the motion to set aside and vacate judgment was filed. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Failure to Serve Application for Judgment — Effect: Party's failure to serve defendant with notice of application for judgment did not preclude court from proceeding against defendant. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Answer Filed After Entry by Clerk — Default Properly Given: Plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default where defendants filed answer after entry of default by clerk and receipt of notice of hearing on motion for default, but before actual hearing on the motion, since entry of default by clerk requires no notice to party in default, answer was filed after defendants had received notice of motion for default and defendants failed to move to set aside entry of default for "good cause shown" as they were entitled to do under rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Divorce Proceedings — Default Properly Entered: Where proper notice of hearing on application for judgment of divorce was given defendant in accordance with this rule, and no relief different from that demanded in the complaint was granted in violation of Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P., an appeal on those grounds was dismissed by the Supreme Court on its own motion where no application to set aside the default or judgment was made under Rule 60(b). Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 148 M 195, 418 P2d 859 (1966).

Discretion in Denying Vacating of Default Judgment: Court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion to vacate default judgment. Defendant here was neither unsuspecting nor unaware. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Failure to Give Notice of Application — Nonprejudicial Error: Where record showed that defendant took no action for nearly 3 months after default judgment had been entered, defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to give written notice of application for default judgment as required by paragraph (2) of this rule, and District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to vacate the default judgment filed under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Ministerial Function — Clerk to Comply With Statute: Clerk of court in entering a default judgment is performing a ministerial function and must follow procedures in detail and absolutely. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Effect of Entry by Clerk: Where the Clerk of the District Court is empowered by statute to enter judgments, the judgment is one pronounced by law as a necessary consequence of the facts established. Lasby v. Burgess, 93 M 349, 18 P2d 1104 (1933).

Entry by Clerk as Judgment by Court: The ministerial act of the Clerk of the District Court in entering judgment upon default of defendant in an action for the recovery of money has the same effect as a judgment rendered upon a verdict of the jury, and the judgment roll is admissible in evidence in another action the same as though a formal judgment had been signed by the judge. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832 (1929).

Unliquidated Damages — Amount Not Admitted: In an action to recover unliquidated damages, the default of the defendant admits the cause of action and the material and traversable allegations of the complaint, but not the amount of damages. Smotherman v. Christianson, 59 M 202, 195 P 1106 (1921).

Foreclosure of Lien — Judicial Action Required: An action for the foreclosure of a lien is not an action on contract for the recovery of money or damages only, and the rendition of a proper judgment on default in such an action requires judicial action, and not the performance by the clerk of a mere ministerial function. Soliri v. Fasso, 56 M 400, 185 P 322 (1919), distinguished in Barrett v. Morton, 137 M 190, 351 P2d 601 (1960).

CLERK'S ERROR

Estimate of Damages — No Authority to Enter Default: In an affidavit accompanying his complaint, plaintiff stated that he would have to expend at least $86,000 to correct defendant's error in building plaintiff's house. When defendant defaulted, the clerk of court entered a default judgment against defendant in the amount of $86,000. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the amount was merely an estimate of the amount of the expected damages and did not constitute a sum certain and, therefore, the clerk of court did not have the authority to enter the default judgment. Hoyt v. Eklund, 249 M 307, 815 P2d 1140, 48 St. Rep. 681 (1991).

Harmless Error: Under Rule 61, omission of clerk of court to require affidavit of amount due under this rule before entry of default judgment in favor of plaintiff is not fatal unless refusal to take action with respect to the omission appears to the District Court inconsistent with substantial justice. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Motion to set aside default judgment because of plaintiff's failure to file affidavit of amount due and owing when it requested entry of default judgment was properly denied where defendant permitted judgment to be satisfied from her property, and no reason to avoid the voidable judgment had been presented. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Voidable Error: Entry of default judgment by clerk of court without requiring affidavit from plaintiff of amount due and owing rendered the judgment voidable but not void. Interstate Counseling Serv. v. Emeline, 144 M 409, 396 P2d 727 (1964).

Unauthorized Entry by Clerk: The clerk of the court in entering a judgment acts ministerially and not judicially, and must determine from the allegations of the complaint alone whether the action is one upon contract for the recovery of money or damages only, and if not then he has no authority to enter a judgment therein, and the judgment is a nullity. Soliri v. Fasso, 56 M 400, 185 P 322 (1919), distinguished in Barrett v. Morton, 137 M 190, 351 P2d 601 (1960).

GENERAL

Refusal to Set Aside Default Affirmed — No Meritorious Defense Offered — Permanent Injunction to Not Obstruct Easement Issued: In order to access their property, the plaintiffs must cross a quarter-mile-long easement located on the defendant's property. The defendant had placed cable gates at both ends of the easement on his property and also had piled debris, stumps, and rocks along the easement. The plaintiffs filed a complaint seeking damages and an injunction to prevent the defendant from placing any obstructions on the easement. The plaintiffs contended that they were unable to open and close the gate and that the obstructions prevented them from clearing the easement of snow. Following his default, the defendant moved the District Court to set it aside. The District Court denied the motion on the basis that the defendant had failed to present a meritorious defense and thus had not demonstrated that there was good cause to set aside the default. The District Court subsequently issued a permanent injunction and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's refusal to set aside the default, concluding that by not explaining the need for the gates on his otherwise unfenced property, the defendant had not offered a meritorious defense to set aside the default for good cause. Nielsen v. Hornsteiner, 2012 MT 102, 365 Mont. 64, 277 P.3d 1241.

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of Rule 60(b) Motion — Dual Lords Standards Clarified: As a general rule, the Supreme Court's review of a District Court's decision to grant or deny a Rule 60(b) motion is for abuse of discretion. One exception to the general rule is when a movant seeks relief from a default judgment, in which case the Supreme Court will apply the two standards of review set out in Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984). When a trial court has granted a motion to set aside the default and opened up the action for trial on the merits, the ruling will be set aside only upon a showing of manifest abuse, but when the trial court has denied a motion to set aside the default, only a slight abuse is sufficient to reverse the order refusing to set aside the default. However, the Lords standards are based on policy considerations identified in each case with respect to default judgments and should not be applied universally because there is no one set standard of review to be applied in all cases. Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), followed in Engelsberger v. Lake County, 2007 MT 211, 339 M 22, 167 P3d 902 (2007), and overruling Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128 (1997), Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), and Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004), to the extent that those cases state or suggest that the Lords standards apply to all Rule 60(b) motions.

Appropriate Standards for Setting Aside Entry of Default and Default Judgment: Defendant failed to respond to a complaint within 20 days, and default was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant sought to set aside the entry of default under the good cause standard provided under Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989). Plaintiff contended that in order to meet the good cause standard, a party would have to meet the higher excusable neglect standard set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). The District Court held that the Blume standard applied and that defendant's neglect was inexcusable, so default judgment was entered. On appeal, the Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the applicable standards. When the issue is the setting aside of a default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., either alone or in conjunction with an entry of default, the appropriate standard is the Blume excusable neglect standard. When the issue is the setting aside of an entry of default under this rule, as opposed to a default judgment, the appropriate standard is the Cribb good cause standard. This case involved setting aside an entry of default, so the court applied the Cribb standard. Defendant failed to show that its default was not willful, instead professing ignorance in the face of repeated warnings that if no answer was filed, a default would be taken. The Cribb standard also compels consideration of the prejudice to plaintiff and whether defendant had a meritorious defense. Plaintiff had a right to be apprised of defendant's defense in a timely manner, and defendant should have raised those claims in a timely fashion rather than ignore plaintiff's repeated attempts to elicit a responsive pleading. Defendant was correct that the proper standard to be applied in this case was the Cribb standard, but defendant nevertheless failed to show good cause to set aside entry of default under that standard. Thus, even though the District Court applied the wrong standard, it reached the correct result for the wrong reason, and the Supreme Court affirmed the default judgment. Essex Ins. Co. v. Jaycie, Inc., 2004 MT 278, 323 M 231, 99 P3d 651 (2004), followed in Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005), and Ginn v. Smurfit Stone Container Enterprises, Inc., 2015 MT 81, 378 Mont. 378, 344 P.3d 972. See also Engelsberger v. Lake County, 2007 MT 211, 339 M 22, 167 P3d 902 (2007).

Order Vacating or Refusing to Vacate Default Judgment Appealable as Special Order After Final Judgment: Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) moved to set aside a default judgment against the company. After the motion was granted, Roberts, the plaintiff, appealed the order setting aside the judgment and Empire contested the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to hear the appeal. The Supreme Court clarified the issue whether such an order is appealable, holding that an order vacating or refusing to vacate a judgment is appealable under former Rule 1(b)(2), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), as an appeal of a special order after final judgment. Roberts v. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 276 M 225, 915 P2d 872, 53 St. Rep. 359 (1996).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Determining Existence of Good Cause Standard: To determine a sufficient showing of good cause for setting aside a default entry, courts should consider: (1) whether the default was willful; (2) whether the plaintiff would be prejudiced if the default was set aside; and (3) whether the defendant presented a meritorious defense to plaintiff's claim. The court must also balance the interests of the defendant in the adjudication of his defense on the merits against the interests of the public and the court in the orderly and timely administration of justice. In addition, courts may consider: (1) whether there was a good faith mistake; (2) whether a harsh or large judgment would result; (3) the strong preference of adjudication on the merits; and (4) resolution of doubts in favor of granting a motion to set aside. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in Engelsberger v. Lake County, 2007 MT 211, 339 M 22, 167 P3d 902 (2007), in which it was determined that failure to consider and balance all three Cribb factors before ruling on a motion to set aside a default judgment was reversible error. See also Hoff v. Lake County Abstract & Title Co., 2011 MT 118, 360 Mont. 461, 255 P.3d 137, which held that under the Cribb factors, good cause did not exist to set aside the entry of default.

Standards Applicable to Setting Aside Default Entry and Default Judgment: The default entry is simply an interlocutory order that in itself determines no rights or remedies, whereas the default judgment is a final judgment that terminates the litigation and decides the dispute. Therefore, the "good cause" standard for setting aside a default entry under this rule is more flexible and lenient than the "excusable neglect" standard for setting aside a default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993). See also Hoff v. Lake County Abstract & Title Co., 2011 MT 118, 360 Mont. 461, 255 P.3d 137, which held that under the Cribb factors, good cause did not exist to set aside the entry of default.

Attorney Withdrawal With No Notice to Client — Default Set Aside: The lower court granted defendants' attorney's motion to withdraw and ordered him to notify defendants. Defendants claimed on appeal that they received no notice. The record showed no evidence of notice by the attorney and no evidence of the notice that 37-61-405 required plaintiff to give. A default was issued against defendants at a time when they had no attorney and were not represented at the hearing. Defendants properly raised on appeal the lack of the lower court's power to proceed to default. The case was remanded with directions to set the default aside and grant a rehearing. Mont. Bank of Roundup, N.A. v. Benson, 220 M 410, 717 P2d 6, 43 St. Rep. 485 (1986), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Default Judgment Vacated for Lack of Evidence of Bad Faith or Willfulness: On March 19, 1976, Scott, a truck driver employed by England, struck and killed plaintiffs' elderly father in Alzada, Montana. No criminal charges were filed. Scott returned to Utah where he left England's employ. In April 1977, plaintiffs filed a wrongful death action seeking damages against England and Scott. England was personally served in Salt Lake City, and the office manager accepted service for Scott. In June 1978, plaintiffs noticed a deposition of Scott to take place in Ekalaka. Scott could not be located. Two years later, plaintiffs moved for a default judgment against Scott for failure to appear at the deposition. The trial court entered the default judgment on September 15, 1980. Scott was finally located in March 1981 and filed a motion to set aside the default. The trial court refused and held a hearing on damages. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, saying there was no evidence showing willfulness or bad faith on the part of England or Scott. Ewalt v. Scott, 206 M 503, 675 P2d 77, 40 St. Rep. 1809 (1983).

Failure to Pay Fee for Filing Pleading: District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment against defendant, and the judgment would not be overturned on appeal from denial of motion to set aside the default judgment, where the court found that negligent failure to pay filing fee for answer until 2½ months after filing of the answer was not excusable, that the fee was not filed until after plaintiffs requested entry of default, that the answer did not present a prima facie meritorious defense, that the evidence overwhelmingly indicated there was no defense, and that defendant's reckless disregard for the rights and feelings of the plaintiffs and his attempt to prolong the litigation were adequate reasons to deny his motion to set aside the judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Suit Attacking Judgment After Motion to Set Aside — New Issue Raised — Res Judicata Applied: In 1971 a default judgment had been entered against present plaintiffs, granting sole ownership of certain property to present defendant E.G.W., who sold the property to present codefendants in 1972. Plaintiffs' 1971 motion to set aside the default was denied. In 1981 plaintiffs sued for a one-half quieted interest, or in the alternative, an accounting and one-half the proceeds of the 1972 sale. The complaint was based on the claim that the 1971 judgment was void because it granted relief beyond that prayed for in the pleadings and the court lacked jurisdiction to grant the relief it granted. Res judicata barred litigation of the voidness issue because plaintiffs failed to raise it in their 1971 motion to set aside the default. Once there has been full opportunity to present an issue for judicial decision in a given proceeding, including jurisdiction issues, the court's determination in that proceeding must be accorded full finality as to all issues raised or which fairly could have been raised and their later consideration is precluded by res judicata. Wellman v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573, 39 St. Rep. 752 (1982). See also First Bank v. District Court, 226 M 515, 737 P2d 1132, 44 St. Rep. 861 (1987), St. v. Perry, 232 M 455, 758 P2d 268, 45 St. Rep. 1192 (1988), and Tungsten Holdings, Inc. v. Kimberlin, 2000 MT 24, 298 M 176, 994 P2d 1114, 57 St. Rep. 125 (2000).

Due Process Violations — Default Set Aside for Good Cause: On the basis of the total circumstances surrounding the proceedings, defendant tribe was denied a meaningful opportunity to appear and be heard. Late return of proof of service of summons could have contributed to the tribe's failure to appear, and coupled with other circumstances was "good cause" to set aside a default. Big Spring v. Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, 175 M 258, 573 P2d 655 (1978).

Failure to Appeal — Issue Res Judicata: Defendant's failure to appeal the denial of his motion to set aside default judgment renders the decision res judicata and precludes the filing of a second action to litigate the same claim or issues decided by the court. Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Notice Not Required — Good Cause Not Shown: Motion to set aside entry of default judgment grounded on failure of Clerk to give notice to defendant of entry of default failed to show good cause since no notice of entry of default by the Clerk of the District Court is required. Johnson v. Matelich, 163 M 329, 517 P2d 731 (1973).

Jurisdiction — Cannot Be Obtained by Consent: Objection to lack of jurisdiction over subject matter may be raised at any time. A court lacking jurisdiction cannot acquire it by consent of parties. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Answer Filed After Entry by Clerk — Default Properly Given: Plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default where defendants filed answer after entry of default by clerk and receipt of notice of hearing on motion for default, but before actual hearing on the motion, since entry of default by clerk requires no notice to party in default, answer was filed after defendants had received notice of motion for default and defendants failed to move to set aside entry of default for "good cause shown" as they were entitled to do under rules. Sealey v. Majerus, 149 M 268, 425 P2d 70 (1967).

Discretion in Denying Vacating of Default Judgment: Court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion to vacate default judgment. Defendant here was neither unsuspecting nor unaware. Williams v. Superior Homes, Inc., 148 M 38, 417 P2d 92 (1966).

Default Judgment Set Aside — Improper Service: Because service upon a former employee was not service upon the company itself, default judgment was void for want of jurisdiction and set aside. Kraus v. Treasure Belt Min. Co., 146 M 432, 408 P2d 151 (1965).

Default Properly Opened: Fact that corporate defendant claimed Sheriff had never served summons upon the corporation, Sheriff did not remember service of the summons, and default was not taken until 7 years after the plaintiff was injured, constituted clear, unequivocal, and convincing proof to rebut weight accorded Sheriff's return of service of process under 25-3-302 to open default judgment. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Premature Default Judgment — Voidable: A prematurely entered default judgment is voidable but not void. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965), followed in in Re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985).

Voidable Judgments: A default judgment entered prematurely pursuant to this section could not be set aside under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., since Rule 60(b)(4) applies to void and not voidable judgments. Sowerwine v. Sowerwine, 145 M 81, 399 P2d 233 (1965).

Delay in Opening Default:

District Court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to open default taken on April 28, 1960, where defendant did not move to open the default until December 15, 1960. Strnod v. Abadie, 141 M 224, 376 P2d 730 (1962).

Vacation of a decree of divorce rendered upon default after publication of summons on the ground of fraud on the part of plaintiff, after a lapse of more than 15 months from its rendition, was error; defendant's remedy being an action in equity to set the decree aside on the ground stated. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 57 M 432, 188 P 902 (1920).

Pending Action in Another State — Default Properly Set Aside: Trial court was correct in setting aside a default judgment entered in a divorce proceeding, where it was disclosed that at the time plaintiff instituted the divorce action in Montana there was pending a divorce action by defendant against plaintiff in California to which plaintiff had filed a cross-complaint. Petrol v. Petrol, 127 M 184, 259 P2d 338 (1953).

Alias Summons — Time for Answer Not Extended: Where defendant's delay in appearing was caused by belief that the service of an alias summons for the purpose of curing a defect in the original service extended the time for answering, the default judgment was properly set aside. Nelson v. Lennon, 122 M 506, 206 P2d 556 (1949).

Substitution of Real Party in Interest Allowed After Default: In action to quiet title, court was authorized after default of original defendant to set aside default, and permit assignee of timber rights to be substituted as the party defendant. State ex rel. Hilyard v. District Court, 120 M 342, 184 P2d 997 (1947).

Relief From Default for Failure to Serve Summons: Relief from a default judgment on the ground that defendant was not personally served with summons is by application to the trial court made within 1 year after rendition of judgment for permission to answer to the merits of the action, and upon expiration of such time limit the trial court is without jurisdiction to vacate the judgment. Complaint filed in instant case was insufficient to invoke the equity jurisdiction of the trial court. Housing Authority of City of Butte v. Murtha, 115 M 405, 144 P2d 183 (1943).

Jurisdictional Defect — Failure of Service as Affecting Default: Though failure to serve some persons interested in property sought to be condemned by a city housing authority did not affect its right to proceed against those served, those not personally served in proper time and who did not voluntarily appear could still within 1 year after rendition of judgment assert their rights and the county's lien for unpaid taxes against the interests of such owners remained unaffected by the proceedings already had. Housing Authority of City of Butte v. Bjork, 109 M 552, 98 P2d 324 (1940).

Execution After Default — Defendant's Remedy: Under the showing of personal service on defendant, her default and default judgment entered, issuance of execution on judgment and return showing complete satisfaction of the judgment, the matter had passed beyond jurisdiction of the court and it was without jurisdiction to pass on motion to set judgment aside, leaving defendant to her suit in equity to set it aside. State ex rel. Redle v. District Court, 102 M 541, 59 P2d 58 (1936).

Fraud — Relief by Suit in Equity: Motion informal in character, to have a default judgment procured by fraud set aside, is not so adequate a remedy as a suit in equity where the matter can be thoroughly investigated, and therefore failure of plaintiff to make such a motion did not bar recourse to equity. Stocking v. The Charles Beard Co., 102 M 65, 55 P2d 949 (1936); Bullard v. Zimmerman, 82 M 434, 268 P 512 (1928).

Motion to Open Default as Motion for New Trial: A motion to set aside a default judgment in a Justice of the Peace Court is akin to, or in effect, a motion for a new trial. Therefore, where such a motion has been made, the judgment is not final until the motion has been disposed of, and the time for appeal to the District Court does not start to run until the date of ruling on the motion. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936), overruling State ex rel. Cobban v. District Court, 30 M 93, 75 P 862 (1904).

Probate Proceedings:

A decree of distribution of property of an estate may not be set aside on the ground of fraud or other irregularity under the provision for setting aside a default, the remedy of the aggrieved party being by suit in equity. State ex rel. O'Neil v. District Court, 96 M 393, 30 P2d 815 (1934).

The provisions authorizing the District Court to relieve a party from a default under conditions prescribed are applicable to probate proceedings, and the District Court may in a proceeding to determine heirship permit an heir who from any cause was not personally served with notice to answer to the merits of the proceeding at any time within 1 year from the rendition of the judgment. The technical objection that such notice is not a "summons" and the proceeding not "an action" cannot be sustained. State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928).

Premature Default Judgment — Right to Vacate: A default judgment entered prematurely is not void, but voidable, and therefore requires a motion to set it aside. Such a motion however is one of right, not one of grace on the part of the trial court, and hence it is immaterial whether movant makes a showing sufficient to appeal to the court's discretion. Paramount Publix Corp. v. Boucher, 93 M 340, 19 P2d 223 (1933).

Execution After Default — Knowledge by Third Parties: Where third parties take property under execution sale with full knowledge of all the facts with relation to rendition of the judgment which is sought to be set aside as having been taken against movant through his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect, and the facts warrant the relief, the remedy should also run against the third parties. Meyer v. Lemley, 86 M 83, 282 P 268 (1929).

Fraud — Decree of Divorce: Where a decree of divorce was nominally in favor of plaintiff wife but was in fact in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff was induced to procure it through fraud perpetrated upon her by defendant to enable him to marry another woman, she could properly proceed in the original action by motion to have it vacated. Hall v. Hall, 70 M 460, 226 P 469 (1924).

Amendment of Complaint After Default: While as a general rule an amendment of the complaint made after default operates to open the default, provided it introduces a new cause of action or goes to the substance of the pleading, an amendment which goes no further than to substitute a new party plaintiff for the original one because of transfer of interest, is merely formal and has not that effect; it could be made only by leave of court and therefore defendant was not entitled to service of the complaint as thus amended. Price v. Skylstead, 69 M 453, 222 P 1059 (1924).

Notice to Plaintiff Required: In the absence of notice to the plaintiff, the court is without authority to set aside a default. State ex rel. Hart-Parr Co. v. District Court, 58 M 114, 190 P 982 (1920).

Default Based on Insufficient Complaint Subject to Collateral Attack: Since, when a judgment has been rendered by default upon a complaint which is insufficient by reason of its failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the complaint, with a memorandum of the default endorsed upon it, the summons and proof of service, and a copy of the judgment constitute the record under this section. The record itself discloses the infirmity of the judgment and the latter is exposed to collateral attack at any time when it is made the basis of a right. Crawford v.

Pierse, 56 M 371, 185 P 315 (1919), distinguished in State ex rel. Delmoe v. District Court, 100 M 131, 46 P2d 39 (1935).

Default After Demurrer Overruled: Where a defendant's demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) to an amended complaint has been overruled, and he has failed to file his answer within the time set by the court, and a judgment by default has been entered, the court may in its discretion and upon a proper showing set the judgment aside and permit the defendant to file an answer. State ex rel. Smotherman v. District Court, 50 M 119, 145 P 724 (1914).

Terms of Opening Default Unnecessary: An order vacating a default judgment will not be set aside merely because the court failed to impose terms. Nash v. Treat, 45 M 250, 122 P 745 (1912).

Referee's Acts Immaterial to Default: Wrongdoing on the part of a referee, which in nowise affects the integrity of the judgment entered in accordance with his report, is not ground for a new trial, but rather the statute applies to cases where a party has for one or more of the reasons mentioned been prevented from having a proper hearing in the first instance, and is in default. Ogle v. Potter, 24 M 501, 62 P 920 (1900).

POLICY AGAINST DEFAULT

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

Trial Favored — Default Set Aside: Defendant was personally served with the complaint in the action and forwarded a copy of the summons and complaint to his attorney on the same day. The attorney never received the complaint and did not appear on behalf of defendant. The District Court entered defendant's default. Within 3 days of learning of the default, the attorney moved to set aside the default, and the District Court denied the motion. The Supreme Court held that the policy of the law is to favor trial on the merits and that no great abuse of discretion need be shown to warrant a reversal of an order denying a motion to set aside a default. Hoyt v. Eklund, 249 M 307, 815 P2d 1140, 48 St. Rep. 681 (1991), followed in Waldher v. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp., 282 M 59, 935 P2d 1101, 54 St. Rep. 241 (1997).

Default Judgment Vacated for Lack of Evidence of Bad Faith or Willfulness: On March 19, 1976, Scott, a truck driver employed by England, struck and killed plaintiffs' elderly father in Alzada, Montana. No criminal charges were filed. Scott returned to Utah where he left England's employ. In April 1977, plaintiffs filed a wrongful death action seeking damages against England and Scott. England was personally served in Salt Lake City, and the office manager accepted service for Scott. In June 1978, plaintiffs noticed a deposition of Scott to take place in Ekalaka. Scott could not be located. Two years later, plaintiffs moved for a default judgment against Scott for failure to appear at the deposition. The trial court entered the default judgment on September 15, 1980. Scott was finally located in March 1981 and filed a motion to set aside the default. The trial court refused and held a hearing on damages. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, saying there was no evidence showing willfulness or bad faith on the part of England or Scott. Ewalt v. Scott, 206 M 503, 675 P2d 77, 40 St. Rep. 1809 (1983).

Preference for Disposing of Cases on Merits: The record shows the plaintiff took a default after the defendant felt she had been assured she would be given time to negotiate a settlement, and the judgment entered exceeds by $150 the amount defendant owed plaintiff at the time the court entered judgment. The default judgment was therefore set aside because it is preferable to dispose of cases on their merits rather than maintain too strict a regard for technical rules of procedure. Little Horn St. Bank v. Real Bird, 183 M 208, 598 P2d 1109 (1979).

Doubt Resolved in Favor of Motion: Each case wherein it is sought to have a default judgment set aside must be determined on its own facts, and where the showing made leaves the court in doubt or is one upon which reasonable men might reach different conclusions, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the motion. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960); Brothers v. Brothers, 71 M 378, 230 P 60 (1924), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986). See also In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993).

Slight Abuse in Exceptional Cases: Default judgments are not favored and it is the policy of the law to have every case tried on its merits. While slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment is sufficient to justify a reversal of the order, only in exceptional cases will the Supreme Court disturb the action of a trial court in reopening a default. Waggoner v. Glacier Colony of Hutterites, 127 M 140, 258 P2d 1162 (1953).

Slight Abuse as Sufficient: Since courts universally favor trial on the merits, slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment is sufficient to justify a reversal of the order. Patterson v. Patterson, 120 M 127, 179 P2d 536 (1947); Brothers v. Brothers, 71 M 378, 230 P 60 (1924), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

Manifest Abuse Required — Standard of Appellate Review: The setting aside of default judgments lies within the sound legal discretion of the trial court and reversal may be had only on a showing of manifest abuse, such judgments not being favored and it being the policy of the law to have cases tried on their merits. Courts in applying the statute granting discretion should exercise the same liberal spirit which prompted its enactment, and the Supreme Court requires a stronger showing of abuse to warrant a reversal of an order granting relief than is required in case the court refuses to do so. If an order setting aside a judgment may be justified on any ground, it will be sustained. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

DISCRETION OF COURT

Failure to Answer Complaint Not Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Matthews filed a complaint in a wrongful discharge action, and the summons and complaint with an acknowledgment of service were forwarded to defendant's attorney. The attorney returned the acknowledgment, but the attorney's assistant failed to calendar the answer's due date and misfiled the summons and complaint in a different file. An answer was not timely filed, so Matthews sought and was granted a hearing on a default judgment and damages, but defendant's counsel did not attend the hearing, and a default judgment and damages of $185,000 were entered for Matthews. Defendant moved to set aside the default, but the District Court did not rule on the motion within 60 days, so the motion was considered denied. On appeal, defendant argued that the motion to set aside the default should have been granted on grounds of excusable neglect. However, by the time of the default hearing, the lack of attention to Matthew's complaint was a serious disregard of the judicial process and could not be considered excusable neglect, nor did the situation demonstrate extraordinary circumstances justifying setting aside the default judgment under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. Further, the actions of defense counsel did not constitute gross negligence or actual misconduct, and defendant was not completely innocent in the matter, so any neglect of counsel was properly charged to defendant. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment, and the default judgment was affirmed. Matthews v. Don K Chevrolet, 2005 MT 164, 327 M 456, 115 P3d 201 (2005), applying the standard for setting aside a default in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). See also Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984).

Slight Abuse of Discretion — Refusal to Set Aside Reversed: Appellate courts reverse refusals to set aside entries of default on a showing of slight abuse of discretion by the lower court. Prejudice, the lack of willfulness, and the presence of factual allegations supporting a defense constituted sufficient abuse of discretion to warrant reversal. Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337, 46 St. Rep. 156 (1989), followed in In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991). See also Hoff v. Lake County Abstract & Title Co., 2011 MT 118, 360 Mont. 461, 255 P.3d 137, which held that under the Cribb factors, good cause did not exist to set aside the entry of default.

Lack of Notice — Default Judgment Voidable: Since the wife previously had appeared in this dissolution action, she was entitled to 3 days' written notice of the husband's motion for default judgment under Rule 55(b), M.R.Civ.P. The husband's failure to serve the requisite notice rendered the order of default judgment premature and voidable. The lack of notice does not automatically entitle a party to relief but is a consideration to be weighed by the court in exercising its discretion under this Rule. In re Marriage of Neneman, 217 M 155, 703 P2d 164, 42 St. Rep. 1095 (1985), followed in Dean v. Hoepfner, 245 M 366, 801 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 2162 (1990).

Standard of Review — Neglect of Attorney: The Supreme Court held that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to set aside a default judgment when the defendants were completely abandoned by their attorney (after he made a general appearance on behalf of the clients who had neither been served with process nor authorized him to so act), proceeded with diligence to rectify the court's action, and alleged a potential defense to the action. The Supreme Court determined that, under the facts of the case, it would be unconscionable to apply the general rule charging the client with the attorney's neglect. The Supreme Court clarified which standard of review applies in default cases: (1) when a trial court has granted a motion to vacate the default, a strict standard of review applies—the trial court's action will only be set aside upon a showing of manifest abuse; (2) when a trial court has denied a motion to set aside a default, a "no great abuse" standard applies—only "slight abuse" is sufficient to reverse an order refusing to set aside a default. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993), in In re Marriage of Martin, 265 M 95, 874 P2d 1219, 51 St. Rep. 443 (1994), and Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005). Peak was overruled in Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), to the extent that Peak implied that Rule 60(b)(6) required gross neglect or actual misconduct on the part of the movant's attorney in all cases, when that requirement applies only in cases in which the basis of the Rule 60(b)(6) motion is an alleged error by the movant's attorney.

Default Judgment — Setting Aside — Abuse of Discretion: Plaintiffs owned land through which a road ran. The public used that road in a continuous and uninterrupted way for over 25 years without objection by the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs then filed a petition for abandonment of the road with the county and led the county to believe that further judicial action would be forestalled until completion of administrative proceedings on the petition. Plaintiffs then obtained a default judgment against the county 3 weeks before the county filed an answer to the plaintiffs' complaint. The county moved to set aside the default and the motion was granted. In reviewing this, the Supreme Court applied the rule that a District Court's discretion to set aside entry of default should be exercised liberally to promote trials on the merits and that an order setting aside default will be reversed only in exceptional cases. In finding no abuse of discretion by the District Court, the court found that the county had supported its attempt to cure the default not just by filing an answer but also by filing an affidavit detailing the circumstances of the default, which was sufficient to support the District Court's finding that the delay was not totally inexcusable. Additionally, the county had made a showing in its answer that there was a defense available to the plaintiffs' action since the public possessed a prescriptive easement. The easement's existence was found by the court to be supported by the plaintiffs' complaint itself. Accordingly there was no abuse of discretion in permitting the case to proceed to trial. McClurg v. Flathead County Comm'rs, 188 M 20, 610 P2d 1153 (1980).

Defendant Represented by Counsel — Motion Properly Denied: Denial of defendant's motion to set aside entry of default judgment and granting of plaintiff's motion for entry of default judgments were not an abuse of discretion where defendant's claims that he had not been informed of proceedings against him were countered by fact that he had been represented by counsel at material times and that he was aware of necessity of filing answer within 30 days of denial of his motion to dismiss. Johnson v. Matelich, 163 M 329, 517 P2d 731 (1973).

Judgment Set Aside — Lack of Knowledge by Defendant: Court's discretion was properly exercised when default judgment was set aside because it was obtained without knowledge of president or directors of defendant corporation. Prentice Lumber Co., Inc. v. Hukill, 161 M 8, 504 P2d 277 (1972).

Abuse of Discretion — Sufficient to Set Aside: Under the circumstances of this case, default judgment was set aside and judge's slight abuse of discretion in denying motion to set aside merited reversal. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Slight Abuse in Exceptional Cases Required for Reversal: Default judgments are not favored. Although slight abuse of discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment is sufficient to justify a reversal, only in exceptional cases will the Supreme Court disturb the action of a trial court in reopening a default. Cure v. Southwick, 137 M 1, 349 P2d 575 (1960).

Application in Exceptional Cases Only: While the Supreme Court will disturb the action of a trial court in opening default only in exceptional cases, no great abuse of discretion by the trial court in refusing to set aside a default need be shown to warrant a reversal. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Decree of Distribution: The District Court erred in refusing to take jurisdiction of a petition to set aside a decree of distribution, within 6 months after its rendition. State ex rel. O'Neil v. District Court, 96 M 393, 30 P2d 815 (1934).

No Great Abuse Required for Reversal: Judgments by default are not favored, it being the policy of the law to have every case tried upon its merits; trial courts in passing upon motions for opening default judgments should exercise the same liberal spirit which prompted the Legislature in enacting the provision authorizing opening of the default, and where a court refuses to grant such a motion no great abuse of discretion need be shown to warrant a reversal. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926), followed in Twenty-Seventh Street, Inc. v. Johnson, 220 M 469, 716 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 534 (1986).

Review on Case-by-Case Basis: An application to set aside a default is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court and its action will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is manifest that its discretion has been abused, each case being decided upon its own facts. Pac. Acceptance Corp. v. McCue, 71 M 99, 228 P 761 (1924); Robinson v. Petersen, 63 M 247, 206 P 1092 (1922).

Degree of Abuse Required: A stronger showing of abuse of discretion must be made to warrant a reversal of an order granting a motion to set aside a default than of one refusing it. Eder v. Bereolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922).

Motion Directed to Court's Discretion: Applications to set aside default judgments are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its action thereon will not be interfered with unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown. Eder v. Bereolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922); Greene v. Rowan, 29 M 263, 74 P 456 (1903); Hegaas v. Hegaas, 28 M 266, 72 P 656 (1903).

Abuse of Discretion Required: An order refusing a motion to vacate a judgment on the ground of mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect will not be reversed on appeal, if no complaint is made that the lower court abused its discretion. Ferguson v. Parrott, 36 M 352, 92 P 965 (1907).

FORM OF APPLICATION TO OPEN DEFAULT

Counteraffidavits Not Permitted: In ruling on a motion to set aside a default, the affidavits of merits filed by the petitioner cannot be controverted by counteraffidavits. The court confines itself to an investigation of the affidavit of merits to see whether a prima facie defense is made out. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Presumption — Prima Facie Defense: Where defendant alleged that he was owner of the record title in his motion to set aside a default and in his affidavit of merits, he has set out a prima facie defense in view of 70-19-404 which provides that the person establishing legal title is presumed to be in possession. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957).

Request to Open Default — Filing of Answer Required: A party defendant, on application to set aside his default, must in addition to excusing his delinquency support the motion by an affidavit of merits setting forth the facts constituting his defense, or tender with the motion and affidavit a copy of his proposed answer. Holen v. Phelps, 131 M 146, 308 P2d 624 (1957); State ex rel. Stephens v. District Court, 43 M 571, 118 P 268 (1911); Vadnais v. E. Butte Extension Copper Min. Co., 42 M 543, 113 P 747 (1911); Donlan v. Thompson Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910); Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 321, 106 P 563 (1910); Schaeffer v. Gold Cord Min. Co., 36 M 410, 93 P 344 (1908); Bowen v. Webb, 34 M 61, 85 P 739 (1906); Donnelly v. Clark, 6 M 135, 9 P 887 (1886).

Meritorious Defense Not to Be Controverted: On the hearing of a motion to set aside a default judgment, defendant's showing that he has a meritorious defense may not be controverted by evidence. Eder v. Bereolos, 63 M 363, 207 P 471 (1922).

Application Denied — Proposed Answer Insufficient: Assuming that an answer may supply the place of an affidavit of merits in aid of a motion to vacate a default judgment, such a pleading, which was in effect a general denial and did not set forth the facts upon which the defendant relied to defeat plaintiff's claim so as to enable the court to determine whether he had a prima facie defense upon the merits, was insufficient to warrant the granting of the motion. Vadnais v. E. Butte Extension Copper Min. Co., 42 M 543, 113 P 747 (1911); Donlan v. Thompson Falls Copper & Mill. Co., 42 M 257, 112 P 445 (1910); Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 321, 106 P 563 (1910).

Purpose of Answer: The defaulted party must show that he has a defense, otherwise the court cannot determine whether justice will be promoted or retarded by setting aside the default. Vadnais v. E. Butte Extension Copper Min. Co., 42 M 543, 113 P 747 (1911).

Form of Affidavit: An affidavit of merits, on motion to set aside a default judgment, may be made by the attorney of an absent party, and the verification may be made upon information and belief. State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909).

NEGLECT OF DEFENDANT

Lack of Diligence and Failure to Monitor Litigation Preclusion to Setting Aside Default Judgment: A District Court entered a default judgment against defendant, and defendant then argued that the judgment should be set aside The court refused to set aside the judgment on grounds that defendant showed lack of diligence by failing to retain counsel until 23 days after judgment was entered and failed its affirmative duty to monitor the litigation. Defendant argued on appeal that a 23-day delay could not be considered lack of diligence because the motion to set aside judgment was filed within the 60-day filing window. However, the 60-day timeframe merely provides a time bar and cannot be equated with whether a party has proceeded with diligence. Rather, a court may look to surrounding facts and circumstances to make a diligence determination and may use its discretion to decide that a party has not been duly diligent even though the 60-day timeframe has been satisfied. Defendant also argued that despite the District Court's finding that defendant failed to monitor the litigation, its neglect was excusable because plaintiff was negotiating a settlement in ancillary litigation, which would make the present case moot. However, as established in Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004), settlement discussions and other peripheral litigation are not an excuse to neglect ongoing litigation. Thus, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment was affirmed. Mont. Professional Sports, LLC v. Nat'l Indoor Football League, LLC, 2008 MT 98, 342 M 292, 180 P3d 1142 (2008). See also Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990), and In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229 (2000).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989).

Failure of Defendants to Monitor Litigation — Relief From Default Judgment Properly Denied: Although default judgments are not favored, litigants nevertheless have a duty to monitor litigation. Here, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment when defendants: (1) knew that litigation was proceeding; (2) knew that a status conference had been scheduled but failed to attend in person or to hire an attorney to appear in their behalf; (3) failed to notify the court or the opposing party of their intention to miss the conference; (4) were aware that service upon the listed post-office box was considered effective service for all matters regarding the litigation; and (5) neglected to notify the court of a change of address. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004), distinguished in In re Marriage of Wendt, 2014 MT 174, 375 Mont. 388, 329 P.3d 567, in which the Supreme Court declined to allow for a default judgment in a parenting plan proceeding solely on the basis of a party's absence at mediation.

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

No Abuse of Discretion in Granting Marriage Dissolution Default Judgment Given Failure to Establish Good Cause to Set Aside Default: The wife Florence petitioned for a legal separation to which her husband William did not respond. The District Court subsequently entered a default judgment against William, who appealed. The Supreme Court noted that default judgments are not favored and that a finding of even a slight abuse of discretion warrants setting aside a default judgment if good cause is shown. The court then applied the criteria in In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401 (1993), to determine whether William established good cause, which include whether: (1) the defaulting party proceeded with diligence; (2) the defaulting party's neglect was excusable; (3) the defaulting party has a meritorious defense to the claim; and (4) the judgment, if permitted to stand, will injure the defaulting party. William met the first and third criteria, but his neglect was not excusable, nor could he show that default would result in injury. Having failed to meet the McDonald good cause criteria, the court declined to address possible relief under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and default judgment was affirmed. In re Marriage of Shannon, 2004 MT 25, 319 M 357, 84 P3d 645 (2004), distinguishing In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229 (2000).

Failure to Respond — Disrespect for Judicial Process: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by entering a default judgment when husband ignored a petition and summons and, even though he claimed to have hired an attorney upon receipt of the petition, failed to pay a retainer, could not remember the attorney's name, and made no attempt to enter his appearance individually. In re Marriage of Mikesell, 257 M 482, 850 P2d 294, 50 St. Rep. 372 (1993).

Failure to File Written Request for Hearing on Wage Claims — Waiver of Right to Contest Amount: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a default judgment on a claim for unpaid wages when defendant employers failed to file a written request for an administrative hearing to explain the claims, thereby waiving their right to later contest the claim amounts. State ex rel. Vetch v. Hulman, 225 M 327, 732 P2d 843, 44 St. Rep. 275 (1987).

Neglect of Attorney Attributable to Client: When defendant's attorney received notices and talked on the phone on behalf of his clients but failed to do anything in response to numerous requests by opposing counsel and continued to postpone preparation and filing of a pleading, the attorney's procrastination was a type of neglect which was properly attributable to a client and did not constitute abandonment, which would excuse neglect. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in District Court's conclusion that the attorney's conduct was not excusable neglect. Paxson v. Rice, 217 M 521, 706 P2d 123, 42 St. Rep. 1355 (1985).

Default Preventable by Attorney — Client Not Absolutely Liable for Attorney's Neglect: It appears from a review of the record that attorney for appellants could have easily acted to prevent entry of default and default judgment. However, the court has moved away from the rule that a client is absolutely responsible for attorney's neglect. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984). Furthermore, the court will not overturn a District Court order setting aside a default unless the order amounts to a manifest abuse of discretion. There are, in the affidavit of appellants' counsel, grounds to overturn the default, and that order must stand. Graham v. Mack, 216 M 165, 699 P2d 590, 41 St. Rep. 2521 (1984).

Standard of Review — Neglect of Attorney: The Supreme Court held that the trial court abused its discretion by failing to set aside a default judgment when the defendants were completely abandoned by their attorney (after he made a general appearance on behalf of the clients who had neither been served with process nor authorized him to so act), proceeded with diligence to rectify the court's action, and alleged a potential defense to the action. The Supreme Court determined that, under the facts of the case, it would be unconscionable to apply the general rule charging the client with the attorney's neglect. The Supreme Court clarified which standard of review applies in default cases: (1) when a trial court has granted a motion to vacate the default, a strict standard of review applies—the trial court's action will only be set aside upon a showing of manifest abuse; (2) when a trial court has denied a motion to set aside a default, a "no great abuse" standard applies—only "slight abuse" is sufficient to reverse an order refusing to set aside a default. Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290, 41 St. Rep. 1793 (1984), followed in In re Marriage of Whiting, 259 M 180, 854 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 747 (1993), and Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005). Peak was overruled in Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), to the extent that Peak implied that Rule 60(b)(6) required gross neglect or actual misconduct on the part of the movant's attorney in all cases, when that requirement applies only in cases in which the basis of the Rule 60(b)(6) motion is an alleged error by the movant's attorney.

Failure to Pay Fee for Filing Pleading: District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside default judgment against defendant, and the judgment would not be overturned on appeal from denial of motion to set aside the default judgment, where the court found that negligent failure to pay filing fee for answer until 2½ months after filing of the answer was not excusable, that the fee was not filed until after plaintiffs requested entry of default, that the answer did not present a prima facie meritorious defense, that the evidence overwhelmingly indicated there was no defense, and that defendant's reckless disregard for the rights and feelings of the plaintiffs and his attempt to prolong the litigation were adequate reasons to deny his motion to set aside the judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Excusable Neglect — Local Custom Requiring That Absent Attorney Be Notified of Hearing: Husband's attorney failed to appear at District Court hearing on wife's motion to amend decree of dissolution of marriage and to hold husband in contempt for failure to pay child support. Court ruled in wife's favor by default. Husband moved to set aside default, claiming this was excusable neglect because by local custom and professional courtesy, attorney should have been notified of hearing. The District Court found excusable neglect but ordered husband's lawyer to pay wife's attorney fees. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal for lack of jurisdiction because no final order had been entered by the District Court. Rex v. Rex, 199 M 328, 649 P2d 460, 39 St. Rep. 1432 (1982).

Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Improperly Denied: Plaintiff entered into a contract to sell real property and a beer license to Dayton, who assigned the contract to Borkoski. Plaintiff later brought an action against Dayton and Borkoski. Borkoski failed to appear and a default judgment was entered. Borkoski believed that he did not have to appear until Dayton was served. He also called the clerk of court, who said that no hearing date had been set. In addition, the defendant only had 6 days from the time served until the default judgment was entered. Borkoski sought to have the default set aside but his motion was denied. On appeal, the court found that these facts constitute excusable neglect and the District Court abused its discretion in not setting aside the default judgment. Kootenai Corp. v. Dayton, 184 M 19, 601 P2d 47 (1979).

Failure to Update Name of Registered Agent: Where a complaint was served on a person listed as the registered agent of the defendant corporation, but who was no longer the agent of the corporation, and the corporation diligently sought to defend the action upon receipt of actual notice, failure of the defendant corporation to replace the name of its registered agent was excusable neglect and entry of default judgment was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Clute v. A.B. Concrete, 179 M 475, 587 P2d 392 (1978).

Motion Properly Denied: The court properly denied a motion to set aside a default judgment against a defendant who allegedly received no notice of the action because he failed to meet the burden of proving, as the moving party, inadvertence or excusable neglect. Purington v. Soundwest, 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Papers Mislaid: Copies of summons and complaint were served on corporation's president and mislaid. A diligent search was made, but papers could not be found until too late. Defense counsel made assertion that no service had been had on his client, and opposing counsel remained silent when he should have spoken. The clerk's files showed no return, required to be made in 10 days, until day of entry of judgment, as serving officer mailed it to plaintiff's attorney where it remained for 18 days. Under these circumstances, District Court erred in denying motion to set aside judgment. Madson v. Petrie Tractor & Equip. Co., 106 M 382, 77 P2d 1038 (1938).

Neglect Alone Insufficient: The power granted to the District Court to set aside a default judgment is predicated upon the neglect of the movant, coupled with a showing of facts and circumstances which will reasonably excuse it. Hence, the presence of neglect alone is not sufficient to deny relief. Reynolds v. Gladys Belle Oil Co., 75 M 332, 243 P 576 (1926).

Attorney's Neglect Imputed to Client: The neglect of an attorney to make timely appearance is the neglect of the client and the latter can be relieved from the consequences of the attorney's neglect only on a showing which would excuse the client under like circumstances. First St. Bank of Thompson Falls v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Failure to Retain Attorney: Where defendant, after writing a letter to an attorney relative to the action against him, failed to have a consultation with the attorney as he had promised to do and to ascertain whether he would appear for him, and on his application to vacate the resultant default judgment did not attempt to excuse his own or the attorney's neglect, refusal of the motion to vacate was not an abuse of discretion. First St. Bank of Thompson Falls v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Forgetfulness Insufficient: Mere forgetfulness is not a sufficient excuse for setting aside a default judgment. Lovell v. Willis, 46 M 581, 129 P 1052 (1913).

MISTAKE

Improper Reliance on Plaintiff's Attorney's Affidavit to Support Default Judgment — Remand: Facts regarding the proper defendant in a contract case were disputed. Plaintiff's attorney submitted an affidavit purporting to establish that Weaver was the proper defendant, and the District Court relied on the affidavit to grant default judgment to plaintiff. Weaver appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. The attorney was not present at the time the parties discussed the contract terms and thus had no personal knowledge of the identity of the parties, the job description the parties agreed on, or billing arrangements. The attorney's affidavit addressed significant and disputed factual issues well outside the attorney's personal knowledge, so the District Court improperly relied on the affidavit to support entry of default judgment. Therefore, default judgment was vacated and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Mobley & Sons, Inc. v. Weaver, 2009 MT 312, 352 M 396, 218 P3d 472 (2009), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729. See also Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989), and McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

Failure of Pro Se Litigant to Include Filing Fee Considered Excusable Neglect Warranting Reversal of Default Judgment: A Texas defendant, acting pro se, filed a timely answer and special appearance in response to plaintiff's complaint and summons, but failed to include the $65 filing fee, which was not mentioned in the summons. By the time that defendant learned that a filing fee was required to be submitted with the response, plaintiff had already applied for and received a default judgment without notice to defendant. Defendant's motion to set aside the default judgment was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that defendant had acted with diligence and that the failure to appear was not due to inexcusable neglect or disrespect for the court, but that defendant mistakenly assumed that if the instructions in the summons were followed, the answer would be filed. Defendant satisfied the good cause criteria in this rule, and because defendant's default was not willful, the neglect was excusable under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court's refusal, by operation of law, to set aside the default judgment was at a minimum a slight abuse of discretion. Thus, because of the policy to resolve issues on the merits, the Supreme Court reversed the default judgment and remanded for further proceedings. Sun Mtn. Sports, Inc., v. Gore, 2004 MT 56, 320 M 196, 85 P3d 1286 (2004).

Unintentional Default for Failure to Appear in Dissolution Proceeding — Abuse of Discretion in Refusal to Set Aside Default Judgment: On November 9, 1998, the wife gave her husband a copy of a petition for dissolution and summons. In early December 1998, the wife's Montana attorney contacted the husband by telephone at his home in Nevada and asked if the husband had reviewed the petition. The husband replied that he had only looked at it briefly and had not retained counsel. Following the conversation, the husband signed the acknowledgment of receipt of summons and petition and sent it back to the attorney, who did not receive it until December 10. However, because the acknowledgment had not been received within the specified timeframe, the attorney had the husband served personally on December 8. Believing that he had responded appropriately and that the wife would propose a property settlement agreement, the husband took no further action. On December 29, 1998, default judgment was entered against the husband and on January 5, 1999, a final decree was entered, apportioning most of the marital debt to the husband. Upon receipt of the notice of entry of judgment, the husband retained counsel and, within a week, filed a motion to alter or amend judgment, for a new trial, or for relief from judgment. Both parties were granted extensions for further briefing. Subsequently, the parties realized that because the District Court had not issued a formal opinion within 60 days of the motion, as required in Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., the husband's motion was considered denied. He appealed, contending that he had met his burden for setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court agreed. The husband's default was unintentional, based on the mistaken belief that the wife's attorney was going to prepare a property settlement proposal and that the husband's acknowledgment of service was the only act required of him until the parties negotiated an agreement. The Supreme Court favors resolution on the merits, and because the husband fulfilled the requirements of Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, the District Court's refusal to set aside the default judgment amounted to an abuse of discretion and reversible error. In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229, 57 St. Rep. 486 (2000).

Representations by Plaintiff's Counsel: Trial court erred in refusing to set aside a default judgment entered after defendant's failure to answer, where evidence disclosed that defendant after being served with process went to see the plaintiff's lawyer, and not finding him in talked with an associate who promised to relay defendant's message to him to the effect that the plaintiff was suing the wrong colony, and defendant understood that no further action would be required. Waggoner v. Glacier Colony of Hutterites, 127 M 140, 258 P2d 1162 (1953).

Multiple Defendants — Mistake as to Meaning of Summons: Where, in an action against eight defendants, the one most vitally interested in the result was not served with summons and did not know that it had been brought until several days after default and the others relied upon him to make appearance and defend the action, and one of them was under the impression that the summons served upon him meant simply that he was to appear as a witness, etc., refusal to open the default was error. Delaney v. Cook, 59 M 92, 195 P 833 (1921).

Ignorance of Law No Excuse: Ignorance of the law governing time for presentation of a bill of exceptions for settlement is no excuse for a default. Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914).

NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT

Improper Use of Secretary of State to Serve Nonresident Defendant — Default Judgment Void: Plaintiffs' business was destroyed by a fire allegedly caused by a defective light ballast manufactured by defendant corporation located in Illinois. Although plaintiffs had contact with defendant's counsel, experts, and insurer in demanding payment for the loss, plaintiffs never attempted to use Rule 4D(2)(e) or Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), to personally serve defendant with notice that a suit had been filed in Montana, but instead relied on Rule 4D(2)(f), M.R.Civ.P., to complete service of process by service on the Montana Secretary of State. Not having been notified of the suit, defendant failed to answer the complaint and prepared no defense, and default judgment was entered for plaintiffs. When notified of the default judgment, defendant immediately retained counsel and moved to set aside the judgment on grounds that service was inadequate because no one in authority at defendant's corporation ever received the summons and complaint. The District Court failed to act on the motion, so the motion was considered to be denied, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. In order to use Rule 4D(2)(f) to complete service of process by service on the Montana Secretary of State, plaintiff was first required to exercise reasonable diligence to serve notice on a representative of defendant in Montana or, if a representative was not available, to exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain defendant's address (of which plaintiff's counsel in this case was aware) and serve notice at that address. Because plaintiff's counsel did not exercise reasonable diligence and attempt to directly serve defendant before affecting service through the Montana Secretary of State, service was improper and deprived the District Court of personal jurisdiction over defendant, rendering the default judgment void as a matter of law. Nikolaisen v. Advance Transformer Co., 2007 MT 352, 340 M 332, 174 P3d 940 (2007), distinguished in Ptarmigan Owner's Ass'n, Inc. v. Alton, 2013 MT 69, 369 Mont. 274, 298 P.3d 1140.

Action to Quiet Title: In an action brought for the purpose of removing clouds on title to real property, service of process was made upon nonresident defendants by publication. Their default was entered and they moved to have the decree vacated, not filing any affidavit in support of the motion. The application was addressed to the court's discretion and the applicants were required to make a showing that they did not have actual notice of the pendency of the action, and since they did not do so, the motion was properly denied. Skinner v. Carlysle Oil Dev. Co., 80 M 464, 260 P 1038 (1927).

Conditions Required to Set Aside Default: The application of a defaulting nonresident defendant not personally served with summons, like that of one who has been personally served, but who through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect suffered default to be taken against him and to have the judgment set aside, is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the District Court, and the movant must show that he did not have actual notice of the pendency of the action in time to make a defense, that he proceeded promptly to have the default set aside, that he has prima facie a defense upon the merits, and that the judgment if permitted to stand will affect him injuriously. Smith v. Collis, 42 M 350, 112 P 1070 (1910).

Probate Proceedings: After the default of all persons claiming as heirs of a deceased person who did not appear on a certain date to establish their heirship had been entered, foreign claimants filed a verified petition to set it aside. The claimants alleged that they did not become aware of decedent's death until after the default had been entered and that their interests would be lost to them if it was permitted to stand, and they made a prima facie showing that they were heirs at law of the decedent. Where it appeared that they exercised the utmost diligence in getting their claims before the court, such heirs should be allowed to appear in the proceedings, and it was error to refuse to set aside the default. State ex rel. Kolbow v. District Court, 38 M 415, 100 P 207 (1909).

Former Rule 56. Summary judgment

Shareholder Cannot File Claim Belonging to Corporation — Stranger to Contract — No Standing to Seek Damages — Summary Judgment Affirmed: A majority shareholder of a corporation filed suit for damages arising from the termination of the corporation's food services contract with the federal government against the defendants who sold a coffee urn for the corporation's use. The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants because the shareholder did not have standing to file claims that belonged to the corporation; he was not a party to the contract between the corporation and the federal government; and the deadline to amend his pleadings to include the corporation as a party had expired. Weaver v. Advanced Refrigeration, 2011 MT 174, 361 Mont. 233, 257 P.3d 378.

Specific Language That No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists Not Required for Grant of Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs asserted that it was error for the District Court to grant summary judgment without expressly concluding that no genuine issue of material fact existed. The Supreme Court held that a court is not required to include this "magic" language as long as the court provides sufficient particularity to understand the rationale for granting summary judgment. Roe v. Missoula, 2009 MT 417, 354 M 1, 221 P3d 1200 (2009).

Failure to Specify Grounds for Summary Judgment With Specific Particularity — Remand: Andersen sued Schenk in tort for failure to pay a commission on the sale of a ranch. The District Court granted Schenk summary judgment on the tort claims but did not specify the grounds on which summary judgment was based. The Supreme Court remanded for entry of an order on Andersen's tort claims that met the requirements of Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., and for entry of a new final judgment on the tort claims. Andersen v. Schenk, 2009 MT 399, 353 M 424, 220 P3d 675 (2009). See also Ravalli County Bank v. Gasvoda, 253 M 399, 833 P2d 1042 (1992).

No Grounds for Exercising Personal Jurisdiction Over Out-of-State Corporation That Was Not Party to Livestock Sales Contract: Semenza sold cattle to Kniss, and the sale was paid through a wire transfer from Stockman's Livestock Order Buying, Inc. (Stockman's), an Oklahoma corporation. Semenza sold a second lot of cattle to Kniss and received another wire transfer from Stockman's, but the amount was $52,000 less than the price that was orally agreed on between Semenza and Kniss. Semenza brought a breach of contract action against Kniss and Stockman's, arguing that the District Court had personal jurisdiction over Stockman's via Kniss's ostensible agency. The Supreme Court held that no agency relationship existed as a matter of law. Absent an agency relationship and any evidence that Stockman's was a party to the contract for sale of the cattle or that Stockman's actually conducted business in Montana, there were no grounds for personal jurisdiction by the Montana Court over Stockman's, and the District Court properly granted summary judgment to Stockman's for lack of jurisdiction. Semenza v. Kniss, 2008 MT 238, 344 M 427, 189 P3d 1188 (2008).

Foundation for Abuse of Process Claim — Summary Judgment Improper: When the record establishes that a plaintiff who brings an abuse of process claim based the claim on defendant's purpose in bringing the suit, as well as the conduct of using the suit as an instrument of coercion, the defendant is not entitled to summary judgment. The tort of abuse of process must be proven by a showing of: (1) an ulterior purpose; and (2) a willful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. In this case, plaintiff's supported allegations showed that defendant had no valid legal claim, and knew it, but filed an action against plaintiff in federal court nonetheless. Plaintiff raised genuine issues of material fact that satisfied the elements of an abuse of process claim, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment for defendant. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Seipel v. Olympic Coast Investments, 2008 MT 237, 344 M 415, 188 P3d 1027 (2008), following Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

Failure to Satisfy Evidentiary and Foundational Requirements for Admission of Documents — Summary Judgment Reversed: After Phillip Smith was killed at a railroad crossing, his daughter filed a wrongful death and survival action against the railroad. The District Court accepted affidavits and records from railroad and state officials indicating that federal funds had been used to install double reflectorized crossbucks at the crossing and held that pursuant to Norfolk S. Ry. Co. v. Shanklin, 529 US 344 (2000), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that state law tort claims are preempted when federal funds are used to install warning devices at railroad crossings, the preemption clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (FRSA), 49 U.S.C. 20106 (1994), preempted the wrongful death claim in this case. Therefore, summary judgment was granted for the railroad, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed on grounds that the affiants did not have personal knowledge that federal funds were used to install safety measures at the crossing and could not testify as to the authenticity of some of the documents, and because the railroad did not establish a foundation for the documents under the public and business records exception to the hearsay rule, the unauthenticated documents could not be used to support a summary judgment motion. Thus, the railroad did not meet the evidentiary requirements for summary judgment, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Smith v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 M 278, 187 P3d 639 (2008), followed with regard to introduction of hearsay evidence in Apple Park, L.L.C. v. Applicability of Rule 13(a) to Pleading Replying to Counterclaim: Plaintiff filed a breach of contract action related to the purchase by defendant of a gas station and convenience store. While that case was pending, plaintiff filed another action alleging that defendant breached a separate oral agreement to purchase inventory and additional equipment. The parties agreed that defendant paid the purchase price in full at closing, and defendant moved for summary judgment for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted and contended that the second case was barred by Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., because it was a compulsory counterclaim that should have been raised in the first action. Plaintiff moved to consolidate the cases. The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment and held that the consolidation motion was mooted by dismissal of the action. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Rule 13(a), M.R.Civ.P., a reply to a counterclaim is a pleading, triggering the need for the replying party to assert all counterclaims that arise out of the same transaction or occurrence that is the subject matter of the initial counterclaim. By not raising the claim, a party risks that Rule 13, M.R.Civ.P., will bar the claim in a subsequent action. Plaintiff failed to raise any counterclaims in its response to defendant's counterclaims and the second action was barred. The District Court did not err in considering the motion to consolidate without converting the motion to one for summary judgment prior to granting the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Farmers Co-op Ass'n v. Amsden, LLC, 2007 MT 287, 339 M 452, 171 P3d 690 (2007), distinguishing Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003).

Conversion of Motion to Dismiss Into Motion for Summary Judgment Improper Without Notice to All Parties: Plaintiff brought a complaint against the county for breach of an agreement to sell certain tax-forfeited property to plaintiff. The county moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted on grounds that because no written or oral agreement existed, no specific performance was possible. The District Court converted that motion into a motion for summary judgment and granted summary judgment to the county without giving notice of the conversion to plaintiff. The Supreme Court noted that the distinction between dismissal and summary judgment is more than academic, in that dismissal allows for the possibility of refiling a complaint to withstand dismissal, while summary judgment is a final adjudication on the merits. Thus, conversion of the motion was not harmless error. Plaintiff was entitled to notice of the conversion and a reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to the motion, and failure to do so was reversible error. Meagher v. Butte-Silver Bow City-County, 2007 MT 129, 337 M 339, 160 P3d 552 (2007). See also Plouffe v. St., 2003 MT 62, 314 M 413, 66 P3d 316 (2003).

Covenant of Good Faith at Issue Only if Breach of Contract Occurs — Summary Judgment Improper: Precision Theatrical Effects (PTE), a manufacturer of explosive pyrotechnical materials, and Nickel, PTE's former owner, obtained five loans from United Banks (United), secured by cash, accounts receivable, and assets. The governing documents securing the loans provided that PTE would be in default if PTE did or failed to do anything that caused United to believe that it would have difficulty in collecting on its loans. After PTE's business was raided and Nickel was arrested for possessing and selling dangerous drugs, United froze PTE's accounts despite their current status and notified PTE and Nickel that the loans were in default. After the District Court granted summary judgment to United, PTE and Nickel appealed, alleging that United breached the implied covenant of good faith when it declared a default and froze all bank accounts. United argued that it had legitimate reasons to believe that its ability to collect on the loans had been jeopardized, and therefore, under the terms of the security agreement, PTE and Nickel were in default. The Supreme Court, in reversing the District Court ruling, held that United's belief that it would have difficulty collecting on the loans and whether it acted with honesty when it froze the accounts must be read in conjunction with its obligation to deal in good faith. The breach of duty of good faith is a question of fact not susceptible to summary judgment. Precision Theatrical Effects, Inc. v. United Banks, N.A., 2006 MT 236, 333 M 505, 143 P3d 442 (2006).

Existence of Fiduciary Duty Considered Question of Law, Not Fact — Summary Judgment on Question Proper if No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists: To resolve several inconsistent prior opinions, the Supreme Court held that the issue of whether a fiduciary duty exists between two parties is a question of law, not fact, and thus may be resolved on summary judgment if no genuine issues of material fact exist. Similarly, the issue of whether a special relationship exists between two parties that would give rise to a fiduciary relationship is also a question of law, not fact. In order to determine whether a special relationship exists in cases in which it does not normally exist, such as between a bank and a customer, a court may be required to make a fact-intensive inquiry. The circumstances of a particular relationship are factual, so disputes over material facts will preclude summary judgment, but the conclusion drawn by a court from undisputed facts is one of law, not of fact. Gliko v. Permann, 2006 MT 30, 331 M 112, 130 P3d 155 (2006), overruling Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640 (1993), and Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687 (1993).

Opportunity for Opposing Parties to Present Facts Relevant to Summary Judgment Motion Required: The District Court granted summary judgment in a probate case, awarding a putative common-law spouse a portion of the estate. However, in this case, summary judgment constituted reversible error because the estate was not given notice and a full and fair opportunity to present facts relative to the summary judgment motion and to address issues of material fact regarding the claims of the putative spouse. In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), following Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Trust Matters Subject to Summary Judgment: Two sons, Thomas and William, sought to divide their mother's trust but failed to present sufficient evidence that good cause existed for the division. The District Court granted summary judgment to two other sons who were respondents. Thomas and William appealed on grounds that 72-33-416 necessitates a trial whenever trustees and beneficiaries have a disagreement about a trust, because of the inherent discretion in trust decisions, making summary judgment inappropriate for nearly all trust matters. The Supreme Court disagreed. Not every situation involving family disagreements or moves by beneficiaries will necessarily constitute good cause for a trust decision. Here, Thomas and William were unable to demonstrate that the District Court's conclusion that good cause did not exist was incorrect. Because trust matters are subject to the same principles of summary judgment as other matters, absent a showing of good cause to divide the trust, summary judgment for respondents was proper. In re Stevens Revocable Trust, 2005 MT 106, 327 M 39, 112 P3d 972 (2005).

Failure to Establish Elements of Prima Facie Retaliation Case — Partial Summary Judgment Proper: The elements of a prima facie case under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 are: (1) the plaintiff engaged in a protected activity; (2) thereafter, the employer took an adverse employment action against the plaintiff; and (3) a causal link existed between the protected activity and the employer's action. In cases under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, elements of a prima facie retaliation case generally consist of proof that the charging party was qualified for employment, was engaged in a protected activity, and was subjected to adverse action, as well as proof of a causal connection or other circumstances raising a reasonable inference that the charging party was treated differently because of the protected activity. In the present case, the Supreme Court applied the three-prong burden-shifting test for summary judgment motions in disparate treatment cases set forth in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), to evaluate whether Rolison's complaint constituted a prima facie case. Rolison established the protected activity element of a prima facie case by filing a gender discrimination case that the employer was aware of. However, Rolison failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the adverse employment action of the retaliation claim, thus failing the Heiat test for a prima facie case, so partial summary judgment for the employer on the state and federal discrimination claims was proper. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Wrighten v. Metropolitan Hosp., Inc., 726 F2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1984), and Beaver v. Employer Unaware That Employee Would Be Injured During Routine Job Activity — No Showing of Employer Malice Under Sherner Standard: Olszewski was seriously injured while loading building trusses onto a flatbed truck. Olszewski recovered workers' compensation benefits but also brought an action alleging that the injury was covered under the 1999 intentional act exception in 39-71-413, which was in effect when the injury occurred. The District Court found no showing of malicious action on the part of the employer or foreman and granted summary judgment to the employer and foreman. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the malicious intent standard in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), and affirmed. Olszewski was unable to provide evidence that the employer knew that employees would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident, and absent a showing of that material fact, the statutory exception did not apply and summary judgment was proper. Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004).

Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Breach of Bailment Obligation: Pursuant to a breach of a bailment agreement related to the transfer of 10 horses and tack, plaintiff filed a claim for the value of the property, asserting that under 27-2-202(2), 5 years were allowed to bring the claim as a breach of contract. The District Court concluded that the voluntary bailment agreement was not a contract, but rather an obligation, which was governed by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-202(3), and because the claim was not brought within 3 years, summary judgment for defendants was appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Regardless of the fact that plaintiff characterized the claim as a breach of contract, there was no evidence of an expressed agreement for sale of the property, so defendants were obligated but not contractually required to account for the property. Plaintiff's election to sue on a contract theory did not operate to grant 2 additional years for plaintiff to assert her rights. The District Court's conclusion that plaintiff's action was not timely was correct. Demarest v. Broadhurst, 2004 MT 147, 321 M 470, 92 P3d 1168 (2004).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

No Requirement That Court Take as True Conclusions or Allegations With No Factual Basis or Contrary to What Has Been Adjudicated — Estoppel — Dismissal Proper: In Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 68, 320 M 332, 87 P3d 443 (2004), the District Court held that a husband's parents and sister had no enforceable ownership interests in their own right to disputed marital property because any interest that they arguably had was dependent on the husband's equitable interest, which was litigated in the dissolution action in which the husband denied any interest in the property. Nevertheless, the parents and sister brought a separate action, claiming that the parents were trustors of a trust created for the husband's benefit and that the sister was a successor trustee or trust beneficiary. The District Court dismissed the complaint pursuant to Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., for failure to state a claim. The parents and sister appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not consider matters outside the pleadings, which would have required that the dismissal motion be converted to a summary judgment motion, but properly considered only the complaint and incorporated documents. Moreover, the court was not under any duty to take as true legal conclusions or allegations that had no factual basis or that were contrary to what had already been adjudicated. Any purported interest in the property by the husband was barred by estoppel. The prior decision that adjudicated the husband's interest in the property extinguished any derivative claim that the parents and sister might have had, and the complaint and attached documents supported the District Court's granting of the motion to dismiss. Cowan v. Cowan, 2004 MT 97, 321 M 13, 89 P3d 6 (2004), following Kauffman-Harmon v. Kauffman, 2001 MT 238, 307 M 45, 36 P3d 408 (2001).

Summary Judgment for Third Party Affecting Final Judgment Reviewable on Appeal: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against the subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for the tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The subcontractor contended that the judgment was not appealable because it was not designated in the notice of appeal, as required by former Rule 4(c), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court noted that summary judgments are generally interlocutory and not appealable until final judgment is rendered, but also noted that under former Rule 2, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), any intermediate order or decision properly objected to that involves the merits or that necessarily affects the judgment, except a decision or order from which an appeal may be taken, is subject to review. The summary judgment in this case preceded and affected the final judgment, and because the contractor's objection was preserved, the summary judgment was reviewable on appeal. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

No Waiver of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action on Remand: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Defendant insurer argued that because the Christensens never requested attorney fees in their motion for summary judgment or in their first appeal, their right to attorney fees was waived. Rule 8(a), M.R.Civ.P., requires that a party give notice of facts that the party expects to prove, and the facts must disclose the presence of all elements necessary to make out a claim. In this case, the defendant insurer had notice of the Christensens' desire to seek attorney fees because that relief was specifically prayed for in the initial petition for declaratory judgment, and defendant successfully defended against that request in District Court. However, the Christensens did not prevail until the case was remanded, so waiting to file a motion for attorney fees until prevailing on appeal was proper. Thus, the Christensens did not waive their entitlement to attorney fees. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

Legal Malpractice Action Not Brought Within Statutory Time Limit — Summary Dismissal Proper — Damage Rule Inapplicable: Plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against defendant on December 17, 1999, 3 years and 8 days after the date that plaintiff's damages occurred. The District Court dismissed the claim as untimely under 27-2-206. On appeal, plaintiff contended that under the damage rule set out in Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), and Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994), the statute of limitations should have been tolled until notice of damages was actually received on December 23, 1996, which would have allowed filing until December 23, 1999. The Supreme Court disagreed. The damage rule is not the accepted standard in Montana. Under the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions in 27-2-206, the time for filing is not tolled by a plaintiff's failure to discover damages, but runs from the date that plaintiff discovered or should through reasonable diligence have discovered the act or omission causing the damages. The claim or cause of action accrued on December 9, 1996, and the complaint filed on December 17, 1999, was beyond the statute of limitations, so summary dismissal for defendant was proper. Spolar v. Datsopoulos, 2003 MT 54, 314 M 364, 66 P3d 284 (2003).

No Obligation to Extinguish Lien Until Debt Fully Satisfied — Summary Dismissal of Action for Slander of Title Proper: Following a business default, defendant sought to enforce a lease agreement and received a judgment in Justice's Court for $7,156.56, including interest. In an effort to satisfy the judgment, plaintiff's wife paid $7,121.14. Plaintiff later attempted to refinance the disputed property and found that defendant's lien had not been extinguished, so plaintiff requested a partial satisfaction of judgment to his wife and release of the lien on the judgment. When defendant refused to release the lien, plaintiff sued for slander of title. Slander of title is an action in which one maliciously publishes false matter that brings into question or disparages the title to property, thereby causing special damages to the owner. Defendant was under no obligation to extinguish the lien until the judgment was fully satisfied. Because the wife's payment was $35.42 short of completely satisfying the judgment, defendant could not be said to have maliciously published false matter regarding the lien, so slander of title was not proved, and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Pryor v. Babcock Bldg. Corp., 2002 MT 68, 309 M 222, 45 P3d 35 (2002). See also First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), and Felska v. Goulding, 238 M 224, 776 P2d 530 (1989).

Adequate Notice and Opportunity to Respond to Revised Motion for Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended that the District Court improperly converted a Rule (12)(b), M.R.Civ.P., motion to dismiss to a motion under this rule for summary judgment, arguing that they were denied the opportunity to respond to affidavits submitted by defendant with its reply brief and that the District Court erred when it did not assume the facts stated in plaintiffs' complaint to be true, thus improperly resolving contested issues of fact. The Supreme Court noted that under Gebhardt v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855 (1983), when a District Court intends to convert a motion in this manner, notice should be given to the parties that the court intends to consider matters outside the pleadings, in order to give the party opposing summary judgment or dismissal the opportunity to produce additional facts by affidavit or otherwise that would establish a genuine issue of material fact and thereby avoid summary judgment if possible. However, in this case, the District Court did not convert the motion at a point when plaintiffs had no opportunity to respond. Rather, for reasons not apparent from the record, plaintiffs did not respond to the revised motion, nor at the time that the motion was heard did plaintiffs complain or ask for an opportunity to respond, even though it was clear that the motion for summary judgment would be heard. Instead, plaintiffs went beyond the pleadings in filing an affidavit with their response brief, but offered no further proof, and argued that the factual allegations in the complaint must be taken as true for purposes of a Rule 12(b) motion to dismiss. Therefore, plaintiffs had adequate notice of and opportunity to respond to the motion for summary judgment, and the District Court did not improperly convert the motion. Enger v. Missoula, 2001 MT 142, 306 M 28, 29 P3d 514 (2001).

Failure to Prove Mistake or Fraud in City Determination of Boundary of Special Improvement District — Summary Judgment Proper: The city of Missoula included plaintiffs' property in a storm sewer drainage special improvement district, and plaintiffs filed a complaint, alleging that pursuant to 7-12-4162, they could not be included in the special improvement district absent some benefit to them from the proposed system. The District Court heard contradicting evidence on the question of benefit, but concluded that plaintiffs failed to produce evidence of mistake or fraud as required in Stevens v. Missoula, 205 M 274, 667 P2d 440 (1983), and summarily dismissed plaintiffs' complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under Stevens, a city's determination of benefit and creation of special improvement district boundaries is conclusive absent proof of mistake or fraud that precludes the exercise of sound judgment. Plaintiffs did not satisfy the threshold requirement in Stevens and thus could not prevail even if the facts articulated in the complaint were true. Enger v. Missoula, 2001 MT 142, 306 M 28, 29 P3d 514 (2001).

Interpleader Purporting to Release Potentially Liable Individuals Remanded for Clarification That Only Insurer Released Upon Payment of Policy Limits: The District Court granted an insurer's request in a prayer for interpleader for an order "enjoining and restraining each and all of the defendants from instituting or prosecuting further any proceeding on account of the incident or the insurance policy". Defendants claimed that the order infringed on their right to seek further relief from other potentially liable persons individually after the maximum policy limits were distributed. The Supreme Court noted that the measure of damages for negligence, notwithstanding available insurance proceeds, is the amount that will compensate the injured for all detriment proximately caused, but in this instance, it was not clear whether the insurer specifically requested additional relief for other parties or intended such a comprehensive exclusion of remedies. Pursuant to the principles of subject matter jurisdiction, the District Court should have released only the insurer from further claims, not the other potentially liable individuals involved. The case was remanded for a clarification of the order. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971), and Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004), in which summary judgment was held to be proper under the Sherner standard absent evidence that an employer knew that an employee would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident.

Opinion Regarding Standard of Care in Obtaining Informed Consent Not Novel Scientific Evidence: The plaintiff's expert opined that the defendant physician violated the standard of care regarding informed consent when the physician failed to inform a patient that a greater risk was posed by placement of a thoracic spinal epidural catheter while the patient was anesthetized. The District Court decided that the expert's opinion regarding the standard of care was inadmissible because it was not based on scientific evidence supported by reliable methodology or research and awarded summary judgment to defendant on the basis that without a qualified medical opinion, plaintiff could not prove medical malpractice. In excluding the expert's opinion, the court concluded that plaintiff had attempted to introduce novel scientific evidence of the type contemplated by Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), and Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998). Applying the twofold threshold obligation of a plaintiff in a medical malpractice action set out in Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976), the Supreme Court noted that the Daubert test is limited to novel scientific evidence. Here, plaintiff sought to establish through expert testimony the amount of information that an anesthesiologist should provide to a patient in order to obtain the patient's informed consent, which is not novel scientific evidence. Thus, the District Court erred in relying on Daubert when excluding the expert testimony and in awarding summary judgment based on the conclusion that without a qualified medical opinion, plaintiff could not establish the existence of a legal duty as part of the prima facie case. The case was reversed and remanded. Gilkey v. Schweitzer, 1999 MT 188, 295 M 345, 983 P2d 869, 56 St. Rep. 734 (1999).

Denial of Agister's Lien by Summary Judgment — Vagueness of Underlying Agreement: While acknowledging that pursuant to Heckman & Shell v. Wilson, 158 M 47, 487 P2d 1141 (1971), an agister's lien may be enforceable without further specification in the underlying agreement regarding the price for the services, at a minimum, the material elements of a contract must be present in general terms. In the present case, not only were the material terms missing, but the agreement upon which the lien was based was so vague as to create more questions about the parties' expectations than it did purported certainties about their alleged obligations to perform. Because the agreement on which the claim of an agister's lien against the estate was unenforceable, the District Court did not err in summarily denying the existence of the lien. In re Estate of Bolinger, 1998 MT 303, 292 M 97, 971 P2d 761, 55 St. Rep. 1251 (1998).

District Court's Decision on Motion Reviewed De Novo by Supreme Court — Correct Decision Upheld Even if Reached on Incorrect Grounds: The lower court granted a sewer district's motion for summary judgment, ruling that the district had the right to impose hookup inspection fees on the appellant, Seypar, Inc. The Supreme Court stated that it reviewed the District Court's ruling on a de novo basis, applying the same evaluation as the lower court did. The Supreme Court also stated that in the present case, the facts were stipulated to and that therefore no genuine issues of fact existed. The only issue was to determine whether the District Court correctly concluded that the sewer district was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court held that it would uphold the decision of a District Court, if correct, even if the decision was reached on incorrect grounds. Seypar, Inc. v. Water & Sewer District No. 363, 1998 MT 149, 289 M 263, 960 P2d 311, 55 St. Rep. 578 (1998).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Motion for Summary Judgment Held Sufficient to Prevent Default: Klock brought a civil action against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights. After the defendants' motion to dismiss was denied, the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment. Klock moved for entry of a default judgment, claiming that the defendants had failed to "answer" the complaint. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to grant Klock's motion, holding that a default judgment may be entered under Rule 55, M.R.Civ.P., only if a party has failed to plead or "otherwise defend" against the complaint. The Supreme Court held that the defendants' motion for summary judgment satisfied the requirement that the defendants "otherwise defend" against the complaint. Klock v. Cascade, 943 M 1262, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997), followed in Havre Daily News, LLC v. Havre, 2006 MT 215, 333 M 331, 142 P3d 864 (2006).

Reversal of Summary Judgment and Grant to Other Party: Both parties moved the District Court for summary judgment, the material facts in the case being undisputed. The motion was granted to one party. After examining the facts bearing on the resolution of the legal issues, the Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment and granted summary judgment to the other party, exercising the power to substitute summary judgment as set out in Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), and In re Estate of Langendorf, 262 M 123, 863 P2d 434 (1993). Swank v. Chrysler Ins. Corp., 282 M 376, 938 P2d 631, 54 St. Rep. 390 (1997).

Burden-Shifting Analysis in Employment Discrimination Cases — Pretext for Discrimination: Under the rationale in Tex. Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089 (1981) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973)), according to the U.S. Supreme Court's burden-shifting analysis employed in discrimination cases, once a plaintiff has proved a prima facie case of employment discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reason offered by the defendant was not the true reason, but rather was a pretext for discrimination, and under St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 US 502, 125 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 2742 (1993), the reason cannot be proved to be a pretext for discrimination unless it is shown both that the reason was false and that discrimination was the real reason. At this point, the burden merges with the ultimate burden of persuading the court that the plaintiff has been a victim of intentional discrimination. The plaintiff succeeds either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence. The Montana Supreme Court held in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), that in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has the initial burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. This places the plaintiff, as nonmoving party in the summary judgment context, in the peculiar position of having to prove the case to survive the defendant's summary motion. The Kenyon requirements are thus overruled and the Burdineanalysis adopted for employment discrimination cases. The plaintiff is required to raise an inference of pretext as opposed to proving pretext, so the burden is more aligned with the general requirement of raising a genuine issue of material fact to survive the motion for summary judgment. Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996), overruling Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992). Heiat was followed in Mysse v. Martens, 279 M 253, 926 P2d 765, 53 St. Rep. 1139 (1996), Clark v. Eagle Sys., Inc., 279 M 279, 927 P2d 995, 53 St. Rep. 1150 (1996), and Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Court Required to Consider Allegations in Pleadings — Repetition in Opposition to Summary Judgment Motion Not Necessary to Preserve Claim on Appeal: Calder filed a complaint against the Andersons after falling on steps leading from an apartment rented from the Andersons. In the pleadings, Calder stated that the Andersons negligently failed to maintain the sidewalk in a safe condition in violation of 70-24-303. Summary judgment was granted for the Andersons when the court found that the injuries were not caused by a hidden or lurking danger subjecting the Andersons to liability. On appeal, the Andersons contended that Calder waived consideration of the statutory liability by failing to cite the statute in the opposition to the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that the law applicable to a case could not be waived. Once Calder alleged in District Court that the relevant statute had been violated and cited that statute to the court, it was not necessary to reargue that claim repeatedly in order to preserve the claim for appeal and to avoid waiver. The District Court erred in granting summary judgment. Calder v. Anderson, 275 M 273, 911 P2d 1157, 53 St. Rep. 139 (1996).

Lack of Property Ownership Within Proposed Annexation — No Standing to Challenge Annexation Resolution — Summary Judgment Proper Despite Lack of Notice to Parties of Intent to Convert Motion to Dismiss Into Motion for Summary Judgment: It is error for a court to fail to give formal notice of the intent to convert a motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment, giving the party opposing the motion an opportunity to produce additional facts by affidavit or otherwise that would create a genuine issue of material fact to preclude summary judgment. However, in this case, plaintiffs lacked standing to challenge an annexation resolution because they did not own property within the proposed annexation. Without standing to state a claim, plaintiffs could prove no set of facts in support of their action that would entitle them to relief. Therefore, failure by the court to give the parties notice of conversion of the motion to dismiss was harmless error. Knudsen v. Ereaux, 275 M 146, 911 P2d 835, 53 St. Rep. 83 (1996), following O'Donnell Fire Serv. & Equip. v. Billings, 219 M 317, 711 P2d 822 (1985).

Determination of Constitutional Violation Necessary Element of 42 U.S.C. 1983 Claim — Summary Judgment Precluded: Talley filed a cross-complaint for summary judgment on the question of a violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 and associated attorney fees in connection with a discharge from his employment as a part-time community college instructor. Recognizing that a free speech violation might possibly have occurred, the District Court nevertheless properly dismissed the summary judgment motion because the free speech complaint had not been resolved and a violation of constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities is attendant to a 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim. Consideration of attorney fees prior to settlement of the free speech claim was also premature. Talley v. Flathead Valley Community College, 259 M 479, 857 P2d 701, 50 St. Rep. 889 (1993), affirmed in 273 M 336, 903 P2d 789, 52 St. Rep. 1016 (1995).

Denial of Motion to Change Venue — Explanation Within Court Discretion: Under Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., when a court grants a motion under Rule 12, M.R.Civ.P., or under this rule, the court shall support its order with an explanation of its reason, but there is no comparable requirement for orders denying motions to change venue. A District Court is at liberty to deny a venue motion with or without comment. Therefore, it was not error for a court to provide an explanation for why defendant's motion for change of venue was denied, nor was it error for the court to direct plaintiff to prepare an appropriate memorandum and order for the court to sign. I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993).

Summary Judgment Pertaining to Oil and Gas Lease Based Upon Interpretation of 30 U.S.C. 187a Upheld: The lower court awarded by summary judgment the royalties from an oil and gas lease to the plaintiff Norbeck on the basis that an assignment of the royalties to the defendants had not been approved by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior as required by 30 U.S.C. 187a. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had properly interpreted the federal statute. Norbeck v. Crawford, 254 M 256, 836 P2d 1231, 49 St. Rep. 771 (1992).

Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 Not Barred by Res Judicata — Prior Summary Judgment No Bar to Consideration of Motion to Dismiss — Differing Parties: Plaintiff brought an action against the city of Great Falls to recover damages for violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 in connection with a discharge from employment. The District Court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an action against her immediate supervisor, in the supervisor's official and individual capacity, making the same allegations. The supervisor moved the District Court to dismiss on the basis that the section 1983 claim was res judicata by reason of the summary judgment in the former action, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., the District Court's consideration of the first action was limited to consideration of the pleadings. The Supreme Court also stated that because the immediate supervisor was not a party to the first action, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was able to present all the facts and theories in the first case that are present in the second. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the second action was not barred. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Discretion of One Judge to Reconsider Ruling Made by Another Judge in Same Case: The rule that judges of coordinate jurisdictions sitting in the same court and in the same case may not ordinarily overrule the decisions of each other is not an imperative and does not necessarily mandate that a court does not have discretion, in appropriate circumstances, to reconsider a ruling made by another judge in the same case. Therefore, a second judge was justified in reconsidering a previous ruling, by a judge who later retired, on the question of school district immunity when that issue had been addressed and significantly clarified by a Supreme Court decision subsequent to the initial ruling. Hayworth v. School District No. 19, 243 M 503, 795 P2d 470, 47 St. Rep. 1361 (1990), followed in Teamsters Union Local No. 2 v. C.N.H. Acquisitions, Inc., 2009 MT 92, 350 M 18, 204 P3d 733 (2009).

Foreign Judgment — Summary Judgment Proper: A New Mexico bank successfully sued New Mexico defendants in New Mexico on defaulted loans secured by mortgages on Montana property. The bank then sought foreclosure in Montana. The law of the state where a judgment is rendered controls the interpretation of the effect of the foreign judgment in any subsequent actions between the parties or those with whom there is privity. Under a collateral estoppel analysis, the bank was entitled to summary judgment in Montana. The bank is entitled to attorney fees and costs, including attorney fees on appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48, 46 St. Rep. 1313 (1989).

No Notice of Intent to Treat Dismissal Motion as Summary Judgment — Eventual Result Same: Although the District Court erred in not giving the required notice that it intended to treat the motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment, the matter was not reversed or remanded because the eventual result in the court would have been the same. First Fed. S&L Ass'n of Missoula v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281, 46 St. Rep. 1280 (1989).

Power to Grant Summary Judgment on Issue After Motion to Dismiss Issue Was Denied: The District Court's denial of a motion to dismiss on the res judicata issue did not bind the court as the law of the case or prevent it from granting a summary judgment based on res judicata. The denial was interlocutory, and an interlocutory order can be changed without violating the law of the case doctrine. Burgess v. St., 237 M 364, 772 P2d 1272, 46 St. Rep. 870 (1989).

Failure to File Brief Not Admission That Summary Judgment Motion Well Taken: Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), provides that failure to file a brief by the moving party is considered an admission that the motion is without merit and that failure to file a reply brief an admission that the motion is well taken. The Supreme Court held that the essential question for a District Court deciding a summary judgment motion is whether a genuine issue of material fact exists that cannot be decided on a merely technical fact, such as the filing of briefs on time. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989), followed in SVKV, L.L.C. v. Harding, 2006 MT 297, 334 M 395, 148 P3d 584 (2006), and Chapman v. Maxwell, 2014 MT 35, 374 Mont. 12, 322 P.3d 1029. See also Konitz v. Claver, 1998 MT 27, 287 M 301, 954 P2d 1138, 55 St. Rep. 95 (1998).

Law of the Case Doctrine Not Applicable When Separate Issue Involved: Plaintiff argued that the District Court made findings involving disputed issues of fact, thereby precluding plaintiff from presenting certain proof at the time of trial. The court's summary dismissal of the issue of applicability of a statute of limitations did not preclude plaintiff from attempting to prove facts underlying a malpractice claim because it was an issue separate from the merits of the case. The law of the case doctrine does not apply when a separate issue is involved. Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988).

Motion to Dismiss Treated as Motion for Summary Judgment: A motion to dismiss that raised the failure to state a claim as a defense and presented facts outside the pleading was properly treated as a motion for summary judgment. Am. Medical Oxygen Co. v. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center, 232 M 165, 755 P2d 37, 45 St. Rep. 962 (1988).

Motions to Dismiss Properly Converted to Motions for Summary Judgment: Defendants brought motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P., and in response, plaintiff attached 11 documents to his brief opposing the motions, arguing the contents of the documents throughout the brief. The District Court considered the documents, excluded nothing presented to it, converted the motions to dismiss to motions for summary judgment, and dismissed the action as barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff did not appear at the oral hearing, but later claimed he had no opportunity to present material pertinent to a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found that by introducing the documents and inviting consideration of them, plaintiff was fairly apprised that the trial court would look beyond the pleadings and could treat the motions to dismiss as motions for summary judgment. Bretz v. Ayers, 232 M 132, 756 P2d 1115, 45 St. Rep. 936 (1988), citing Grove v. Mead School District, 753 F2d 1528 (9th Cir. 1985). Bretz was followed in Koke v. Little Shell Tribe of Chippewa Indians of Mont., Inc., 2003 MT 121, 315 M 510, 68 P3d 814 (2003), and Conway v. Benefis Health Sys., Inc., 2013 MT 73, 369 Mont. 309, 297 P.3d 1200.

Transcribed Negotiation Session Not Sworn Testimony — Consideration Not Required: Appellant argued that a negotiation session between the parties, transcribed by a court reporter, should have been considered by the trial court. The Supreme Court held that because it was not sworn testimony, the lower court need not consider it in proceedings for summary judgment. Wright v. St., 231 M 324, 752 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 652 (1988).

Existence of Duty of Good Faith as Question of Law: The breach of a duty of good faith is a question of fact not susceptible to summary judgment. However, the existence of such a duty is a question of law properly determined during summary judgment proceedings. Simmons v. Jenkins, 230 M 429, 750 P2d 1067, 45 St. Rep. 328 (1988).

Disposal of Personal Injury Case by Summary Judgment — Negligence as a Matter of Law: Summary judgment is rarely proper in personal injury cases because of the peculiarly exclusive nature of the concept of negligence. Negligence is normally a question of fact; however, in certain cases where reasonable minds cannot differ, the cause of an accident may be a question of law for the court to determine. In determining comparative negligence between a driver who passed while visibility in the left lane was obstructed and the state's obligation to provide and maintain safe highways, the only conclusion to be reached was that the driver's negligence exceeded that of the state. Summary judgment was proper in determining negligence as a matter of law. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), citing Hartley v. Washington, 698 P2d 77 (Wash. 1985), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988), Christopherson v. White, Inc., 250 M 118, 817 P2d 1165, 48 St. Rep. 891 (1991), and Pappas v. Midwest Motor Express, Inc., 268 M 347, 886 P2d 918, 51 St. Rep. 1288 (1994), and distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence. Dillard was followed in Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996), and Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Failure of Broker to Disclose When Commission Due: A party who contracted with a real estate broker for an exclusive listing was unaware that a transfer of title in lieu of foreclosure would constitute a conveyance entitling broker to a commission, and the broker never informed the party of that fact. Summary judgment was improper where there may have been a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the broker breached a fiduciary duty to disclose. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

Promissory Estoppel Requiring Reversal of Summary Judgment — No Will Produced: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment, finding that genuine issues of material fact existed regarding testimony that an original will had been altered, yet no changed will was ever produced, and that all parties agreed to abide by deceased's wishes, but there was some disagreement as to what those wishes were. Further, appellant's reliance on the promise to abide resulted in potential injury and invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel, precluding summary judgment. Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986).

No Breach of Implied Covenant Established — Summary Judgment Not Upheld: On an appeal from summary judgment dismissing a wrongful discharge complaint against a religious school where the teacher was dismissed without notice or hearing, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment could not be upheld on the basis that no breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was established in the record. Miller v. Catholic Diocese of Great Falls, 224 M 113, 728 P2d 794, 43 St. Rep. 2059 (1986). Annotator's note: Summary judgment was upheld in this case on grounds that allowing the lawsuit to go forward would impermissibly interfere with the free exercise of religion.

Ambiguous Insurance Policy Provision — Summary Judgment Reversed: An insurance policy that did not clearly state whether it provided uninsured motor vehicle coverage when the driver was insured but the ownership of the vehicle was not was held to be ambiguous; therefore, under the rationale that an ambiguous provision is construed against the insurance company, the policy was interpreted to provide coverage. The District Court grant of summary judgment holding that the policy did not provide uninsured motor vehicle coverage was reversed. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 223 M 215, 725 P2d 821, 43 St. Rep. 1667 (1986).

Unresolved Issues Regarding Royalty Interests — Summary Judgment Precluded: Prior to 1955, McDonald & Eide, Inc. (M&E) owned the entire working interest in a lease on a producing oil well. On July 12, 1955, M&E assigned 100% of its interest in the south half and 50% of its interest in the north half to H. W. McDonald, but this assignment was not recorded until 1963. After M&E's corporate charter was repealed for failure to pay taxes, corporate officers of M&E purported to assign M&E's total working interest to V. Eide and J. Von DeLinde in 1961, but this assignment conflicted with the one previously made to McDonald, who filed a quiet title action. Thereafter, all three entered an agreement with Continental Oil Company (Continental) assigning to the company an undivided one-half interest in the lease. While the quiet title action was pending, McDonald assigned undivided interests to G. Huntley, D. Iverson, and A. Larson with the intent to convey to each the respective share "held in suspense by Continental". In 1964, final judgment quieted title in McDonald subject to the agreement with Continental. In 1965, M&E stockholders appointed F. Gunnip as receiver, and he sued M&E corporate officers to recover the lease and other property. A 1970 judgment voided the 1961 agreement, and in 1976, final judgment provided that Gunnip owned one-half interest in the north half of the lease while Eide, Von DeLinde, and Continental were held to have no interest. Shell Oil Company, responsible for disbursing the lease proceeds, continued to pay Continental one-half of the proceeds under the agreement with McDonald, and although Gunnip was owner of a 50% interest, he received only a 25% share of proceeds. In 1981, Gunnip assigned a 3.75% interest in the north half to Huntley and a 2.5% interest in the north half to R. Schwinn. Huntley became aware that Gunnip was not receiving his full share, so Gunnip, Huntley, and Schwinn sued Continental, requesting an additional one-eighth of the proceeds. The District Court granted summary judgment to Continental in 1985, but the Supreme Court reversed on appeal, holding that: (1) unresolved issues of material fact remained regarding Continental's interest; (2) a trial must be had to assess Continental's interest considering potential application of adverse possession, waiver, and estoppel; and (3) Continental's asserted 50% interest in the north half of the lease must be tested against the interest of McDonald's assignees and successors in interest. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Gunnip v. Cont. Oil Co., 223 M 141, 727 P2d 1315, 43 St. Rep. 1605 (1986). On remand, the District Court neglected to assess Continental's interest as directed. On later appeal, the Supreme Court granted supervisory control and determined that: (1) plaintiffs failed to present substantial evidence to support a theory of adverse possession, waiver, or estoppel against Continental; (2) Continental owned an undivided one-half interest in the working interest in the north half of the lease; and (3) Gunnip and his assigns owned the remaining half of the working interest in the north half. Cont. Oil Co. v. Elks Nat'l Foundation, 235 M 438, 767 P2d 1324, 46 St. Rep. 121 (1989).

No Property Damages in Changing Golf Handicap or in Letter of Reprimand — Summary Judgment Proper: Summary judgment was proper absent any showing of property damages resulting from lowering of a golfer's handicap or from the sending of a letter of reprimand by the board of directors of a private golf corporation. District Court held, and the Supreme Court affirmed, that: (1) a golfer had no right to a specific handicap but rather must earn one in accordance with standards and procedures of the U.S. Golf Association; and (2) in the absence of a clear allegation and convincing proof of fraud or bad faith, the actions of a duly delegated board of a private social club shall not be reviewed by the courts. Johnson v. Green Meadow Country Club, Inc., 222 M 405, 721 P2d 1287, 43 St. Rep. 1368 (1986).

Failure to Respond to Requests for Admissions — Summary Judgment Proper: Defendant sought to have the Supreme Court relieve it of the effect of Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P., that considers matters in requests for admission that are not responded to as admitted and conclusively established. Defendant argued that, since it had already denied the matter in question in its answer to the complaint, it should not be required to deny the matter again. The court affirmed the order granting summary judgment, finding ample opportunity for defendant to respond to the request for admissions. Holmes & Turner v. Steer-In, 222 M 282, 721 P2d 1276, 43 St. Rep. 1266 (1986).

Issue of Whether Motion Properly Served — Not Appealable: The issue of whether there was a contested issue of fact regarding whether a motion for summary judgment was properly served is a question for the District Court and cannot be raised on appeal. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986), citing In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Summary Judgment — Unlawful Detainer: Appellant who refused to respond to requests for admissions thereby admitted he had no permission or legal right to reside on the property. Respondent followed proper statutory procedure in attempting to have appellant quit the property; therefore, District Court properly granted summary judgment to respondent concerning appellant's unlawful detainer. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986).

Questions of Anticipated Harm and Duty of Ordinary Care as Material Issues of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In reversing a summary judgment as improper, the Supreme Court found that material questions of fact for a jury existed on the issues of whether: (1) the town of Whitehall should have anticipated that harm would be caused by the condition of the sidewalk despite the knowledge and obviousness of the condition; and (2) the town of Whitehall exercised ordinary care to keep the sidewalk reasonably safe. Even if it appeared that recovery under these issues was very remote, they constituted genuine issues of material fact; therefore, summary judgment was not appropriate. Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986).

Reversal of Summary Judgment — Exception to Exclusiveness of Workers' Compensation Remedy: A summary judgment was granted by the District Court for the stated reason that because of the employee's application for and receipt of workers' compensation benefits, remedies were exclusive to the Workers' Compensation Act. Application and receipt of benefits resulted in an election pursuant to 39-71-411, thereby barring a common-law tort action against the employer. In reversing the summary judgment, the Supreme Court held that a narrow exception to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy existed when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee. Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986).

Hearing on Motion for Summary Judgment — Purpose: The purpose of a hearing on a motion for summary judgment is not to resolve factual issues but to determine whether there is any genuine issue of material fact in dispute. The opposing party's facts must be material and substantial. Implications based on the opposing party's opinions are not enough. The presentation of factual issues in conclusory fashion in briefs is not an appropriate means of opposing a motion for summary judgment. Westlake v. Osborne, 220 M 91, 713 P2d 548, 43 St. Rep. 200 (1986).

Open Range — Question of Law: The plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries she suffered when she swerved to avoid defendant's horse that was standing on a secondary highway. The District Court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Neither the presence of privately constructed fences nor the lack of designation in zoning regulations indicates an area is not open range. Open range designation is a legal determination, not a question of fact for the jury. The defendant was not obligated to keep his livestock off the secondary highway, and the order of the District Court granting summary judgment was not error. Siegfried v. Atchison, 219 M 14, 709 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1807 (1985).

Summary Judgment — Federal Boiler Inspection Act: Summary judgment on the issue of whether the presence of an obstructing object on the floor of a locomotive compartment violated the federal Boiler Inspection Act (45 U.S.C. 22, et seq.) was proper when a federal regulation (49 C.F.R. 229.119(c)) prohibited obstructions on the floors of railway cars and appellant presented nothing to counter the evidence of a Boiler Inspection Act violation. Anderson v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 456, 709 P2d 641, 42 St. Rep. 1738 (1985).

Summary Judgment Without Evidence or Jury — Broad Review: When a case is disposed of below on motion for summary judgment before a judge sitting without a jury and no testimony is taken as the facts are relatively uncontested, the scope of review is much broader than in other appeals. The Supreme Court is free to make its own examination of the entire case and reach a conclusion in accordance with its findings. Furthermore, the court will uphold the result below if it is correct, regardless of the reasons given below for the result. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984), followed in McCain v. Batson, 233 M 288, 760 P2d 725, 45 St. Rep. 1495 (1988), and in In re Estate of Pelzman, 261 M 461, 863 P2d 1019, 50 St. Rep. 1408 (1993).

Negligence Issue — Not Normally Susceptible to Summary Judgment: Plaintiff was injured when a car struck her as she was crossing a street at an intersection. Plaintiff sued the driver of the car and a beer distributing company whose truck was at least partially blocking one of four lanes of traffic and the intersection. The District Court granted summary judgment to the distributor. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's decision, holding that issues of negligence are not ordinarily susceptible to summary judgment. There was a material issue of fact as to whether the truck was illegally parked, and if so, whether the truck's position was a proximate cause of the accident. Hendrickson v. Neiman, 204 M 367, 665 P2d 219, 40 St. Rep. 909 (1983).

Improper to Enforce Foreign Judgment by Summary Judgment Against Defendants: A default judgment was obtained in Colorado against defendants, Montana residents, in a case which arose from defendants' participation in a reciprocal interinsurance agreement. Some of the subscribers to the agreement were Colorado residents. Plaintiffs sued on the judgment in Montana, and the District Court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's refusal to enforce the judgment in Montana, ruling that enforcement of the judgment would be a violation of the federal due process clause because the defendants had not had sufficient "minimum contacts" with the state of Colorado to warrant the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendants. The court stated that the provision of the Colorado long-arm statute that covered causes of action arising from "contracting to insure any person, property or risk residing or located within this state at the time of contracting" was not applicable because this was not the sort of "company" that was contemplated when the long-arm statutes were drafted. The court further stated that the defendants did not know the name of the insurance company which issued the policy and had not purposely availed themselves of the privilege of conducting activities within the state of Colorado. Benham v. Woltermann, 201 M 149, 653 P2d 135, 39 St. Rep. 2017 (1982).

Summary Judgment Proper When Statutory Language Excludes Claimant's Recovery: Logging company contracted with U.S. Forest Service to log an area. Logging company's subcontractor arranged for third company to provide equipment and operators to do actual logging. In the course of the logging, a chainsaw backfired and caused a fire. The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) extinguished the fire at a substantial cost and sued the contractors for the cost of the work, alleging both a violation of 50-63-103 under an absolute liability theory and common-law negligence. The District Court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the statutory claim, ruling that the statute applied only to the intentional setting of a fire. The jury found no negligence. DNRC appealed the summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. Mont. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation v. Clark Fork Logging Co., Inc., 198 M 494, 646 P2d 1207, 39 St. Rep. 1146 (1982).

Denial of Defendant's Motion Reviewable Upon Judgment for Claimant: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnification against the previous owner, the trial court's order denying the county's motion for summary judgment was reviewable on appeal by the county because a final judgment was entered for the purchasers. Nonappealable interlocutory orders are reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Notice of Covenants — Forfeiture — Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs purchased real property on a contract for deed from defendants subject to restrictive covenants filed after the contract was drawn but before it was signed. Some months later the sellers sent the buyers notice of default, citing the covenants. The issues on appeal related to summary judgment. Under Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., the moving party must show he is entitled to summary judgment. The sellers were found to have met the burden inasmuch as the validity and genuineness of all the documents in question were admitted by both parties, along with the signatures and dates of the documents. The reference in the contract put all parties on constructive notice of the covenants. The buyers failed to carry their ensuing burden to show issues of material fact and, accordingly, granting of sellers' motion for partial summary judgment was upheld. The lower court's ruling denying the buyers' motion for summary judgment was reversed. The sellers' counterclaim on this motion had raised the issue of violation of the covenants by the buyers, but the buyers argued that summary judgment should have been granted because the remedy sought by the sellers (forfeiture) was improper. The Supreme Court held that when a violation of the covenants would not defeat the main objective or purpose of the contract, a remedy of forfeiture was not warranted. The case was remanded. Van Uden v. Hendrickson, 189 M 164, 615 P2d 220 (1980).

Interlocutory Summary Judgment — No Appeal Allowed: Where an order of summary judgment is interlocutory, the case is not ripe for appellate review and any appeal thereon must be dismissed without prejudice. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Improper Where Rights of All Parties Have Not Been Adjudicated: An order granting summary judgment is not final where the rights and liabilities of all parties have not been adjudicated. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Order for Summary Judgment — Findings and Conclusions Not Required: Where the court resolved a dispute between the parties involving the respondent's right to a division of property by granting respondent's motion for summary judgment on his complaint to quiet title and for an accounting of income, but granted the motion without making findings of fact or conclusions of law, no findings or conclusions were necessary, as provided in Rule 52(2), M.R.Civ.P. This was not a case in which a dismissal was granted for failure of the plaintiff to prosecute or for violation of the court's rules under Rule 41(b), M.R.Civ.P. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979).

Prior Knowledge of Condition — Summary Judgment for Adverse Party: Plaintiff rented a residence from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The BIA replaced the front steps of the residence with steps that were not as long horizontally. Plaintiff caught her foot in the depression remaining from the old steps and fractured her ankle. Her knowledge of the condition prior to the injury precludes her recovery, and summary judgment must be rendered in favor of the defendant. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Former Rule 56(a). For claimant

Knowledge of Defendant Critical in Assessing Foreseeability of Plaintiff: The plaintiff's daughter committed suicide at a boarding school. Contrary to the school's policy, the daughter was admitted even though she had a history of suicide attempts, and this information was not conveyed to those working with her. The plaintiff sued the school and a number of interrelated entities. At trial, the District Court limited the evidence to what the daughter knew, what was within her general knowledge, or what was directly related to her death. The District Court did not permit the plaintiff to introduce evidence of the defendants' knowledge or of their prior bad acts, ruling that the evidence would be too prejudicial. A jury concluded that the defendants were not liable for the daughter's suicide. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing evidence of the defendants' prior acts and their knowledge. She argued that the evidence was relevant in determining whether the daughter was a "foreseeable plaintiff" for purposes of negligence. The Supreme Court agreed with the plaintiff, holding that the determination of whether a plaintiff is foreseeable depends on the knowledge of the defendants, citing Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601. The Supreme Court remanded the case to District Court for a new trial. Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625.

Denial of Motion to Amend Based on Motion for Summary Judgment — Abuse of Discretion: Leave to amend a complaint should be freely given absent prejudice to the opposing party. The plaintiffs' motion to amend their complaint regarding the standard of care for informed consent was filed before the defendant's motion for summary judgment was filed. The District Court addressed the motion for summary judgment before it addressed the motion to amend and then based its decision to deny the motion to amend upon its order of summary judgment. The District Court should have first considered the prior motion to amend under former Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and then addressed the summary judgment motion in the context of its ruling on the motion to amend. Griffin v. Moseley, 2010 MT 132, 356 Mont. 393, 234 P.3d 869. See also Hansen v. Bozeman Police Dept., 2015 MT 143, 379 Mont. 284, 350 P.3d 372, in which the motion to amend was denied when leave was requested after the close of discovery.

No Violation of Pretrial Order Precluding Evidence of Negligence by Plaintiff's Employer — New Trial Properly Denied: Plaintiff was employed by a vocational day-care program that took developmentally disabled persons on day outings. Plaintiff was assaulted by a developmentally disabled person from a group home managed by defendant corporation and sued the corporation for negligence for failing to control the assailant. Before trial, the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion to exclude any evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer and ruled that defendant had a special relationship of custody and control over the disabled person and thus had a legal duty of care to those placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by any breach of that duty. Nevertheless, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that when defense counsel repeatedly referred to the individual planning process for the assailant, in which plaintiff's employer was a partner, blame for the injury was thereby shifted to plaintiff's employer in violation of the pretrial order and prevented plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. The Supreme Court disagreed, pointing out that plaintiffs opened the door by presenting evidence regarding the individual planning process in questioning plaintiffs' first witness and that both parties subsequently presented evidence about the process. Further, evidence regarding the individual planning process was relevant to a limit on defendant's ability to monitor the assailant and did not equate to evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer, nor did defense counsel ever attempt to establish that any breach of legal duty by the employer led to plaintiff's injury. Thus, the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, and the verdict was affirmed. Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004), distinguishing Cech v. St., 183 M 75, 598 P2d 584 (1979), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160 (1998), St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103 (1998), Unmack v. Deaconess Medical Center, 1998 MT 262, 291 M 280, 967 P2d 783 (1998), and Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Liability of Tortfeasors Acting in Concert: Two defendants who were passengers in a car that was involved in a chase of and subsequent accident with another vehicle claimed that because they were not in control of the vehicle and did not make any encouraging statements to the driver, they could not be held liable for a tort or for injuries resulting from the accident. However, undisputed facts showed that they voluntarily joined in the pursuit for the purpose of eventually assaulting the occupants of the other vehicle and that they helped to free their own vehicle when it became stuck on a fence, thereby substantially assisting in the chase and encouraging the driver's actions. These facts showed that they acted in concert as tortfeasors, as defined in part in Restatement (Second) of Torts 876 (1979), and were subject to liability; therefore, a partial summary judgment for plaintiff on the issue of liability was proper. Sloan v. Fauque, 239 M 383, 784 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1767 (1989). But see Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625, in which the District Court properly denied partial summary judgment when the plaintiff did not definitively show that the defendants knew that the tortfeasor had breached a duty to the plaintiff's daughter and nonetheless provided substantial assistance or encouragement to the tortfeasor.

Strict Liability for Railroad Safety Under Federal Act — Contributory Negligence No Factor — Summary Judgment Proper: A motion for summary judgment was properly granted to claimant when the railroad admitted violation of portions of the federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. 1, et seq., since under the Act violation by a carrier of a specific safety requirement is held to constitute negligence as a matter of law regardless of a showing of negligence on an employee's part. Plouffe v. Burlington N., Inc., 224 M 467, 730 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 2341 (1986).

Burden of Proof: The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of establishing the absence of any genuine issue of fact, and the party opposing the motion must supply evidence supporting the existence of a genuine fact issue. Pretty on Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979), followed in Randolf V. Peterson, Inc. v. J.R. Simplot Co., 239 M 1, 778 P2d 879, 46 St. Rep. 1463 (1989).

Enforcement of Foreign Divorce Decree: Plaintiff in an action to enforce alimony provisions of a final, unappealed foreign divorce decree was properly granted summary judgment when no factual issues were raised by defendant but ultimate issues of law that are res judicata. Cicinia v. Cicinia, 173 M 39, 566 P2d 61 (1977).

Negligence Actions — Application of Rule: Ordinarily, issue of negligence is not susceptible of summary adjudication but should motion for summary judgment be made, burden is on moving party to establish clearly that there is no factual issue to be determined and opposing party does not have burden of showing prima facie case. Mally v. Asanovich, 149 M 99, 423 P2d 294 (1967), distinguished in Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Former Rule 56(b). For defending party

Failure to Satisfactorily Serve Unnecessary Affidavits — No Error: In a motion for summary judgment involving a self-proved will admitted to probate, it was not abuse of process for the testator to fail to satisfactorily serve affidavits on the challenger of the will when the District Court found that the challenger, having the burden, demonstrated no genuine issue of material fact. Any insufficiency of process by the testator was therefore immaterial; no further affidavits were required for consideration of the motion for summary judgment, and the District Court's decision was not based on any information contained in the affidavits. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

No Relationship Between Parties — No Violation of Unfair Trade Practices Act — Summary Judgment Appropriate: The estate of a man who was severely injured in a car accident claimed that a Medicaid eligibility company located in a hospital violated the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act (UTPA) when the hospital later billed the patient directly instead of first billing Medicaid for its services. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the company because there was no relationship between the parties that supported a claim under the UTPA, given that the mother of the man had only one conversation with an employee of the company, the estate was never a client of the company, and there was no contract between the parties. Estate of Donald v. Kalispell Regional Medical Center, 2011 MT 166, 361 Mont. 179, 258 P.3d 395.

No Special Relationship Established — No Fiduciary Duty — Summary Judgment for Defendant Proper: The estate of a man who was severely injured in a car accident filed claims of breach of implied covenant of fair dealing and breach of fiduciary duty against a Medicaid eligibility company located in a hospital when the hospital later billed the patient directly instead of first billing Medicaid for its services. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the company, holding that no special relationship triggering a fiduciary duty was created between the parties when the mother of the man had only one conversation with an employee of the company, the estate was never a client of the company, and there was no contract between the parties. Estate of Donald v. Kalispell Regional Medical Center, 2011 MT 166, 361 Mont. 179, 258 P.3d 395.

Failure to Have Anesthesiologist Immediately Available Not Considered Breach of Standard of Care — Summary Dismissal of Medical Malpractice Claim Against Anesthesiologist Affirmed: Parents sued an anesthesiologist partnership for failing to have an anesthesiologist immediately available at all relevant times during the birth of twins. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and the parents appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The parents failed to produce expert testimony establishing defendants' breach of any applicable standard of medical care, and the undisputed facts showed that there was no breach of any standard of care for failure to have an anesthesiologist immediately available at all relevant times. B.J. & J.J. v. Schultz, 2009 MT 245, 351 M 436, 214 P3d 772 (2009).

No Exception Shown to Rule on Nonliability of Owner to Employee of Subcontractor — Summary Judgment Proper: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court found that defendant was not liable and granted summary judgment for defendant. Fabich appealed on grounds that the court incorrectly rejected Fabich's theories of liability. Generally, an owner, employer, or general contractor does not have a duty to prevent injuries to an independent contractor's employees, but Fabich asserted that defendant nevertheless had a duty under three recognized exceptions to the general rule, claiming that defendant negligently exercised retained control, that the activity was inherently dangerous, and that defendant had a nondelegable duty (see Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), and Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000)). The Supreme Court examined each exception and affirmed summary judgment. First, Fabich's theory of negligence in exercising retained control failed because defendant did not retain control over the working circumstances. Second, the theory of inherently dangerous activity failed because the hazards associated with the job were normally encountered in the workplace and did not call for particular precautions. Third, there was nothing in the contract establishing that defendant assumed responsibility for initiating, maintaining, and supervising safety precautions, so defendant had no nondelegable duty. Absent a genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's liability, summary judgment was proper. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

Acceptance of Partial Payment After Demanding Full Payment — Waiver of Right to Statutory Damages — Summary Judgment Warranted for Violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act: Plaintiff collection agency sought to collect $148.96 for eight of defendant's bad checks, plus a $30 service charge for each check, for a total of $388.96. Defendant sent a partial payment, which plaintiff accepted, but missed two promised payments, so plaintiff filed suit for the balance due, plus statutory damages of $100 for each of the eight checks. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court conclusion that the right of a payee on a dishonored check to pursue statutory damages is a right created solely for the payee's benefit and is subject to waiver under 1-3-204 and that by accepting a partial payment after demanding full payment, plaintiff waived the right to statutory damages under 27-1-717. In order to reinstate the right to statutory damages, plaintiff was required to make further demand for full payment and wait the requisite 10 days before filing suit. The District Court also held that by seeking statutory damages without giving the requisite demand, plaintiff had attempted to collect an amount that was not permitted by law, in violation of 15 U.S.C. 1692f(1) of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Plaintiff contended that any mistake was a bona fide error, relieving plaintiff of liability under 15 U.S.C. 1692k(c). The Supreme Court again affirmed, accepting the majority view of Circuit Courts that the bona fide error defense is available only for clerical and factual errors and that plaintiff's mistake of law did not make its action any less intentional and was insufficient to rise to the level of a bona fide error. Summary judgment for defendant was proper. Collection Bureau Serv., Inc. v. Morrow, 2004 MT 84, 320 M 478, 87 P3d 1024 (2004). See also Baker v. G.C. Serv. Corp., 677 F2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982).

No Negligence by Architect if Professional Information Not Communicated in Absence of Contract: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence action against the architect who had provided preliminary design parameters and building specifications for the facility. The District Court summarily dismissed the third-party claim, and the contractor appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994), and Restatement (Second) of Torts 552 (1976), the court held that the architect owed no duty of care to the contractor because the contractor had no contract for the architect's services and failed to prove that the architect communicated professional information with the intention that the information be relied upon by the contractor. Absent a duty of care, there was no breach, so the third-party action failed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was proper. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Action Not Brought Within Statutory Time Limit — Summary Dismissal Proper — Damage Rule Inapplicable: Plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against defendant on December 17, 1999, 3 years and 8 days after the date that plaintiff's damages occurred. The District Court dismissed the claim as untimely under 27-2-206. On appeal, plaintiff contended that under the damage rule set out in Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), and Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994), the statute of limitations should have been tolled until notice of damages was actually received on December 23, 1996, which would have allowed filing until December 23, 1999. The Supreme Court disagreed. The damage rule is not the accepted standard in Montana. Under the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions in 27-2-206, the time for filing is not tolled by a plaintiff's failure to discover damages, but runs from the date that plaintiff discovered or should through reasonable diligence have discovered the act or omission causing the damages. The claim or cause of action accrued on December 9, 1996, and the complaint filed on December 17, 1999, was beyond the statute of limitations, so summary dismissal for defendant was proper. Spolar v. Datsopoulos, 2003 MT 54, 314 M 364, 66 P3d 284 (2003).

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Defendant moved to dismiss the claims, and the District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claim and delivery require that the claimant prove that property is wrongfully detained and that the claimant has the right to immediate possession at the time that the action is brought. However, in this case, there was insufficient evidence that defendant wrongfully detained the tractor because defendant had no contractual relationship with plaintiff regarding the tractor and owed no contractual duty to return the tractor to plaintiff. Absent evidence of wrongful detainer, there was no basis for plaintiff to recover damages, so summary judgment was proper. 1st Bank v. Winderl, 2002 MT 339, 313 M 306, 60 P3d 998 (2002).

Failure to Prove Conduct a Cause in Fact of Alleged Damage — Summary Judgment Proper: Abraham's townhouse basement flooded, so Nelson, the builder of the townhouse, was sued for negligently designing and building the residence, breaching implied warranties of quality workmanship, good construction, and habitability, and causing the basement to flood. Causation is one of four elements that must be proved in a negligence action, and except in cases of intervening cause, proof of causation is satisfied by proof that a party's conduct was a cause in fact of the damage alleged. Here, when Nelson presented Abraham's deposition testimony that Abraham did not know the cause of the flooding, Nelson met the initial burden of demonstrating that no material question of fact existed regarding the element of causation, and the burden shifted to Abraham to provide facts to prove causation. However, Abraham could not merely point to lack of evidence as the factor creating a material question, nor did Abraham's suspicions or unsupported conclusory or speculative statements raise a genuine issue of material fact. Abraham could not merely rest on evidence of Nelson's negligence, but rather was required to show that Nelson's negligence was the cause in fact of Abraham's injury. Abraham failed to submit facts to create a material question upon which the District Court could determine whether Nelson's actions in designing and building the townhouse were the cause in fact of the flooding, so summary judgment for Nelson was proper. Abraham v. Nelson, 2002 MT 94, 309 M 366, 46 P3d 628 (2002). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), Gentry v. Douglas Hereford Ranch, Inc., 1998 MT 182, 290 M 126, 962 P2d 1205 (1998), and Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

Summary Judgment as Final Judgment on Merits for Purposes of Collateral Estoppel: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued the state and an assistant state fire inspector for negligence in failing to discover construction defects in fireplaces in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky, Montana, claiming that the inspector's negligence ultimately resulted in a fire that destroyed part of the condominiums. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, dismissing the state and the inspector. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly applied collateral estoppel against the plaintiffs based on previous litigation involving structural defects in the same property. The Supreme Court found that the District Court took judicial notice of the previous litigation, that the construction of the fireplaces was an issue in that previous litigation, and that the plaintiffs in the present case knew or should have known of the defects in the fireplaces. In order to apply collateral estoppel there must be, inter alia, a final judgment on the merits in a previous case. The summary judgment to which the plaintiffs in the present case were a party, dismissing other defendants in that previous case, was a final judgment on the merits of the case. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990).

Challenge of Validity of Release on Basis of Unconscionability — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff signed a release for personal injuries with an insurance company in exchange for $8,900. Plaintiff later sued insureds, who were granted summary judgment after pleading the affirmative defense of release. However, a release is governed by contract law and may be rescinded for the same reasons that allow rescission of a contract. Therefore, the validity of a release may be challenged on the basis of unconscionability. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment after finding the release was unconscionable based on: (1) plaintiff's dire financial situation, lack of education and legal advice, and vulnerability; (2) substantial uncertainty as to the extent of injury and future prognosis at the time of settlement; and (3) haste in executing the release. Taken together, the circumstances raised an issue of fact whether justice was done, precluding summary judgment. Kelly v. Widner, 236 M 523, 771 P2d 142, 46 St. Rep. 591 (1989).

Failure to Obtain Degree — University's Discretion — Summary Judgment Upheld: The University was entitled to summary judgment against plaintiff's claim of bad faith and breach of contract when plaintiff failed to fulfill his duties under the contract he alleged. The discretion vested in the University is the core substantive principle entitling it to summary judgment. The University did not abuse its discretion. Bindrim v. Univ. of Mont., 235 M 199, 766 P2d 861, 45 St. Rep. 2316 (1988).

National Guardsman Injured on Weekend Drill — No Right to Sue State — Summary Judgment Upheld: The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment granted state by District Court because: (1) issues raised on appeal were not genuine issues of material fact but rather questions of law, therefore summary judgment was proper; (2) the National Guard is a military force, not a political subdivision of the state, so appellant had no right to sue under the Tort Claims Act (Title 2, ch. 9, parts 1 through 3); and (3) traditionally, the federal government and state governments have not been held liable in tort for injuries that arise in the course of activity incident to military service (Feres v. U.S., 340 US 135, 95 L Ed 152, 71 S Ct 153 (1950)). Evans v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 223 M 482, 726 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1930 (1986), distinguished in Grove v. Mont. Army Nat'l Guard, 264 M 498, 872 P2d 791, 51 St. Rep. 366 (1994), and overruled in Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614, 54 St. Rep. 380 (1997). Trankel was followed in Lake v. St., 282 M 484, 938 P2d 698, 54 St. Rep. 442 (1997).

Summary Judgment Based on Earlier Settlement Agreement: A compromise agreement, when the basis for a final judgment, generally operates as a merger and bar of all preexisting claims and causes of action. Thus, it was proper to grant defendant's motion for summary judgment in an action when the underlying cause of action had been a preexisting and related claim to an earlier action that had been dismissed with prejudice. Webb v. First Nat'l Bank of Hinsdale, 219 M 160, 711 P2d 1352, 42 St. Rep. 1919 (1985), followed in Robinson v. First Sec. Bank of Big Timber, 224 M 138, 728 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 2080 (1986). See also S. Gallatin Land Corp. v. Yetter, 245 M 320, 801 P2d 575, 47 St. Rep. 2139 (1990).

Summary Judgment Proper — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Party Slept on Rights: Summary judgment was proper when pretrial discovery did not indicate a genuine issue of material fact and when defendant failed to appear for a pretrial conference on August 2, failed to respond to a motion for summary judgment filed on August 21, failed to appear for the hearing on the motion on September 6, and filed a motion to set aside the summary judgment 5 days after receiving notice of it, but failed to file a brief in support of that motion until after the District Court had heard oral argument on the motion. Bedford v. Jorden, 215 M 508, 698 P2d 854, 42 St. Rep. 589 (1985).

No Issue as to Defendant's Duty or Comparative Negligence: The Hair Bender, a beauty salon, had a linoleum floor in the front of the shop for washing, cutting, and styling and an elevated carpeted area towards the back of the shop with five hair dryers. The carpeted area was one step higher than the linoleum area. Plaintiff's hair was washed in the front of the shop, and defendant's employee accompanied plaintiff to the drying area. After her hair was dry, plaintiff was proceeding to the front of the shop when she tripped on the step and was injured. The District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff failed to demonstrate that the step constituted a hidden danger or unsafe condition. Plaintiff failed to see and observe that which would be obvious through reasonably expected use of an ordinary person's senses. Defendant did not have a duty to warn plaintiff of an obvious danger. Plaintiff's fall was due to her own negligence, and there were no genuine issues of material fact concerning defendant's duty to warn or defendant's comparative negligence. Kronen v. Richter, 211 M 208, 683 P2d 1315, 41 St. Rep. 1312 (1984), followed in Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St. Rep. 484 (1994), and distinguished in Welton v. Lucas, 283 M 202, 940 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 562 (1997). Kronen was overruled, as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

General Release of Tortfeasor — Effect: From the date of this decision the law of Montana as to the effect of a general release of a tortfeasor on the liability of a joint tortfeasor will follow the position of the Restatement (second) of Tort. Section 885, "the release of one joint tortfeasor is not a release of any other joint tortfeasor unless the document is intended to release the other tortfeasors, or the payment is full compensation or the release expressly so provides". Unless a release specifically states otherwise, a finder of fact may consider the intent of the parties in making a release. Kussler v. Burlington N., Inc., 186 M 82, 606 P2d 520 (1980).

Summary Judgment for Nonmoving Party: No formal cross motion is necessary for a court to enter summary judgment. The invocation of the power of a court to render summary judgment in favor of the moving party gives the court power to render summary judgment for his adversary provided the case warrants that result. However, the court must be very careful that the original movant had a full and fair opportunity to meet the proposition and that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and the other party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979), followed in Canal Ins. Co. v. Bunday, 249 M 100, 813 P2d 974, 48 St. Rep. 597 (1991), and In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), and distinguished in Truck Ins. Exch. v. Waller, 252 M 328, 828 P2d 1384, 49 St. Rep. 318 (1992), in which a misrepresentation counterclaim was not involved in cross-motions for summary judgment, but the initial motion for summary judgment specifically included the misrepresentation counterclaim.

Burden of Proof: The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of establishing the absence of any genuine issue of fact, and the party opposing the motion must supply evidence supporting the existence of a genuine fact issue. Pretty on Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979), followed in Randolf V. Peterson, Inc. v. J.R. Simplot Co., 239 M 1, 778 P2d 879, 46 St. Rep. 1463 (1989).

Distinction Between Motion to Dismiss and for Summary Judgment: The District Judge did not reverse the previously disqualified District Judge's denial of defendants' motion to dismiss by granting defendants' motions for summary judgment and thereby improperly exercise appellate jurisdiction because the latter motion was a decision on the merits while the former was merely a determination of the sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Purpose — Proof — Deed's Validity Upheld: The purpose of this rule is to promptly dispose of actions in which there is no genuine issue of fact. The court has no duty to anticipate possible proof that might be offered under the pleadings. Judgment against party seeking cancellation of deed and reconveyance of property was upheld. Silloway v. Jorgenson, 146 M 307, 406 P2d 167 (1965).

GENERAL

Sufficient Evidence of Implied Contract to Preclude Summary Judgment — City Ordinance Not Bar to Liability: The plaintiffs sued the city of Dillon for damages after their water service was interrupted, claiming breach of contract, negligence, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted summary judgment to the city, reasoning that no contract existed between the parties because the city commission never approved a contract for the plaintiffs' water service, as required by a city ordinance, and the plaintiffs' claims were barred by a city ordinance that provided that the city could shut off water and avoid liability for the resulting interruption of water service. The Supreme Court reversed. The city's conduct manifested the existence of a contract to furnish water to the plaintiffs' lot, and therefore the city was estopped from asserting that no contract existed. Because the city ordinance that bars claims arising from a break in water service applies only to situations in which the city decides to shut off water services, rather than when water is shut off from a creek and main line freezing as occurred in this case, summary judgment for the city was not appropriate. Conner v. Dillon, 2012 MT 21, 364 Mont. 8, 270 P.3d 75.

Summary Judgment Issued in Error When Contents of the Complaint and Issues Raised in Discovery Provided Adequate Notice: The District Court found no textual reference in the complaint regarding negligence with respect to the standard of care for presurgical treatment and granted the defendant summary judgment. The summary judgment was improperly granted because even though the complaint did not specifically allege that the defendant's negligence encompassed presurgical treatment, expert testimony in the depositions clearly put the defendant on notice that the plaintiff maintained that the defendant was negligent with respect to presurgical treatment. Griffin v. Moseley, 2010 MT 132, 356 Mont. 393, 234 P.3d 869.

Specific Language That No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists Not Required for Grant of Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs asserted that it was error for the District Court to grant summary judgment without expressly concluding that no genuine issue of material fact existed. The Supreme Court held that a court is not required to include this "magic" language as long as the court provides sufficient particularity to understand the rationale for granting summary judgment. Roe v. Missoula, 2009 MT 417, 354 M 1, 221 P3d 1200 (2009).

Erroneous Resolution of Factual Issues on Summary Judgment — Factual Determinations Vacated: In a dispute over the sale of aircraft, the District Court considered summary judgment motions from both parties and in the process made a number of factual determinations in the face of conflicting evidence presented by the parties. The Supreme Court noted that it is inappropriate for a District Court to enter findings of fact when addressing summary judgment motions. To the extent that the District Court resolved factual issues at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings, the court erred, and those factual determinations were vacated. Corporate Air v. Edwards Jet Center, Mont., Inc., 2008 MT 283, 345 M 336, 190 P3d 1111 (2008).

No Abuse of Discretion in Trial Court's Failure to Consider Documents and Arguments After Time Allowed: Plaintiffs contended that the District Court erred by not granting additional time to file additional affidavits and documents in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court disagreed. The litigation took almost 2 years, during which plaintiffs could have presented the documents in question, and the District Court was correct in not letting the case languish. The court set reasonable times for completion of discovery, heard motions as necessary, fairly set pretrial proceedings, gave plaintiffs latitude because they were acting pro se, and granted plaintiffs additional time to respond on several occasions, yet plaintiffs failed to comply with the court's orders. Thus, the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion by not considering documents and arguments submitted after the time allowed. Lynes v. Helm, 2007 MT 226, 339 M 120, 168 P3d 651 (2007).

Immunity of Juvenile Probation Officer for Discretionary Supervisory Acts: Completion of a factsheet by a juvenile probation officer regarding a youth who was on probation was a discretionary, quasi-judicial act. The probation officer was thus entitled to immunity from prosecution for alleged omissions of information from the factsheet, and summary judgment dismissing the probation officer from a suit by the victim of an injury caused by the youth was proper. Eklund v. Trost, 2006 MT 333, 335 M 112, 151 P3d 870 (2006).

No Right to Subrogation From Insurance Loss Payee — Summary Judgment Proper: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board reimbursed a gas station owner $254,842 for expenses incurred in an environmental remediation, and the Board then sought to exercise subrogation rights against the owner's insurer and a lessee for reimbursement. The District Court granted summary judgment to the insurer after finding that the Board had no right of subrogation through the gas station owner, and the Board appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the gas station owner was at most a loss payee under its insurance policy, so the Board had no right of subrogation through the owner or through the corporation established to run the gas station, which had no part in funding the remediation or obligation to pay for any part of the remediation. The Board could not show that the owner's insurer was unjustly enriched by failing to pay a claim that the insurer did not owe, so subrogation did not apply. Thus, the Board had no right to subrogation through either the owner or the lessee to recover damages from the owner's insurer, and summary judgment was proper. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006), distinguishing Swingley v. Riechoff, 112 M 59, 112 P2d 1075 (1941).

Existence of Fiduciary Duty Considered Question of Law, Not Fact — Summary Judgment on Question Proper if No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Exists: To resolve several inconsistent prior opinions, the Supreme Court held that the issue of whether a fiduciary duty exists between two parties is a question of law, not fact, and thus may be resolved on summary judgment if no genuine issues of material fact exist. Similarly, the issue of whether a special relationship exists between two parties that would give rise to a fiduciary relationship is also a question of law, not fact. In order to determine whether a special relationship exists in cases in which it does not normally exist, such as between a bank and a customer, a court may be required to make a fact-intensive inquiry. The circumstances of a particular relationship are factual, so disputes over material facts will preclude summary judgment, but the conclusion drawn by a court from undisputed facts is one of law, not of fact. Gliko v. Permann, 2006 MT 30, 331 M 112, 130 P3d 155 (2006), overruling Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640 (1993), and Kondelik v. First Fidelity Bank of Glendive, 259 M 446, 857 P2d 687 (1993).

Inappropriate for District Court to Enter Findings of Fact When Addressing Summary Judgment Motion: In a summary judgment proceeding, parties are not arguing over what happened or presenting conflicting evidence. The parties merely need to know which of them is entitled to prevail under the applicable law. Thus, it is inappropriate for a District Court to enter findings of fact when addressing a summary judgment motion. Rather, the court should simply set forth the undisputed facts relevant to the legal issues raised, as well as any disputed facts that may preclude entry of summary judgment. Wurl v. Polson School District No. 23, 2006 MT 8, 330 M 282, 127 P3d 436 (2006).

Opportunity for Opposing Parties to Present Facts Relevant to Summary Judgment Motion Required: The District Court granted summary judgment in a probate case, awarding a putative common-law spouse a portion of the estate. However, in this case, summary judgment constituted reversible error because the estate was not given notice and a full and fair opportunity to present facts relative to the summary judgment motion and to address issues of material fact regarding the claims of the putative spouse. In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), following Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Improper Finding That Franchise Did Not Exist — Failure to Address Nonrevenue-Based Circumstances in Determining Substantial Reliance — Summary Judgment Reversed: On the question of whether a franchise existed, the parties agreed that their relationship met the definition of franchise in 61-4-201, but disputed whether plaintiff was substantially reliant on defendant for a continued supply of new motor vehicles, parts, and accessories. The District Court applied the common meaning of the term and concluded that plaintiff did not generate 50% or more of its revenue from sales of products supplied by defendant, so plaintiff was not substantially reliant on defendant, and therefore no franchise existed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court applied an unnecessarily restrictive and simplistic standard and failed to consider other nonrevenue-based circumstances that potentially impacted on the issue of substantial reliance. The question of whether a franchise existed was reversed and remanded for consideration of nonrevenue as well as revenue-based circumstances. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005), distinguishing Kans. City Trailer Sales v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 1994 WL 49932 (W. Dist. Mo. 1994).

Corporation Considered Real Party in Interest on Claim for Lost Corporate Profits — No Exception for S. Corporations: Gullett paid $10,000 earnest money for the purchase of real property. The money was drawn on the account of Gullett's corporation. When defendants refused to return the money after the purchase agreement failed, Gullett filed a complaint for return of the money and for profits allegedly suffered by the corporation's business through lack of the funds. Although the money was ultimately repaid to Gullett, the District Court summarily dismissed the claim for lost business profits on grounds that the corporation, not Gullett, was the real party in interest. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The cause of action for recovery of lost business profits belonged to the corporation, not to a shareholder. Gullett's argument that he should not be barred from the claim because the corporation was an S. corporation also failed because even though an S. corporation is treated differently for taxation purposes, it remains a corporation in all other ways, and the corporation and its shareholders remain separate entities. Gullett v. Van Dyke Constr. Co., 2005 MT 105, 327 M 30, 111 P3d 220 (2005), following Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045 (1991). See also Smith Setzer & Sons, Inc. v. S.C. Procurement Review Panel, 20 F3d 1311 (4th Cir. 1994).

Covenant Not to Compete Unlawful Restraint on Trade — No Claim for Interference With Contractual or Business Relations: Curl worked for a company that finished products for Montana Silversmiths. The company was purchased by plaintiff company, and plaintiff hired Curl to do the same work but required Curl to sign an employment contract that included a noncompetition covenant. After Curl's employment ended, a new business hired Curl to do the same work for Montana Silversmiths. Plaintiff sued the new business and Curl, claiming breach of contract and intentional interference with business relations based on the noncompetition covenant. The District Court granted summary judgment for Curl, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court applied the reasonableness test outlined in O'Neil v. Ferraro, 182 M 214, 596 P2d 197 (1979), and concluded that because Curl's only option was to work in the vicinity of her residence as a subcontractor for Montana Silversmiths, the covenant prohibited Curl from engaging in her profession and was thus unreasonable and an unlawful restraint on trade. Plaintiff's claims were based on the presumption that the covenant was valid, but because the covenant was void, summary judgment for Curl was affirmed. Mont. Mtn. Prod. v. Curl, 2005 MT 102, 327 M 7, 112 P3d 979 (2005).

Prior Ruling That Prison Escapee's Property Was Not Abandoned Not Dispositive of Later Claim That Property Was Converted: A prison escapee who was captured and returned to prison sued the prison and five prison officials for destroying the personal property that he left behind at the prison when he escaped. In a prior decision in this case, the Supreme Court ruled that there was a presumption of intent to abandon the property based on the escapee's acts, that the presumption was rebuttable, and that the escapee rebutted it, and thus his complaint was wrongly dismissed for failure to state a claim. The escapee then claimed on remand that the prison wrongfully converted his property, and defendants were granted summary judgment. The prison had a written policy that personal property left behind by an escapee was considered contraband and would be confiscated and sold or destroyed. The prior Supreme Court ruling turned on the issue of abandonment and did not control the ruling on the summary judgment motions, which turned on the issue of conversion. Defendants were entitled to raise the prison policy as a defense. It was not error to grant defendants summary judgment. Hawkins v. Mont. State Prison, 2004 MT 289, 323 M 326, 102 P3d 2 (2004).

Exhibits Properly Excluded as Inadmissible Hearsay in Summary Judgment Proceeding: During summary judgment proceedings, parties must limit affidavits to evidence that would be otherwise admissible pursuant to evidentiary rules. The first admissibility requirement in Rule 56(e), M.R.Civ.P., is that affidavits must be based on personal knowledge, and the personal knowledge requirement has been extended to attached exhibits as well. In this case, the District Court properly struck six challenged exhibits because they did not set forth facts within the affiants' personal knowledge and because a foundation was not laid for their consideration based on any exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence. Further, the court did not err in failing to take judicial notice of one of the exhibits—a motion to dismiss in a prior criminal proceeding—because the exhibit was not a form of law cognizable under Rule 202, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The exhibits were properly dismissed as inadmissible hearsay. Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002).

Improper Grant of Summary Judgment Without Hearing: The town of Virginia City sought to enjoin defendants from constructing a personal residence based on alleged permit violations. After a show cause hearing in District Court, a preliminary injunction was issued precluding further construction. Both parties filed cross-motions for summary judgment, which was granted to the town. Defendants moved to vacate pending completion of briefing and filing of transcripts and moved for oral argument, but the motions were denied. Defendants appealed, alleging that the District Court erred by granting summary judgment without affording defendants a hearing. The Supreme Court agreed. Summary judgment is only proper when there are no issues of material fact revealed in the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, and affidavits, and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Under this rule, a hearing is contemplated at which the District Court will consider not so much legal arguments, but rather whether there exist genuine issues of material fact, and in the ordinary case, the parties have a right to a summary judgment hearing unless the hearing is explicitly waived. In Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97 (1989), the Supreme Court noted that there may be an occasion when under the law and the facts adduced, the movant would be so clearly entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law that a District Court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but there was no such order in the present case. Rather, the language in the District Court's summary judgment order failed to state with sufficient particularity the rationale underlying the ruling, particularly the defenses raised in defendants' cross-motion for summary judgment. Although the District Court stated that it considered the entire record, there was no reference to considerations of defendants' affidavits. At one point, the court acknowledged that defendants were entitled to an evidentiary hearing, but failed to grant one, instead determining substantive questions that should have been left for a trial on the merits when granting injunctive relief. The only hearing afforded the parties in this case took place before discovery was conducted or responsive pleadings were filed, in noncompliance with Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The District Court abused its discretion in granting summary judgment without affording defendants a summary judgment hearing. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Virginia City v. Olsen, 2002 MT 176, 310 M 527, 52 P3d 383 (2002). The Cole exceptional circumstance test for granting summary judgment without a hearing was also applied in Richards v. Missoula County, 2009 MT 453, 354 M 334, 223 P3d 878 (2009).

Failure to Show That but for Negligent Legal Advice, Deportation Could Have Been Successfully Defended — Professional Negligence Claim Properly Dismissed: Fang, a Chinese citizen and lawful permanent United States resident employed by Montana State University-Bozeman, was involved in a domestic dispute with his wife that resulted in charges of assault. Fang consulted Bock, who worked at the university legal services offices, regarding the possibility of deportation. Bock in turn consulted Rice, an attorney who had made a presentation on immigration law at a seminar that Bock had attended, and asked if a misdemeanor domestic abuse charge was grounds for deportation. Rice informed Bock that the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) would not initiate deportation proceedings until the commission of two misdemeanors. Bock relayed that information to Fang, who relied at least in part on the information and pleaded guilty to family member assault. However, in 1996, Congress enacted a new immigration statute (see 8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(2)(E)(i)) that provides that domestic violence convictions are deportable offenses. Several weeks after pleading guilty, Fang received a notice to appear and face deportation. After hiring new counsel, Fang moved to withdraw the guilty plea. The District Court granted the motion on grounds that the failure of Bock to inform Fang of the possibility of removal to China constituted ineffective assistance of counsel, and the INS agreed to suspend further proceedings until the resolution of charges against Fang. Based on the advice of his new counsel, Fang reached a plea agreement with the Gallatin County Attorney to plead guilty to an amended charge of assault. Following conviction, the INS again moved to deport Fang, and based on the fact that assault also constitutes a crime of violence against a protected person pursuant to federal immigration law, Fang was ordered to be deported. Fang then filed a complaint against Bock, seeking damages for professional negligence and negligent supervision and treble damages under 37-61-406. The District Court applied Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335 (1989), and determined that Fang could not satisfy the last element of the test for a prima facie case of professional negligence, which requires a showing that but for such negligence, Fang would have successfully defended against the offense. The court then summarily dismissed the case. Fang appealed, contending that because of Bock's advice, he was exposed to the possibility of removal from this country and had to spend substantial amounts of money to avoid that exposure. Pursuant to Lorash, the Supreme Court had to determine whether Fang would have been exposed to the possibility of removal from this country with or without Bock's advice, in light of the offenses to which Fang pleaded guilty, the statutory basis for deportation, and the immigration judge's explanation for the deportation order. Under either charge, Fang was guilty of an offense of violence against a protected person—his wife. The title of the offense was irrelevant because for purposes of immigration law, misdemeanor assault is considered just as much a crime of violence against a spouse as family member assault. Further, Fang's argument that a different result was compelled by the fact that the assault conviction was subsequently expunged based on a deferred prosecution also failed because under federal case law, no effect is to be given to a state action that purports to remove a guilty plea or conviction by operation of a state rehabilitative statute. Thus, Fang's situation was a result of the conduct that he admitted and was the same following correct legal advice as it was following Bock's incorrect advice. Although Bock misinformed Fang, that advice did not lead to Fang's predicament, nor would the money that he spent to have the first conviction set aside have changed the result. Fang could not prove that but for negligent legal advice he could have avoided deportation, and Bock was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fang v. Bock, 2001 MT 116, 305 M 322, 28 P3d 456 (2001).

Negligence and Strict Liability Action for Damages by Pesticide Not Preempted by FIFRA — McAlpine Overruled: Plaintiffs brought an action for damages allegedly suffered when a pesticide was applied at the building where they worked. The District Court granted summary judgment for the pesticide manufacturer on the basis that the claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) and McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474 (1997), because all of the theories of liability were based on inclusions in or omissions from the pesticide labels. In particular, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b) provides that a state may not impose or continue in effect any requirement for labeling or packaging in addition to or different from those required under the federal law. On appeal, the Supreme Court overruled McAlpine and instead applied Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 US 470 (1996), concluding that Congress, through FIFRA, intended only to preempt states from imposing positive law requirements in the form of regulations and laws and did not intend to extinguish damage remedies under state common law. The word "requirements" in section 136v(b) means enactments of positive law by legislative or administrative bodies, not state law damage actions. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Grant Summary Judgment When Dispute Subject to Arbitration: A condition of Burkhart's employment agreement with Semitool, Inc. (Semitool), was that employment disputes would be subject to Montana law and the Uniform Arbitration Act. After 8 months of employment, Burkhart was terminated. He later brought suit against Semitool, alleging that: (1) he had been terminated without good cause; (2) his termination was in retaliation for his refusal to violate public policy; (3) Semitool's opposition to his application for unemployment benefits was without probable cause and motivated by malice; and (4) representations made to him prior to employment were deceptive and motivated by malice, contained misrepresentations, and included false advertisements concerning the kind or character of the employment. In its answer, Semitool demanded arbitration, and Burkhart accepted the arbitration offer on the first two issues. The parties agreed that because trade secrets were involved, the record would be sealed and hearings closed to the public to avoid disclosure of confidential information. Semitool then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim or, alternatively, to compel arbitration of all four claims. The District Court converted the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and held a hearing to discuss both motions, after which it granted summary judgment to Semitool and dismissed all four claims. The court determined that because proof of the allegations in the complaint would require disclosure of confidential attorney-client matters and because violation of the attorney-client privilege prejudiced the public interest, that prejudice was a proper ground upon which to invalidate the arbitration agreement. Burkhart appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited 39-2-914 and Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128 (1998), as controlling. Once an offer to arbitrate has been accepted, neither the District Court nor the parties have a right to continue the lawsuit. The exception relating to the public interest pertains to the validity of the arbitration agreement, not to the merits of the underlying dispute. Thus, the District Court erred in deciding the merits of the issues because it lacked jurisdiction to do so once the parties agreed to arbitrate. Summary judgment was reversed and the claims were remanded for arbitration. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000).

Transfer of Property for Creation of Trust Not Included in General Power of Attorney: Jameison appointed her granddaughter, Bolich, as "true and lawful attorney", granting her authority to generally act in Jameison's stead "in all matters affecting my business or property". Bolich created a trust agreement naming Jameison the income beneficiary for life and Bolich as trustee and designating Jameison's two daughters as income beneficiaries during their lives in the event that they survived Jameison. The trust agreement provided for distribution of the trust principal for the health, maintenance, and welfare of the income beneficiaries at the trustee's discretion, and upon the death of the last income beneficiary, the trust was to dissolve, with the remainder distributed to Bolich or her estate. Bolich then conveyed all of Jameison's real property, including over 30 parcels, and personal property, including several certificates of deposit and promissory notes, to herself. Jameison died a few months later, and one daughter died shortly thereafter. Over 7 years later, Bolich distributed $100 in trust income to the remaining daughter, who was unhappy with the accounting and challenged the validity of the trust agreement, moving for summary judgment on grounds that Bolich did not have authority under the power of attorney to create it, citing a lack of evidence of Jameison's intent to create the trust and the fact that the trust agreement and conveyance documents were signed solely by Bolich and not by Jameison. The District Court found that Bolich's assertions regarding Jameison's intent were purely speculative and that Bolich had failed to produce any evidence that Jameison had intended to create the trust. The court concluded that the general power of attorney did not specifically authorize Bolich to create the trust and that Bolich exceeded her authority in doing so. The trust was invalidated and terminated, and the estate was distributed pursuant to the laws of intestacy. Bolich appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. In this case, the power of attorney was broad and general but did not grant authority to create a trust, reflect Jameison's intent to create a trust, or even mention a trust, so Bolich's transfer of Jameison's property to herself as trustee was not warranted by the terms actually used in the power of attorney or as a means of executing other authority. The trust was not created by one of the methods in 72-33-201 and was invalid. Bolich's argument that the trust was ratified pursuant to 28-10-211 by Jameison's oral authorization also failed because ratification of a trust must be accomplished in writing pursuant to 72-33-208. Absent material facts regarding the validity of the trust, summary judgment invalidating the trust was proper. In re Trust of Jameison v. Bolich, 2000 MT 190, 300 M 418, 8 P3d 83, 57 St. Rep. 753 (2000), distinguishing McLaren Gold Mines Co. v. Morton, 124 M 382, 224 P2d 975 (1951).

Broad Language in Complaint as Opportunity to Litigate Unfair Claims Practices Action — Res Judicata Barring Second Action — Summary Judgment Proper: The doctrine of res judicata not only precludes a party from relitigating claims that were litigated in a previous action, but under Balyeat Law, P.C. v. Hatch, 284 M 1, 942 P2d 716, 54 St. Rep. 780 (1997), res judicata will also bar an action for a claim that a party had an opportunity to, but did not, litigate in a previous action. In the present case, Fisher sued State Farm General Insurance Company (State Farm) and one of its agents for wrongfully denying coverage, alleging in the complaint that defendants were liable "for damages incurred as a result of the subject fire and the denial of coverage on theories of breach of contract, negligence, negligent misrepresentation, fraud, and any other applicable legal theories", and sought relief for money due under the insurance policy and "other further relief as the court may deem just and proper". One year later, Fisher filed a second action based on State Farm's denial of coverage, alleging failure to conduct a reasonable investigation of the claim and to attempt a good faith settlement. A few months later, State Farm presented a written offer of judgment on all claims in the original action, which Fisher accepted. Fisher then amended the second action to include allegations of a violation of the Unfair Claims Practices Act (UCPA) and sought punitive, special, and general damages. The District Court granted summary judgment for State Farm on grounds that the second action was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court affirmed. Under the broad wording of the original complaint, Fisher clearly had the opportunity to litigate the UCPA claim. Had the claim been less broadly drafted, a judgment in the first action could not have barred the second action. However, the criteria of res judicata regarding identity of subject matter, issues, and relationship of the parties were met, and summary judgment on the second action was proper. Fisher's argument that the application of res judicata essentially negated statutory permissive joinder provisions and compelled mandatory joinder of otherwise independent causes of action was unpersuasive. Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452, 56 St. Rep. 1236 (1999).

Error in Summary Dismissal of Improperly Pleaded Claims: Green Tree Financial Corporation (Green Tree) as "lender" and Larson, doing business as Majestic Homes, Inc. (Majestic), as "approved dealer" had an arrangement for purposes of making federal housing loans pursuant to federal Housing and Urban Development (HUD) regulations. Majestic sued for breach of contract and for noncontract tort damages. The District Court held that no contractual relationship existed and dismissed the noncontract claims as improperly pleaded. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that a contract was in force, and reinstated the underlying noncontract tort damage claims without commenting on their merit, noting that although the complaint was not a model of notice pleading, the allegations were sufficiently precise and well supported to provide Green Tree with the factual basis for the tort claims against it. The claims should not have been dismissed by summary judgment based simply on the manner in which they were pleaded. Larson v. Green Tree Financial Corp., 1999 MT 157, 295 M 110, 983 P2d 357, 56 St. Rep. 618 (1999), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998). See also Linn v. Failure to Raise Conveyance Voidness Claim in Motion for Summary Judgment — Waiver of Claim on Appeal: Defendant claimed on appeal that under 70-21-304, good title had been claimed to a disputed tract of real property through first recording. Although defendant had raised the argument in principle before the District Court in one paragraph of a reply brief, defendant failed to cite any legal authority for the argument when requesting summary judgment. The District Court was not made aware of 70-21-304 and never ruled on its applicability. Defendant waived the right to any claim under that section. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Circumstantial Evidence Allowable to Establish Meeting of Minds Element of Civil Conspiracy — Summary Dismissal Proper Absent Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Because direct evidence of the meeting of the minds is typically in the possession and control of the alleged conspirators and thus difficult if not impossible to obtain, circumstantial evidence may be used to establish the meeting of the minds element of a civil conspiracy. However, when that circumstantial evidence does not raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding the meeting of the minds element, summary dismissal is proper. Schumacker v. Meridian Oil Co., 1998 MT 79, 288 M 217, 956 P2d 1370, 55 St. Rep. 338 (1998).

Damage to Crops by Herbicide — Extent of Preemption by FIFRA — Claims for Breach of Express and Implied Warranty Not Preempted — Negligence and Strict Liability Preempted — Remedy for Prevention of Discovery by Summary Judgment: McAlpine applied Weedone LV6, a herbicide manufactured by Rhone-Poulenc and distributed by Ben Taylor, to crops of barley and spring wheat. After several weeks of cool morning temperatures, McAlpine noticed damage to his crops, which experts from Montana State University (now Montana State University-Bozeman) and the Montana Department of Agriculture said was caused by cool temperatures after application of the herbicide. The McAlpines brought a civil action against Rhone-Poulenc, claiming damages from negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and strict liability. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the basis that the plaintiffs' claims were based on deficiencies in the label on Weedone LV6 and that those claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA). Citing Wis. Pub. Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 US 597 (1991), and Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 US 504 (1992), the Supreme Court interpreted the FIFRA preemption statement, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b), to preempt only claims based upon negligence in labeling and not to preempt the appellants' claims based upon either express or implied warranty or strict liability. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the appellants must be given the opportunity to prove that Rhone-Poulenc and Ben Taylor breached their warranty by designing, manufacturing, and marketing a product that was inherently defective and that the same defendants are strictly liable for designing, manufacturing, and marketing an unreasonably dangerous product. In response to Rhone-Poulenc's argument that the McAlpines failed to offer any evidence to defeat summary judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that because the District Court granted summary judgment, the McAlpines were prevented from conducting complete discovery and that until discovery was completed, it was premature for the Supreme Court to conclude that the McAlpines' evidence was insufficient. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474, 54 St. Rep. 1123 (1997), overruled in Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000), holding that state common-law negligence and strict liability claims based on or implicating pesticide labels are not preempted by FIFRA. Following the 1997 remand, the McAlpines settled with Ben Taylor, Inc., and proceeded to trial against Rhone-Poulenc on a theory of strict products liability, claiming that Weedone LV6 was a defective product because its propensity to damage or destroy crops in conjunction with cold weather was a danger outside the expectations of the ordinary consumer. Rhone-Poulenc acknowledged that the crop damage was caused by the phenoxy herbicide, but argued that the damage was not unreasonably dangerous and that liability exists only when a product is sufficiently dangerous. The trial court instructed the jury that it must find that the herbicide was in a "defective condition unreasonably dangerous", rather than merely in a defective condition, and the jury returned a verdict for Rhone-Poulenc. The McAlpines appealed. The Supreme Court previously held in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910 (1987), that a product is defective if it is unreasonably dangerous, but a plaintiff is not required to show that a product is defective and also that it is unreasonably dangerous, because establishing that a product is unreasonably dangerous is merely a means of proving that it is defective. Thus, the "defective condition unreasonably dangerous" language creates a vague and imprecise dual test and should not have been submitted to the jury because it was not plain, clear, and concise. The jury should have been required to find merely that the product was in a defective condition, so the case was again remanded. Further, the decision in Sleath, id., also applied on remand, so evidence of the product label was admissible in further proceedings. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 2000 MT 383, 304 M 31, 16 P3d 1054, 57 St. Rep. 1644 (2000).

Opposition to Motion Based Upon Speculative and Conclusory Statements — "Statement of Facts" Held Insufficient — Summary Judgment Upheld: Klock brought a civil action against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights, and the defendants filed a motion for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court. The Supreme Court upheld the grant of summary judgment, holding that Klock had the burden of responding to the motion with affidavits or other evidence proving that a genuine issue of material fact existed. The Supreme Court held that Klock had failed to meet that burden and noted as an example that in his appellate brief "statement of facts", Klock referred to arguments of his counsel in District Court on the summary judgment motion. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that Klock relied upon speculative and conclusory statements and did not meet his burden in response to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. Klock v. Cascade, 284 M 167, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997), followed in McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 72, 972 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

Dispositive Facts Undisputed — Standard of Review: When the dispositive facts surrounding a case are undisputed and both parties assert entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, the decision of the trial court to grant summary judgment to one of the parties is subject to review by the Supreme Court as to whether the trial court's conclusions of law constitute a correct interpretation of the law. Ash Grove Cement Co. v. Jefferson County, 283 M 486, 943 P2d 85, 54 St. Rep. 756 (1997).

Documents Evidencing Amount of Debt Incorporated Into Complaint and Effectively Put in Issue by Answer — Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Cross-Motions Not Proof of Absence of Genuine Issues of Fact: Montana Metal Buildings, Inc. (MMB), constructed a metal building for Shapiro at the Three Forks Airport and later served a notice of claim and construction lien upon Shapiro for $26,889.43. MMB claimed that this amount was owed by Shapiro as the balance due for labor and materials necessary for construction of the building. MMB subsequently sued Shapiro for that amount in foreclosure of the lien, attaching copies of invoices to its complaint. MMB moved for summary judgment on all issues, and Shapiro moved for summary judgment on issues concerning the defectiveness of the lien. The District Court granted summary judgment on all issues for MMB. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment and that genuine issues of fact still existed in that when MMB attached copies of the invoices to its complaint, they became part of the complaint for all purposes. The amounts established by those invoices were effectively put into issue by Shapiro when, in his answer, he asserted that he owed no further payments to MMB. The Supreme Court held that at this point in their proceedings, MMB had the obligation, as the party moving for summary judgment on the issue of the amount owed, to come forward with other evidence in the form of affidavits, discovery documents, or otherwise to overcome Shapiro's denials and establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact. The only affidavit that was submitted by MMB, the Supreme Court noted, addressed the issue of the sufficiency of the property description for the purposes of the lien and did not present evidence as to the amounts owed by Shapiro. Citing Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268 (1993), the Supreme Court pointed out that MMB could not rely on arguments of counsel to overcome the existence of an issue of material fact. The Supreme Court further noted, citing Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), that because the invoices were not submitted or filed by MMB as part of its motion for summary judgment, the invoices are not evidence of what was contained in the invoices but merely allegations of the complaint and were insufficient to overcome Shapiro's denials in his answer. In response to MMB's argument that Shapiro waived any right to object to MMB's evidentiary basis for its motion, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no evidentiary basis for MMB's motion for summary judgment on the issue of the amount of the debt because the invoices were not submitted for the purposes of the motion but only for the purposes of the complaint and had been effectively addressed by Shapiro's answer. Citing Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), the Supreme Court also pointed out that just because both parties have moved for summary judgment does not alone establish the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, particularly when the motions are not on precisely the same issues, and the District Court therefore apparently assumed, incorrectly, that there were no such genuine issues. Mont. Metal Bldg., Inc. v. Shapiro, 283 M 471, 942 P2d 694, 54 St. Rep. 731 (1997), followed, with regard to the holding that the fact that both parties have moved for summary judgment does not in itself establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact, in Sands v. W. Yellowstone, 2007 MT 110, 337 M 209, 158 P3d 432 (2007).

Use of Appeal Affidavit Contradicting One's Trial Testimony to Create Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff against whom summary judgment was granted could not, on appeal, create a genuine issue of material fact as to his knowledge of his employer's personnel policy with an appeal affidavit that contradicted his testimony at trial. Fenger v. Flathead County, 277 M 507, 922 P2d 1183, 53 St. Rep. 823 (1996).

Federal Court Wrongful Discharge Case — Dismissal on Summary Judgment Held Res Judicata as to State Court Claims: Hollister brought an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 in federal District Court, seeking damages for being wrongfully discharged from her position with Rosebud County. The federal District Court held that Hollister did not have a sufficient property interest in her job to support an action based upon a denial of substantive due process of law and section 1983. The federal District Court therefore granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Hollister then filed a motion for relief from judgment in the federal District Court, pointing out that the Montana Supreme Court had since noted in Boreen v. Christiansen, 267 M 405, 884 P2d 761 (1994), that the federal District Court had misapprehended the law in her wrongful discharge suit. The state District Court dismissed, holding that it was barred, but the federal court would not reverse itself. Hollister then refiled her section 1983 claim in state District Court, but that court dismissed, holding that the federal District Court opinion was res judicata as to her section 1983 claim. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that an identical situation occurred in Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265 (1993). In that case, the Montana Supreme Court had also held a federal District Court opinion to be res judicata as to claims in state District Court, even though the state law had changed in the meantime. Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Burden-Shifting Analysis in Employment Discrimination Cases — Pretext for Discrimination: Under the rationale in Tex. Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 US 248, 67 L Ed 2d 207, 101 S Ct 1089 (1981) (citing McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 US 792, 36 L Ed 2d 668, 93 S Ct 1817 (1973)), according to the U.S. Supreme Court's burden-shifting analysis employed in discrimination cases, once a plaintiff has proved a prima facie case of employment discrimination by a preponderance of the evidence, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employee's rejection. Should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reason offered by the defendant was not the true reason, but rather was a pretext for discrimination, and under St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 US 502, 125 L Ed 2d 407, 113 S Ct 2742 (1993), the reason cannot be proved to be a pretext for discrimination unless it is shown both that the reason was false and that discrimination was the real reason. At this point, the burden merges with the ultimate burden of persuading the court that the plaintiff has been a victim of intentional discrimination. The plaintiff succeeds either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence. The Montana Supreme Court held in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), that in order to survive a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff has the initial burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that the plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. This places the plaintiff, as nonmoving party in the summary judgment context, in the peculiar position of having to prove the case to survive the defendant's summary motion. The Kenyon requirements are thus overruled and the Burdineanalysis adopted for employment discrimination cases. The plaintiff is required to raise an inference of pretext as opposed to proving pretext, so the burden is more aligned with the general requirement of raising a genuine issue of material fact to survive the motion for summary judgment. Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996), overruling Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992). Heiat was followed in Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Wrongful Discharge From Employment for Violation of Agency Rule — Suit Not Barred by Failure to Appeal Petition for Judicial Review Related to Challenge of Rule: Wadsworth, a real estate appraiser, sued the Department of Revenue for wrongful discharge from employment after being dismissed by the Department for failing to comply with the Department's conflict of interest rule. The rule prohibited Department employees from engaging in independent fee appraisals and other activities during off-duty hours. Prior to dismissal and the suit for wrongful discharge, Wadsworth had filed an administrative grievance challenging the validity of the rule. The grievance was ultimately dismissed by the District Court, and Wadsworth did not appeal. On appeal of the wrongful discharge from employment suit, the Department argued that the District Court erred in not granting the Department's motion for summary judgment based on Wadsworth's failure to appeal the petition for judicial review of the rule. The Supreme Court held that the action for wrongful discharge did not meet the criteria for application of the doctrine of res judicata. The District Court correctly denied the motion for summary judgment. Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996), distinguished in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Inconsistent Document Delivered by Defendant — Issues of Material Fact Preclude Summary Judgment: Plaintiff sued, alleging that defendant had breached an agreement to buy and sell certain mining properties and equipment. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that conflicting testimony concerning whether delivery of the stock to a third party constituted a material breach and that defendant's delivery of inconsistent documents that appeared to maintain that the contract was terminated by breach but, on the other hand, appeared to acknowledge the continuing existence of the contractual right of first refusal created material fact issues that cannot be disposed of by summary judgment. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc. v. ASARCO, Inc., 270 M 458, 893 P2d 325, 52 St. Rep. 284 (1995).

Summary Judgment — As Matter of Law: When there is no genuine issue as to any material fact, summary judgment should be granted as a matter of law. Lewis v. Nine Mile Mines, Inc., 268 M 336, 886 P2d 912, 51 St. Rep. 1283 (1994); Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994); Koepplin v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Cross-Motions for Summary Judgment — Right of Court to Deny Both Parties' Motions: Both parties in an insurance policy dispute filed motions for summary judgment. The District Court granted the motion of plaintiff's estate and denied insurer's motion. Insurer claimed that the court erred in ruling that the parties' cross-motions for summary judgment constituted an agreement that there was no dispute as to material fact. Under Heublein, Inc. v. U.S., 996 F2d 1455 (2nd Cir. 1993), neither party is barred from claiming the existence of facts sufficient to prevent entry of summary judgment against it in spite of simultaneous motions for summary judgment by opposing parties. The court found that plaintiff's death was accidental within the context of the insurance policy but that the insurer presented no evidence of any fact issues. The court's comments during the hearing on the cross-motions clearly demonstrated its understanding of its right to deny both parties' summary judgment motions absent sufficient proof of either party's case. Ike v. Jefferson Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 267 M 396, 884 P2d 471, 51 St. Rep. 1097 (1994).

Statute of Limitations in Invasion of Privacy Action — Summary Judgment Proper: In 1988, Hentchel told Rucinsky that he had tape recorded her telephone conversations. She asked to hear them, and he agreed to play them, but neither party pursued the issue further. In 1992, Hentchel's wife found the tapes and notified Rucinsky, who brought a claim for invasion of privacy. The District Court granted Hentchel's summary judgment motion on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for an action on a liability not founded on an instrument in writing, as set out in 27-2-204, had run. Under 27-2-102, a cause of action accrues when all of its elements exist or have occurred, the right to maintain an action is complete, and a court is authorized to accept jurisdiction. Rucinsky claimed that because a reasonable person would not have taken Hentchel seriously when he originally confessed that the taping had occurred, the statute of limitations was tolled until the tapes were discovered. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment. That Rucinsky chose not to believe the confession did not negate the existence of the elements of her cause of action in 1988. She had the right to the cause of action when she was put on notice that the tapes existed, and the cause of action began regardless of whether she was convinced of the success of the action. Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994).

Collateral Estoppel — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The District Court's grant of summary judgment and dismissal of the complaint was proper when the plaintiff could not prove a cause of action without relitigation of factual issues that had been previously resolved in prior action between the parties. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Invalidity of Default and Summary Judgments for Failure to Give Notice and Other Failures: Kenner's filing of two motions to dismiss constituted appearances in Moran's quiet title action, and Kenner was thus entitled to written notice of Moran's application for default judgment at least 3 days prior to the hearing on the application. The informal communications to Kenner's attorney by Moran's attorney, threatening to proceed with the quiet title action if Kenner did not fulfill the terms of a settlement agreement that the parties had signed, were not the equivalent of and could not substitute for the required notice. The failure to notify was compounded by failure to notify Kenner that the default judgment had been entered. Therefore, default judgment against Kenner was void, and Kenner's motion for summary judgment in Kenner's independent action to set aside the default judgment should have been granted. Furthermore, at the hearing in Kenner's action, Moran's request for summary judgment on Moran's counterclaim for specific performance of the settlement agreement should not have been granted because neither party had entered evidence on that issue, Moran had not moved for summary judgment, and Kenner had no notice of the request for summary judgment. Kenner v. Moran, 263 M 368, 868 P2d 620, 51 St. Rep. 94 (1994).

Insufficient Evidence of Causation — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: Logan was discharged from her job at Metra and later obtained employment with the Yellowstone County Sheriff's office, where she suffered a repetitive motion injury. She sued Yellowstone County, claiming that the county breached her employment contract. The county moved for summary judgment, claiming that there was insufficient evidence of causation to support the action, and the District Court dismissed the action. The Supreme Court held that there was no substantial evidence from which the trier of fact could find that Logan's discharge from her job at Metra caused her repetitive motion injury because the injury was not foreseeable. Logan v. Yellowstone County, 263 M 218, 868 P2d 565, 51 St. Rep. 22 (1994).

Federal Court Summary Judgment Final — Subsequent State Court Action Barred as Res Judicata: Mills filed a claim in U.S. District Court against Lincoln County for negligence. The county filed a motion for summary judgment, claiming immunity under 2-9-111, and the court granted the motion. Shortly thereafter, the Legislature amended 2-9-111 to clarify that legislative immunity extended only to legislative bodies and to legislative actions taken by those bodies. Rather than filing a motion for reconsideration in federal court, Mills filed a complaint in state District Court, effectively precluding any relief from the federal system and rendering the federal court judgment final. A federal court summary judgment is a final judgment on the merits, and Mills' subsequent state action was therefore barred as res judicata. Mills v. Lincoln County, 262 M 283, 864 P2d 1265, 50 St. Rep. 1552 (1993), followed in State ex rel. Harlem Irrigation District v. District Court, 271 M 129, 894 P2d 943, 52 St. Rep. 364 (1995), and Hollister v. Forsythe, 277 M 23, 918 P2d 665, 53 St. Rep. 524 (1996).

Difference of Interpretation Not Issue of Material Fact: Kuhns argued that summary judgment was not proper because he and the defendant were in disagreement over the interpretation of a "reasonable efforts" clause in their contract. The Supreme Court held that a mere difference of interpretation does not amount to a genuine issue of material fact. Kuhns v. Scott, 259 M 68, 853 P2d 1200, 50 St. Rep. 685 (1993).

Initial Burden Met in Foreclosure Case — Remand to Consider Defense: The lower court, which found that the defendant borrowers executed notes, security agreements, and a mortgage upon which they defaulted, properly concluded that there was a prima facie case for foreclosure and that the plaintiff bank had met its initial burden on its summary judgment motion. Because the lower court concluded that res judicata barred contract-related defenses, it did not consider the question of whether those alleged defenses presented sufficient factual evidence to demonstrate a genuine issue of fact. The question remained to be decided by the lower court on remand. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993), overruled, with regard to voluntary versus involuntary payment or performance as affecting waiver of right to appeal without having bearing on mootness, in Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 23 (1996).

Affidavits Inadequate: The Supreme Court, holding that three affidavits by university employees did not prove the complete lack of a genuine issue of material fact, overturned the lower court's grant of summary judgment. Moffatt v. Univ. of Mont., 254 M 285, 837 P2d 401, 49 St. Rep. 779 (1992).

Good Faith Considerations Improperly Considered in Context of Age Discrimination Claim: The District Court granted summary judgment to employer on an age discrimination claim, concluded that immunity under 2-9-111 did not apply, and then went on to grant summary judgment to the employer on a wrongful discharge claim based on its determination that the employee was terminated for good cause, as defined in 39-2-903. The good cause discussion and conclusion followed immediately upon the court's consideration of the employer's long-term dissatisfaction with the employee's work performance in the context of the age discrimination claim. The motion for summary judgment and supporting arguments on the wrongful discharge claim differed significantly from those relating to the age discrimination claim, and the good cause issue as it related to the wrongful discharge claim was not raised or argued by either party. By granting summary judgment on an issue not before it, the court effectively denied Kenyon notice and an opportunity to be heard on the issue. The case was remanded. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), overruled, with regard to plaintiff's burden to adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference that plaintiff was denied an employment opportunity and, if the employer rebuts the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons, to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext, in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787, 53 St. Rep. 162 (1996).

Supreme Court Power to Order Summary Judgment for Opposing Party: The Supreme Court has the power to reverse a District Court's grant of summary judgment and order it to enter summary judgment in favor of the opposing party as a matter of law when all facts bearing on the issue are before the Supreme Court and no genuine issues of material fact exist. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Genuine Issue of Fact — No Duty of Court to Anticipate: The failure of the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to either raise or demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact or to demonstrate that the legal issue should not be determined in favor of the movant is evidence that the party's burden was not carried. Summary judgment is then proper, the court being under no duty to anticipate proof to establish a material and substantial issue of fact. Sistok v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 251 M 39, 823 P2d 251, 48 St. Rep. 1151 (1991); Tucker v. Trotter Treadmills, Inc., 239 M 233, 779 P2d 524, 46 St. Rep. 1646 (1989); Larry C. Iverson, Inc., v. Bouma, 195 M 351, 639 P2d 47, 38 St. Rep. 1911 (1981); State ex rel. Burlington N. v. District Court, 159 M 295, 496 P2d 1152 (1972).

Failure to Provide Electricity to Farmer With Three Years of Unpaid Bills: Farmer's contract with electric company for irrigation pump electricity provided that no electricity would be provided if past due balances were unpaid. During a severe 1985 drought, company refused electricity because of unpaid balances totaling $3,737.50 for 1982 through 1984. Farmer's crops failed for lack of water, and farmer sued company for damages. Summary judgment for company on the claim was affirmed. Company had no duty to provide water in view of the unpaid balances. The contractual instrument between farmer and company was modified by a "member service policy" that provided that company may allow installment payment in special circumstances. The court held that the member service policy applied only to residential electricity contracts and that it was not unreasonable to refuse the electricity for the irrigation pumps, particularly because farmer, at times, had the money to pay his balances but chose not to and instead gambled that he would not need to irrigate in 1985. Farmer's allegation that he had $1,914.90 in capital credits was not considered because there was no evidence that farmer offered the credits as part payment or that farmer and company discussed the credits. Ballenger v. N. Lights, Inc., 249 M 327, 815 P2d 1156, 48 St. Rep. 767 (1991).

Issues of Negligence Not Ordinarily Susceptible to Summary Judgment: The plaintiff was involved in a motor vehicle accident with the defendant. The plaintiff, driving a semitrailer, struck the back of the defendant's vehicle, a round bale feeder. The Supreme Court, recognizing that issues of negligence are not usually susceptible to summary adjudication, affirmed the lower court's dismissal of the plaintiff's case on the basis that no evidence had been introduced showing that the defendant had violated any law by being on the highway or by driving at a slow rate of speed. Henrickson v. Pocha, 245 M 217, 799 P2d 1095, 47 St. Rep. 1995 (1990).

Summary Judgment Held Improper on Issue of Bad Faith: In an earlier action between the parties, the Supreme Court had reversed the lower court and ruled that the plaintiff had made a claim against the insurance company in a timely fashion. In a second trial on the issue of bad faith, the lower court granted the insurance company's summary judgment motion on the basis that if a previous court had ruled that there was no coverage, although reversed on appeal, then as a matter of law there were good faith arguments supporting the insurance company's denial. The lower court reasoned that if one judge could find in favor of no coverage, then the defendant had demonstrated that it had denied coverage in good faith and summary judgment was proper. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court, holding that questions of fact did exist with respect to alleged lack of good faith on the part of the defendant, regardless of any earlier rulings. Walker v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 241 M 256, 786 P2d 1157, 47 St. Rep. 208 (1990).

Summary Judgment Appropriate in Tort Cases: The plaintiff contended that tort actions in general are not properly disposed of by summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's dismissal of the suit, stating that the court had previously upheld summary disposition of tort claims, including those involving breaches of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. O'Bagy v. First Interstate Bank of Missoula, 241 M 44, 785 P2d 190, 47 St. Rep. 69 (1990).

Failure to File Brief Not Waiver of Right to Oral Argument: The Supreme Court ruled that the right to oral argument on a Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P., motion cannot be waived by failing to file a brief. In some cases, the lower court might by order dispense with the necessity of a hearing, but in the ordinary case, the right to a hearing must be specifically waived by all parties. Cole v. Flathead County, 236 M 412, 771 P2d 97, 46 St. Rep. 469 (1989), followed in SVKV, L.L.C. v. Harding, 2006 MT 297, 334 M 395, 148 P3d 584 (2006). However, see Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 254 M 208, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 703 (1992), in which case, after the granting of a summary judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants hired a new attorney who filed several motions and requested a hearing but failed to raise any factual matters relevant to issuance of the summary judgment. In this case, failure to raise any genuine issue of material fact relevant to the motion for summary judgment constituted waiver of a hearing.

Accepted Work Rule Doctrine — Contractor Nonliability: The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a contractor on the issue of negligence based on the accepted work rule doctrine. The doctrine, first recognized in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), is based on the rule that an independent contractor is not liable to third parties for injuries that occur after the work has been completed and turned over to and accepted by the employer. Instead, the person employing the contractor is substituted as the responsible party. The Supreme Court affirmed the doctrine by refusing to extend contractor liability to foreseeable injury caused by negligent construction. Harrington v. LaBelle's of Colo., Inc., 235 M 80, 765 P2d 732, 45 St. Rep. 2176 (1988), overruled in Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Contracts — Sufficient Ambiguity as Question of Law: In the interpretation of contracts, it is a question of law whether there is an ambiguity sufficient to submit the issue to a jury. Monte Vista Co. v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 522, 755 P2d 1358, 45 St. Rep. 809 (1988), citing Nordlund v. School District, 227 M 402, 738 P2d 1299, 44 St. Rep. 1183 (1987), followed in Audit Serv., Inc. v. Systad, 252 M 62, 826 P2d 549, 49 St. Rep. 137 (1992), and, with regard to admissibility of parole evidence in determining the intent of the parties when ambiguities exist in a contract, Molerway Freight Lines, Inc. v. Rite-Line Transp. Serv., Inc., 273 M 95, 902 P2d 9, 52 St. Rep. 839 (1995). Monte Vista Co. was also followed in Doble v. Bernhard, 1998 MT 124, 289 M 80, 959 P2d 488, 55 St. Rep. 489 (1998). See also In re Estate of Hill, 281 M 142, 931 P2d 1320, 54 St. Rep. 101 (1997), and Rich v. Ellingson, 2007 MT 346, 340 M 285, 174 P3d 491 (2007).

Summary Judgment Proper on Federal Question — Improper Failure to Consider Witness Depositions on State Question: A breach of employment contract action pursuant to the federal Social Security Act was properly dismissed by summary judgment because the violation did not give rise to a private civil cause of action. However, the District Court should have considered the depositions of three material witnesses before granting summary judgment on the question of whether there was a proper claim for tortious interference under state law. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 230 M 456, 750 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 349 (1988), distinguished, on grounds that defendant rather than plaintiff scheduled and conducted witness depositions and there was no waiver of the introduction and consideration of the depositions as relevant to the summary judgment issue, in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994). Following the St. Medical Oxygen decision, plaintiffs filed amended complaints in Cascade County and several other counties directly pleading tortious interference with a business relationship. The Cascade County case was summarily dismissed in favor of defendants on the grounds that because Medicare/Medicaid customers were free to choose any qualified oxygen supplier, plaintiffs were barred from a private cause of action as to that class of customers regardless of whether defendants acted tortiously. Defendants subsequently moved for summary dismissal in the other jurisdictions on grounds that the Cascade County decision was binding based on res judicata and collateral estoppel, and that motion was granted. However, the Cascade County decision was not a final judgment on the merits but rather a partial order. Because final judgment is a prerequisite to appeal and to the application of res judicata and collateral estoppel, the judgment was reversed and remanded for a final determination of the issues. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 256 M 38, 844 P2d 100, 49 St. Rep. 1126 (1992). On remand, the District Court properly granted American Medical Oxygen's motion for summary judgment because none of State Medical Oxygen's alleged factual issues were found to relate to the "without right or justifiable cause" element of State Medical Oxygen's action for tortious interference with business relations. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 267 M 340, 883 P2d 1241, 51 St. Rep. 1063 (1994).

Witness Credibility — Summary Judgment Improper: Where credibility, including that of defendant, is crucial, summary judgment becomes improper and a trial indispensable. Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073, 45 St. Rep. 188 (1988), following Arnstein v. Porter, 154 F2d 464 (2nd Cir. 1946).

Disposal of Personal Injury Case by Summary Judgment — Negligence as Matter of Law: Summary judgment is rarely proper in personal injury cases because of the peculiarly exclusive nature of the concept of negligence. Negligence is normally a question of fact; however, in certain cases in which reasonable minds cannot differ, the cause of an accident may be a question of law for the court to determine. In determining comparative negligence between a driver who passed while visibility in the left lane was obstructed and the state's obligation to provide and maintain safe highways, the only conclusion to be reached was that the driver's negligence exceeded that of the state. Summary judgment was proper in determining negligence as a matter of law. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), citing Hartley v. Wash., 698 P2d 77 (Wash. 1985), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988), Christopherson v. White, Inc., 250 M 118, 817 P2d 1165, 48 St. Rep. 891 (1991), and Pappas v. Midwest Motor Express, Inc., 268 M 347, 886 P2d 918, 51 St. Rep. 1288 (1994), and distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence. Dillard was followed in Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996), and Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

No Abuse of Discretion in Reconsideration of Denial of Summary Judgment: Appellant, disabled by muscular atrophy, entered into an agreement allowing him to live in a cabin on respondent's property in exchange for his promise to inspect and maintain the property to the "best of his abilities". When a disagreement over the terms of the agreement ensued, appellant vacated the cabin and brought an action against the respondent. The District Court denied respondent's summary judgment motion. Prior to trial, however, the judge recused himself from the case. Subsequently, the newly assigned judge granted respondent's renewed motion for partial summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by reconsidering another judge's denial of summary judgment when additional deposition information upon which the order was based had been submitted. Rowland v. Klies, 223 M 360, 726 P2d 310, 43 St. Rep. 1788 (1986).

No Evidence of Fraud — Summary Judgment Appropriate: Since 28-2-404 does not preclude summary judgment when there is no evidence supporting a claim of fraud, under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), summary judgment was appropriate. Campbell v. Campbell, 223 M 124, 725 P2d 207, 43 St. Rep. 1584 (1986).

Summary Judgment — Failure to Show Proximate Cause: Dvorak was a welder for Beall, which repaired truck tankers used to haul commodities. Matador delivered to Beall for repairs a tanker that had hauled substances contaminated by toxic hydrogen sulfide. Despite Dvorak's discovery and report of remaining contaminants, a Beall foreman ordered him to enter the tank to complete the repairs. Dvorak subsequently collapsed and received injuries as a result of exposure to the hydrogen sulfide. Dvorak filed suit, claiming that Beall and Matador were liable under an intentional tort exception to the exclusivity provision of workers' compensation laws. The District Court granted Beall's summary judgment motion. On appeal, Dvorak argued that Matador was strictly liable for engaging in an abnormally dangerous activity and negligent for failing to warn of the protections needed against hydrogen sulfide dangers. The District Court granted Matador's summary judgment motion, concluding that Beall's conduct was the sole proximate cause of Dvorak's injuries. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that without Beall's negligent conduct Dvorak's injuries would not have occurred. Thus, Matador's failure to warn was not the proximate cause of the accident. Accordingly, since Beall's conduct proximately caused the accident, Matador was not strictly liable. Dvorak v. Matador Serv., Inc., 223 M 98, 727 P2d 1306, 43 St. Rep. 1562 (1986), followed in Bickler v. The Racquet Club Heights Associates, 258 M 19, 850 P2d 967, 50 St. Rep. 409 (1993).

Reversal of Summary Judgment — Exception to Exclusiveness of Workers' Compensation Remedy: A summary judgment was granted by the District Court for the stated reason that because of the employee's application for and receipt of workers' compensation benefits, remedies were exclusive to the Workers' Compensation Act. Application and receipt of benefits resulted in an election pursuant to 39-71-411, thereby barring a common-law tort action against the employer. In reversing the summary judgment, the Supreme Court held that a narrow exception to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy existed when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee. Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), in which Sitzman's "narrow exception" to the exclusiveness of the compensation remedy, existing when the employer personally committed an assault and battery upon the employee, was used as precedent for the holding that although 39-71-413 provides for an action only against a fellow employee for intentional or malicious injury, such an action may be brought against an employer as well—in this case, a major oil company.

Equitable Easement — Insufficient Facts to Support Summary Judgment: In quiet title action, it was error for trial court to grant summary judgment when there were insufficient facts in the record to support the District Court's finding of an equitable easement. Penland v. Derby, 220 M 257, 714 P2d 158, 43 St. Rep. 342 (1986).

Grant of Summary Judgment to Party Not Answering Discovery Relating to Counterclaim — Matters in Requested Discovery Not Material as Res Judicata: A nonresident respondent brought an action in Montana District Court seeking the balance of an amount owing from a judgment rendered in Florida. The appellant counterclaimed, alleging fraud and other matters relating to the underlying action adjudicated in Florida. The respondent moved for summary judgment but did not answer extensive discovery submitted by the appellant. Both the District Court and the Supreme Court held that the unanswered discovery related to matters covered by res judicata; therefore, as a matter of law, it was not discovery necessary to determine material facts of the case. Thus, the grant of summary judgment to the nonanswering party was not barred by this rule. O'Neal, Booth & Wilkes, P.A. v. Andrews, 219 M 496, 712 P2d 1327, 43 St. Rep. 120 (1986).

Subdivision Review of Four-Plex Apartments Unnecessary: Appellants brought an action to stop construction of an apartment building for failure of its builders to comply with subdivision review. The lower court granted the county's summary judgment motion based on the fact that 40 A.G. Op. 57 (1984) was rendered after construction began. During the pendency of the action, 76-3-204 was amended to clarify that new apartment buildings are exempt from subdivision review. Since an appellate court must apply the law in effect at the time it renders its decision, the Supreme Court upheld the lower court decision because the law as amended makes subdivision review unnecessary for the respondents' four-plex apartment building. Lee v. Flathead County, 217 M 370, 704 P2d 1060, 42 St. Rep. 1258 (1985), affirmed as law of the case in Paulson v. Lee, 229 M 164, 745 P2d 359, 44 St. Rep. 1864 (1987).

Negligence — Summary Judgment Appropriate When Plaintiff Cannot Recover as a Matter of Law: Summary judgment is inappropriate in negligence cases when the contested facts actually involve the issue of a negligent breach of a legal duty requiring application of the reasonable person standard. However, a "summary judgment motion in favor of defendant should be granted in those cases in which there is no genuine issue as to any fact that is crucial to plaintiff's cause of action so that as a matter of law he cannot recover". 10 A. Wright, Miller & Kane, Federal Practice & Procedure sec. 2729 (1983). Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Alleged Oral Modification of Written Real Estate Contract Not Sufficient to Prevent Summary Judgment: Real estate agent sued to recover remainder of his broker's commission on sale of ranch which fell through. District Court granted agent summary judgment, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court found there were no material issues of fact in dispute, and an allegation that the agent orally waived the remainder of the fee in return for the opportunity to relist the property was insufficient to prevent summary judgment because the alleged waiver was not in writing. Taylor v. Weingart, 214 M 282, 693 P2d 1231, 41 St. Rep. 2474 (1984).

Motion for Summary Judgment — Judge's Discretion to Allow Late Briefs and Arguments: The District Court did not err by allowing defendants to submit briefs and argue plaintiffs' summary judgment motion late upon learning why defendants' counsel originally overlooked the matter. Although there are no Montana cases on point, the Supreme Court analogized the judge's discretion to set aside judgments under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., as basis for judges' discretion to allow late briefs and arguments. Todd v. Berner, 214 M 263, 693 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 2462 (1984).

Summary Judgment on Compromise Settlement Note Proper Regardless of Enforceability of Underlying Contract: Parties to a real estate transaction executed a promissory note in compromise and settlement of a dispute over the property. The sellers filed a complaint to recover on the promissory note. The defendants asserted two affirmative defenses seeking rescission of the note. The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that plaintiffs' relinquishment of their claim against defendants, even though the claim may not have been ultimately proved valid, was sufficient consideration on the promissory note. Ultimate unenforceability of the buy/sell agreement was immaterial under the circumstances. Todd v. Berner, 214 M 263, 693 P2d 506, 41 St. Rep. 2462 (1984).

Annexation Agreement — Issue of Intent One of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: The term "Residential Purposes" in a "Waiver of Right to Protest Annexation and Agreement on Non-Conforming Use" was not so clear on its face as to preclude multifamily residential purposes. Supreme Court held that District Court erred in granting summary judgment for city based on the District Court's determination of the intention of the parties and remanded the case for trial on the issue of intent. Issue of intent is one of fact and cannot be decided on summary judgment. Derrenger v. Billings, 213 M 469, 691 P2d 1379, 41 St. Rep. 2276 (1984).

Advisory Comments on Summary Judgment Appeal: On appeal from and reversal of grant of summary judgment, it was premature for the court to advise the parties and the trial court on the possible application of Montana law. The case was not completely before the Supreme Court, and when all pertinent facts are known, the trial court is the forum for initial application of the law. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Decision on Issues of Fact Improper: Trial court's decision on several issues of fact on a motion for summary judgment was improper. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Motion for Summary Judgment Treated as Motion for Directed Verdict: When a defendant at the close of trial and after submission of all evidence moved under this rule for summary judgment on its counterclaim, the Supreme Court held that the proper procedure would have been to make the motion under Rule 50(b), M.R.Civ.P., but that since the questions to be answered are the same under either motion, the motion made would be considered the equivalent of a motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court further ruled that on the basis of the record, the defendant was entitled to judgment on its counterclaim. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Depositions Not Before Court — Summary Judgment Improper: In a libel and slander action, the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants. At the time, the court did not have before it the depositions of the four defendants. This was unknown to counsel until the record on appeal was prepared. Because the District Court possibly did not have all the facts before it, the Supreme Court returned the case for further consideration. Rasmussen v. Bennett, 207 M 33, 672 P2d 278, 40 St. Rep. 1849 (1983).

Consideration of Matters Outside Pleadings on Motion to Dismiss — Conversion to Summary Judgment: Reversible error was committed when matters outside the pleadings were considered in conjunction with defendant's motion to dismiss complaint and the court did not notify plaintiff that the effect of such consideration was conversion of the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff was entitled to reasonable opportunity to present all materials pertinent to a motion for summary judgment. Though plaintiff must be presumed to have knowledge of the automatic conversion requirements of the rule governing a motion to dismiss, since the court had discretion as to whether or not it would exclude extra-pleading materials, it was incumbent on the court to affirmatively notify the parties that the materials were not excluded and that the conversion of the motion to dismiss into a summary judgment motion was effected. Gebhardt v. D. A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855, 40 St. Rep. 521 (1983). See also Wood v. Den Herder, 277 M 147, 920 P2d 105, 53 St. Rep. 646 (1996).

Contractor Liability — Speculation Insufficient to Raise Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff was injured when the car in which he was sleeping crashed into a concrete retaining wall at the end of a dead-end street in Helena. The alleged liability of the defendant was based on the assertion that in working on an SID, defendant's crew had removed a dead-end street sign. Defendant was granted summary judgment based on the holding of Ulmen v. Schweiger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932). On appeal, plaintiff contended that Ulmen no longer represented the modern view of contractor liability. The Supreme Court did not reach this issue, finding that the record indicated no genuine issue of material fact existed upon which defendant's liability could be predicated. No testimony directly connecting defendant with removal of the sign was given except for speculation. Speculation is not a sufficient basis on which to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Fauerso v. Maronick Constr. Co., 203 M 106, 661 P2d 20, 40 St. Rep. 327 (1983), followed in Gen. Ins. Co. of Am. v. Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 27, 692 P2d 427, 41 St. Rep. 2292 (1984).

Opposing Party — Speculative Statements Insufficient: A party opposing a summary judgment motion must present facts of a substantial nature, and speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

What Constitutes "Public Figure" for Purpose of Libel Defense — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The plaintiff, a commodities broker who had some public notoriety within the state as a result of his membership in and speeches to political organizations and as a result of articles about him appearing in national publications, brought a libel action against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant, holding the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law (and therefore requiring actual malice to be proven by the plaintiff), as there was no absolute prohibition in the Montana Constitution against granting summary judgment in a libel case and because the plaintiff had a general fame or notoriety in the state and exhibited pervasive involvement in the affairs of society. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982), followed in Lence v. Hagadone Inv., 258 M 433, 853 P2d 1230, 50 St. Rep. 601 (1993).

Conclusory Statements Not Sufficient in Opposition: In opposing a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff merely made conclusory statements in support of its positions that factual issues were still unresolved. The court held that the appellant's conclusions of law would clearly not be admissible into evidence at trial and were not properly before the court. The plaintiff's opposition to the motion was not sufficient to defeat the motion. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982).

Test for Grant of Summary Judgment: The purpose of summary judgment is to encourage judicial economy by eliminating unnecessary trials, and it is proper only when there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Movant has the burden of showing a complete absence of any genuine issue as to all facts considered material in light of the substantive principles that entitle the movant to a judgment as a matter of law, and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the offered proof are to be drawn in favor of the opposing party. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981), followed in Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), Nichols v. Corntassel, 258 M 173, 852 P2d 583, 50 St. Rep. 483 (1993), and in Smith v. Kerns, 281 M 114, 931 P2d 717, 54 St. Rep. 86 (1997).

Refusal to Consider Untimely Filed Affidavits — No Error Found: A seller of real property sought summary judgment in an action based on the contract of purchase, and the buyer's attorney failed to file an affidavit and brief opposing the seller's motion for summary judgment until the day of the hearing. The seller's counsel pointed out the untimeliness of the filing, and the trial court refused to consider the affidavit. On appeal, no abuse of discretion was found. The Supreme Court noted, too, the unwarranted delays previously caused by the buyer in the case and the lack of any compelling excuse for the untimely filing. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981), followed in O'Neill v. St., 225 M 364, 732 P2d 1330, 44 St. Rep. 305 (1987), and in Wright v. St., 231 M 324, 752 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 652 (1988).

Denial of Defendant's Motion Reviewable Upon Judgment for Claimant: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnification against the previous owner, the trial court's order denying the county's motion for summary judgment was reviewable on appeal by the county because a final judgment was entered for the purchasers. Nonappealable interlocutory orders are reviewable on appeal from a final judgment. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Differing Considerations for Summary Judgment and Final Judgment: The considerations which result in a grant of summary judgment are not the same considerations relevant to an order of final certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Under summary judgment procedure, the essential inquiry is whether material facts are disputed. Under Rule 54(b) procedure, the inquiry is whether, after balancing the competing factors, finality of judgment should be ordered to advance the interests of sound judicial administration and public policy. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Alone Not Appealable: A summary judgment for plaintiff on the question of liability, reserving judgment as to the amount of damages, is interlocutory in character and hence is not appealable. Weston v. Kuntz, 187 M 453, 610 P2d 172 (1980).

Local Rule as Conflicting With Montana Rules of Civil Procedure: Local court Rule 3, Park County District Court, states in part that a party opposing a motion has 10 days after the filing and service of the moving party's brief to serve and file a reply brief. When applied to a motion for summary judgment, local Rule 3 conflicts with Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P. Whenever a local rule conflicts with M.R.Civ.P., the local rule must be set aside. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 606 P2d 1082 (1980).

Summary Judgment Based on Matters Occurring After Pleadings: Sellers, under a contract for deed, sent a notice of default to the buyers. Buyers brought an action against the sellers for a declaratory judgment that buyers were not in default. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the sellers. The Supreme Court found that the District Court erred in giving outside the pleadings to consider matters occurring after they were filed and in granting summary judgment based on those matters. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Hoffman v. Byrne 185 M 56, 604 P2d 328 (1979).

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law Unnecessary:

Since the District Court has no duty to make findings of fact and conclusions of law when it grants a summary judgment, its failure to do so as to one issue when it has done so as to others is not a factor on review by the Supreme Court. Boise Cascade Corp. v. First Sec. Bank of Anaconda, 183 M 378, 600 P2d 173 (1979), followed in Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988).

Findings of fact and conclusions of law are unnecessary on decisions with respect to motions made under Rule 12, Rule 56, or any other motion except as provided in Rule 41(b). Eisemann v.

Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971). See also Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979), and Lewis v. St., 207 M 361, 675 P2d 107, 41 St. Rep. 9 (1984).

Summary Judgment for Nonmoving Party: No formal cross motion is necessary for a court to enter summary judgment. The invocation of the power of a court to render summary judgment in favor of the moving party gives the court power to render summary judgment for his adversary provided the case warrants that result. However, the court must be very careful that the original movant had a full and fair opportunity to meet the proposition and that there is no genuine issue of material fact, and the other party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979), followed in Canal Ins. Co. v. Bunday, 249 M 100, 813 P2d 974, 48 St. Rep. 597 (1991), and In re Estate of Marson, 2005 MT 222, 328 M 348, 120 P3d 382 (2005), and distinguished in Truck Ins. Exch. v. Waller, 252 M 328, 828 P2d 1384, 49 St. Rep. 318 (1992), in which a misrepresentation counterclaim was not involved in cross-motions for summary judgment, but the initial motion for summary judgment specifically included the misrepresentation counterclaim.

Issues of Fact — Oral Motion: The District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff since genuine issues of fact were presented by the pleadings, responses to requests for admissions, and an affidavit opposing summary judgment. However, the District Court properly rejected defendant's contention that variance between the ground asserted in plaintiff's brief and the ground asserted at the hearing on the motion allowed plaintiff to make an oral motion for summary judgment in violation of this rule. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Haugen, 181 M 9, 591 P2d 1105 (1979).

Distinction Between Motion to Dismiss and for Summary Judgment: The District Judge did not reverse the previously disqualified District Judge's denial of defendants' motion to dismiss by granting defendants' motions for summary judgment and thereby improperly exercise appellate jurisdiction because the latter motion was a decision on the merits while the former was merely a determination of the sufficiency of the allegations in the complaint. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Summary Judgment Granted on Appeal — No Motion: The Supreme Court has the power to order summary judgment for appellant although motion for summary judgment was not made by the appellant to the District Court. Treasure St. Indus., Inc. v. Welch, 173 M 403, 567 P2d 947 (1977).

Notice Requirement Waived: A party must timely object to a hearing scheduled before the required 10 days have run. Llera v. Wisner, 171 M 254, 557 P2d 805 (1976).

Summary Judgment on Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim — Notice Requirement: District Court erred in treating defendant's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim as a motion for summary judgment without affording plaintiff notice and opportunity to oppose it because the court must give the parties notice of the changed status of the motion and a reasonable opportunity to present all material made pertinent to such motion so no one will be taken by surprise by the conversion. State ex rel. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences v. Livingston, 169 M 431, 548 P2d 155 (1976), followed in Hoveland v. Petaja, 252 M 268, 828 P2d 392, 49 St. Rep. 245 (1992).

Existence of Material Facts — Inconsistent Contentions: Summary judgment for donee was affirmed. A party may concede that there is no issue if his legal theory is accepted and yet maintain there is a genuine dispute as to material facts, if his opponent's theory is adopted. Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, 156 M 38, 473 P2d 503 (1970).

Oral Testimony Proper: Oral testimony is properly within the matters which the court may consider on motions for summary judgment. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Pleadings Not Controlling: On a motion for summary judgment the formal issues presented by the pleadings are not controlling, and the court must consider the depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, oral testimony, and exhibits presented. Hager v. Tandy, 146 M 531, 410 P2d 447 (1965).

Demand for Admissions — No Response — Summary Judgment: Because plaintiff failed to reply to the demand for admissions within the time stated, the court was bound to grant the motion for summary judgment. Naegli v. Daniels, 145 M 323, 400 P2d 896 (1965).

Extrinsic Evidence Proving Res Judicata: The pleadings on their face did not raise the defense of res judicata and, in view of this provision as to nonuse of affidavits, the defense seemingly is required to be specifically proved. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

GENUINE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT
PARTICULAR CASES

Summary Judgment Improper — Reasonable Minds Could Differ as to Resolution of Material Factual Issues: After the plaintiff was injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident in a construction zone, the plaintiff filed a negligence action against the defendants. Relying upon Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 127 S. Ct. 1769 (2007), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that when one party's version of the facts is blatantly contradicted by the record so that no reasonable jury could believe that party's version of the facts, a court should not adopt that version of the facts in ruling on a motion for summary judgment, the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the defendants' evidence in the present case did not provide the weight or significance of the evidence in Scott and did not discredit the plaintiff's version of the events to the extent that no reasonable juror could believe the plaintiff's version. Because reasonable minds could differ as to the resolution of material issues of fact, summary judgment was improper. Fasch v. M.K. Weeden Constr., Inc., 2011 MT 258, 362 Mont. 256, 262 P.3d 1117.

Summary Judgment Improper — Genuine Issue of Material Fact Surrounding Payment: The District Court's grant of summary judgment, which was based in part on the plaintiff's failure to timely remit payment to the defendant insurance company, was erroneous when the District Court excluded admissible party-opponent statements regarding the nature of the plaintiff's payment. In addition, the District Court erred in granting summary judgment on the alternate ground that the plaintiff's money order was an invalid method of payment. Although the money order was not signed by the plaintiff, summary judgment was not appropriate because a genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether the money order would have been honored had it been presented to the bank. Smith v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2011 MT 216, 361 Mont. 516, 260 P.3d 163.

Fair Labor Standards Act — Question Whether Employee Qualified for Administrative Exemption — Summary Judgment Precluded: Tacke brought a claim under the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) asserting that the defendant employer owed overtime wages for the time Tacke was incorrectly classified as an exempt employee. The employer moved for summary judgment on grounds that Tacke provided no facts establishing that Tacke fell outside the administrative exemption, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that Tacke presented testimony establishing, if true, that Tacke did not meet the requisite elements for an administrative exemption. The testimony was sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact, precluding summary judgment. Denial of summary judgment was affirmed. Tacke v. Energy W., Inc., 2010 MT 39, 355 Mont. 243, 227 P.3d 601. See also Arlington v. Miller's Trucking, Inc., 2012 MT 89, 364 Mont. 534, 277 P.3d 1198, reversing an agency and District Court conclusion that an employee was exempt from overtime pay under the FLSA.

Previously Unavailable Statement Regarding Facts Surrounding Creation of Promissory Note Precluding Summary Judgment: The District Court ordered partial summary judgment for plaintiff regarding defendant's liability for a promissory note that was unilaterally entered into by one of the owners of defendant business. The owner was subsequently found guilty of fraud for forging the signatures of the other owners to acquire a loan. Following retirement of the District Court judge, defendant moved for relief from the order. The order was overturned by the successor judge, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant's motion for relief presented previously unavailable evidence regarding testimony given in the owner's criminal trial related to circumstances surrounding creation of the promissory note and whether defendant was in fact obligated to pay the note. The testimony created a genuine issue of material fact that precluded summary judgment, so the previous judgment was properly overturned. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2009 MT 448, 354 M 208, 223 P3d 845 (2009).

Question Whether Sufficient Airport Access Provided — Summary Judgment Precluded: Plaintiff filed an action against the city of Kalispell asserting that the city had constructed a fence between plaintiff's aircraft fueling and maintenance business and the airport that unreasonably interfered with plaintiff's use of the public easement and plaintiff's business prospects. The city had installed a 48-foot gate to plaintiff's business, but plaintiff contended that the gate was too small. The District Court noted that the city had authority to fence the airport and granted summary judgment for the city. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that a genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether the fence and gate provided by the city tortiously restricted or interfered with plaintiff's business and implied easement and whether the city's actions intentionally inflicted severe emotional distress. Summary judgment was therefore inappropriate, and the case was remanded for trial. Talmage v. Kalispell, 2009 MT 434, 354 M 125, 223 P3d 328 (2009).

Governmental Entity Liable for Tortious Acts of Contractor Transporting Prisoners: Paull was a prisoner who was injured in an auto accident while being extradited to Park County by a private prisoner transportation service. The District Court summarily dismissed Paull's tort claim against the state and county for his injuries after the state and county argued that they owed Paull no actionable duty because the injuries were inflicted by the transportation company or its employees and that Paull's injuries were not foreseeable. Although the state was not strictly liable for any injury during prisoner transportation regardless of fault, the state may be held liable for tortious acts or omissions of its agents undertaking prisoner transportation if the state allows other entities to do the work. Because the acts or omissions of the transportation company for which the state or county might be liable were yet to be determined, summary judgment was inappropriate, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Paull v. Park County, 2009 MT 321, 352 M 465, 218 P3d 1198 (2009).

Genuine Issue of Material Fact Whether Dam Operation Damaged Lakeshore Properties — Summary Judgment Improper — Class Action Vacated: Flathead Lake landowners brought a class action suit against defendant operators of Kerr Dam for operating outside the scope of their easements in a manner that continuously eroded and damaged plaintiffs' lakeshore properties. The District Court rejected plaintiffs' argument that the dam operator was not allowed to affect plaintiffs' properties above an elevation of 2,893 feet, concluding instead that defendants' easements covered entire parcels. The court concluded that erosion, including wave action erosion, was within the scope of the easements and held that any duty defendants had to not cause unreasonable damage to plaintiffs' properties applied only to damage unrelated to use of the easement. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court first agreed that the District Court's contour line theory was correct. The "2,893 feet" clause did not establish the vertical limit argued by plaintiffs because although the dam operators' right to flood, subirrigate, drain, or otherwise affect the shoreline was not unlimited, it was not restricted to a maximum elevation of 2,893 feet at each parcel, but rather extended to whatever part of each parcel was affected when the lake was held at 2,893 feet above mean sea level as measured at the dam. The court also agreed that the right to cause some erosion was necessary to the enjoyment of the right to perpetually flood, subirrigate, and drain and was thus included by implication in the easements. However, further factual development and trial were necessary to address the question of whether the erosion was reasonable, necessary, and within the scope of the easements, which could not be resolved by summary judgment. Additionally, the question of whether defendants breached their obligation to not cause unreasonable damage to the shoreline properties and to not unreasonably interfere with plaintiffs' enjoyment also required further factual development and possibly trial. Therefore, the order certifying the case as a class action was vacated and the case was remanded for further consideration. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2009 MT 286, 352 M 212, 215 P3d 675 (2009).

On remand, the District Court decertified the class as to one defendant and denied the plaintiffs' motion for certification as to another defendant on the basis that the question of whether the erosion caused unreasonable damage to or unreasonably interfered with the plaintiffs' properties required an individual, property-by-property analysis that was improper for class certification. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that class certification to both defendants was proper because the reasonableness of the erosion presents a common question that is incapable of being resolved on a property-by-property basis since an aggregate of the benefits and burdens imposed on all of the shoreline properties must be considered together to determine reasonableness. Mattson v. Mont. Power Co., 2012 MT 318, 368 Mont. 1, 291 P.3d 1209.

Question Whether Parties Consented to Contract — Material Fact Precluding Summary Judgment: The District Court determined that defendant did not consent to a title policy, so the contract was invalid and defendant was entitled to summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the issue of whether and when plaintiff instructed defendant to issue the title policy in plaintiff's name was a material fact that was disputed by the parties. The extent and nature of the parties' consents are questions of fact that must be first determined, so summary judgment was inappropriate and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Amerimont, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., 2009 MT 212, 351 M 292, 210 P3d 691 (2009).

Failure of Trial Court to Examine All Materials in Record in Product Liability Case — Summary Judgment Improper: Hopkins was injured when a heavy piece of metal was accidentally released from the chuck of an industrial lathe and fell on Hopkins' arm. Hopkins sued the chuck manufacturer on a claim of strict product liability. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant and dismissed the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court's specific finding that Hopkins' experts had no opinion on whether the chuck was dangerous or whether defendant failed to give adequate warnings was erroneous. In fact, the experts' report and excerpts from depositions of both experts were sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the chuck was dangerous. The District Court failed to consider all materials in the record prior to granting summary judgment. Because a genuine issue of material fact existed, summary judgment was improper, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Hopkins v. Superior Metal Workings Systems, LLC, 2009 MT 48, 349 M 292, 203 P3d 803 (2009).

Material Question Regarding Validity of Construction Lien — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff drilling company filed to foreclose on a construction lien on defendants' property based on money owed for a partially drilled well on defendants' property. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants on grounds that the lien was invalid because the well was not completed. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that genuine issues of material fact remained regarding whether abandonment of the well constituted a change order or altered contract specification for which defendants were responsible or whether plaintiff breached the contract by drilling in the wrong place, thereby eliminating plaintiff's lien entitlement. Because questions of material fact existed, summary judgment was improper, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Sudan Drilling, Inc. v. Anacker, 2009 MT 14, 349 M 42, 202 P3d 778 (2009).

Genuine Issue of Fact Concerning Parties' Intent in Entering Release From Future Claims — Remand: Sinclair sued defendant railroad for injuries received during employment. As part of the settlement, Sinclair signed a release of claims for injuries, illnesses, or damages that were unknown at the time of settlement. Sinclair later filed another complaint alleging manganese poisoning damages incurred during his employment as a welder for the defendant. The District Court concluded that the release was valid and precluded pursuit of further Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) claims. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. There were genuine issues of material fact as to the parties' intent in entering the release and whether it covered Sinclair's manganese poisoning claims. The intent of the parties regarding the release should have been determined by a trier of fact, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Sinclair v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 424, 347 M 395, 200 P3d 46 (2008), following Wicker v. Consol. Rail Corp., 142 F3d 690 (3rd Cir. 1998).

Failure to Disclose FELA Claim in Bankruptcy — Intent Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Judicial Estoppel: Dovey had financial difficulties that ultimately led him to file for bankruptcy. He first met with his bankruptcy attorney on June 1, 2004. At this initial meeting, Dovey filled out a worksheet listing all his debts and assets. Two weeks later, Dovey sustained severe injuries to his right knee, allegedly in the course of performing his duties as a conductor for BNSF. On October 21, 2004, Dovey filed a Chapter 7 petition for bankruptcy. In the attached forms, Dovey failed to list his potential claim against BNSF as an asset. Dovey's bankruptcy petition was discharged on February 8, 2005, and later terminated on April 3, 2006. On September 8, 2005, Dovey filed a complaint against BNSF under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA). A year later, on September 26, 2006, BNSF filed a motion for summary judgment on the grounds that Dovey was judicially estopped from pursuing his claim against the railroad. Since Dovey did not list his potential FELA claim against BNSF as an asset in his bankruptcy proceedings, BNSF argued, his claim against BNSF was barred by judicial estoppel. Dovey's attorney for the FELA claim stated he was unaware that Dovey had filed for bankruptcy until he read BNSF's motion. That attorney immediately contacted Dovey's bankruptcy attorney and trustee to notify them of Dovey's pending FELA lawsuit. Dovey's bankruptcy claim was reopened on October 20, 2006. In response to BNSF's summary judgment motion, Dovey claimed that he did not know that his potential FELA claim was an asset that should have been included in the settlement of his bankruptcy petition. Dovey noted that judicial estoppel is an affirmative defense that should have been raised in BNSF's answer to his complaint, not on a motion for summary judgment. BNSF subsequently brought a motion to amend its answer to assert judicial estoppel as an affirmative defense. The District Court granted BNSF's motion for summary judgment and dismissed Dovey's claims on the basis of judicial estoppel. Dovey appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Courts may invoke the equitable doctrine of judicial estoppel to prevent a party from asserting a claim that is incompatible with a position advanced by that party in a previous proceeding in which the party prevailed. The court relied on the three factors in U.S. v. Ibrahim, 522 F3d 1003, 1009 (9th Cir. 2008) to determine whether a party is judicially estopped from raising a certain claim: (1) whether a party's later position is "clearly inconsistent" with its original position; (2) whether the party has successfully persuaded the court of the earlier position; and (3) whether allowing the inconsistent position would allow the party to "derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party". Before reaching a conclusion on these three factors, the Ninth Circuit first addressed a threshold matter of whether the party intentionally sought to manipulate the courts by taking inconsistent positions. The District Court erred as a matter of law in failing to consider whether the inconsistent positions advanced by Dovey were attributable to mistake or inadvertence or whether he deliberately attempted to manipulate the courts by failing to report his FELA claim. The District Court also erred by failing to view the facts in the light most favorable to Dovey. Dovey raised a genuine issue of material fact as to whether his unscheduled claim was the product of a good faith mistake or an inadvertent omission or whether he deliberately attempted to manipulate the courts. The District Court erred by granting BNSF's motion for summary judgment and by dismissing Dovey's claim. A genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether Dovey's failure to list his claim against BNSF as an asset in his bankruptcy petition was intentional. The case was remanded to the District Court for further proceedings. Dovey v. BNSF Railway Co., 2008 MT 350, 346 M 305, 195 P3d 1223 (2008).

Speculative Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issues of Material Fact: The District Court was presented with conflicting arguments regarding whether encroachments had been removed from a proposed subdivision. However, one party presented nonspeculative evidence that the encroachments had been removed, while the other party presented mere speculation that the encroachments remained in place. Speculative statements are insufficient to raise genuine issues of material fact, and the court correctly relied on the nonspeculative evidence in determining whether a genuine issue was raised, holding that the encroachments were removed. Apple Park, L.L.C. v. Apple Park Condominiums, L.L.C., 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P3d 232 (2008), following Stanton v. Wells Fargo Bank Mont., N.A., 2007 MT 22, 335 M 384, 152 P3d 115 (2007).

Ambiguity of Contract Raising Genuine Issues of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In a dispute over the sale of aircraft, the District Court considered summary judgment motions from both parties, granted summary judgment for plaintiff on claims of breach of contract and express warranty, and denied defendant's summary judgment counterclaim of breach of contract and express warranty. The Supreme Court examined the contract and found ambiguities regarding whether defendant accepted the aircraft "as is" at signing or maintained the right to inspect and reject the aircraft prior to closing, as well as the parties' extension of the closing date. The ambiguities raised genuine issues of material fact regarding breach of contract and express warranty that were not appropriate for summary judgment, and the Supreme Court reversed for trial on the issues. Corporate Air v. Edwards Jet Center, Mont., Inc., 2008 MT 283, 345 M 336, 190 P3d 1111 (2008).

Tort Claims Not Precluded by Contract Claims Arising From Same Event: In a dispute over the sale of aircraft, the District Court considered summary judgment motions from both parties and granted defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's tort claims on grounds that plaintiff had relied on a contract theory of relief and thus elected to be made whole under the contract. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that tort liability can exist with contract liability and that recovery on a contract theory does not necessarily preclude recovery on tort theories such as fraud. Defendant responded that summary dismissal of the tort claims was proper because plaintiff should not be allowed to make a double recovery and that because plaintiff's claims were commercial, tort damages are not available except in rare cases when a separate tort claim arises from the contractual relationship. Without ruling on the validity of the tort claims, the Supreme Court held that consideration of plaintiff's fraud-based claims was not precluded by the fact that plaintiff also made separate contract claims arising out of the same event. The tort claims were required to be considered individually and could not be dismissed under a blanket rationale that the tort claims and contract claims were mutually exclusive. The District Court's summary judgment was reversed, and the issue was remanded for further consideration. Corporate Air v. Edwards Jet Center, Mont., Inc., 2008 MT 283, 345 M 336, 190 P3d 1111 (2008).

Summary Judgment Improper Given Question of Insurer's Failure to Act in Good Faith in Settling Claim: Plaintiffs moved for summary judgment on the issue of whether defendant insurer violated the statutory duty in 33-18-201 to act in good faith to effectuate prompt settlement of plaintiffs' claim. Although the record contained little evidence favorable to defendant, the Supreme Court noted that the insurer did make an affirmative effort, following an earlier suit regarding liability to pay plaintiffs' claims, to ensure that plaintiffs' future claims would not be wrongfully denied by placing a note to that effect in plaintiffs' file. The insurer also made a remedial effort to pay plaintiffs' claim just over 2 months following the wrongful denial. Given these circumstances, the issue of breach of the duty to act in good faith was a question of fact for a jury, rather than an issue appropriate for summary judgment based on defendant's liability as a matter of law, and the District Court correctly denied plaintiffs' motion. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

Questions of Duty of Care and Proximate Cause Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Remand: Highway patrol officer Fisher was investigating a traffic accident when he was struck by a semitruck owned by Swift Transportation Company (Swift) that was being removed from the accident scene. Fisher sued Swift for negligence, alleging that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care. The District Court found that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff as a matter of law, but granted partial summary judgment for Swift on the issue of causation, and held that Fisher's injuries were unforeseeable as a matter of law. Fisher appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care based on the driver's legal duty to drive in a careful and prudent manner and at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent under the conditions existing at the point of operation when approaching a stationary, authorized emergency vehicle. Citing Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), the court also agreed that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff because Fisher was within the foreseeable zone of risk and that the Swift driver could reasonably have foreseen that his negligent conduct could have resulted in injury to Fisher. Additionally, no policy considerations barred the imposition of statutory duties on the Swift driver. The court also disagreed with the District Court's conclusion that Fisher's injury was unforeseeable as a matter of law, concluding that reasonable minds could differ as to whether the injury was a foreseeable result of the Swift driver's negligence and that the issue of proximate cause was best left to the factfinder for resolution. Thus, the question of whether the Swift driver's conduct, in a natural and continuous sequence, helped produce Fisher's injury constituted a genuine issue of material fact that was inappropriate for resolution by summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 M 335, 181 P3d 601 (2008). See also Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), and Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625.

Wrongful Discharge Claim Not Premised on Discrimination Not Precluded by Dismissal of Employment Discrimination Claim — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Claim Improper: Plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge from employment claim and an employment discrimination claim. The Department of Labor and Industry found no grounds for the discrimination claim, and the District Court subsequently granted defendant summary judgment on both claims, finding that the exclusive remedy provisions of Montana employment discrimination law precluded the wrongful discharge claim. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that dismissal of the discrimination claim did not preclude the wrongful discharge claim and that genuine issues of material fact existed in support of the wrongful discharge claim. The Supreme Court agreed on both issues. Discrimination can occur without a wrongful discharge and vice versa. When a plaintiff charges discrimination but fails to demonstrate a prima facie case warranting recovery, dismissal of the discrimination claim does not preclude a wrongful discharge claim that is not based on underlying claims of discrimination. In this case, plaintiff raised genuine issues of material fact regarding the legitimacy of the proffered reasons for his discharge that were outside the scope of discrimination, and it was error for the District Court to summarily dismiss the wrongful discharge claim. The case was remanded for trial on the wrongful discharge claim. Vettel-Becker v. Deaconess Medical Center of Billings, Inc., 2008 MT 51, 341 M 435, 177 P3d 1034 (2008), followed, with regard to a claim in tort, in Saucier v. McDonald's Restaurants of Mont., 2008 MT 63, 342 M 29, 179 P3d 481 (2008). See also Tonack v. Mont. Bank of Billings, 258 M 247, 854 P2d 326 (1993), and Arthur v. Insurance Policy Ambiguous Regarding Coverage of Property of Policyholder's Lessee Construed in Favor of Providing Coverage: Kenney leased some space in a commercial building to Lammers. A fire in the building destroyed much of Lammers' property. Kenney had an insurance policy for the building covering personal property in rooms provided by Kenney as a landlord. As a lessee, Lammers sought coverage under the policy, but the insurer did not deny coverage and did not pay any part of Lammers' loss, so Lammers filed a complaint seeking damages from the insurer and several other defendants. The District Court found that the policy was not clear whether only Kenney's property was covered or whether the property of lessees was also covered and granted summary judgment for the insurer. Lammers appealed. The Supreme Court held that the policy was ambiguous and should therefore be construed against the insurer and in favor of providing coverage. Summary judgment was improper, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Lammers v. Moun, 2008 MT 47, 341 M 406, 177 P3d 1026 (2008).

Genuine Issue of Fact Regarding Unfair Trade Practices and Punitive Damages in Insurance Case — Summary Judgment Precluded: Following an auto accident, Shelton filed claims under her insurance policy for medical payments and underinsured motorist coverage. After several unsuccessful attempts at settlement, Shelton amended the complaint 4 years after the accident to add claims for punitive damages and bad faith. The parties agreed to bifurcate the punitive damages and bad faith claims from the underinsured motorist claim. Citing 33-18-242(5), the insurer moved for summary judgment on the punitive damages and bad faith claims on grounds that the insurer had a reasonable basis in law or in fact for contesting the claim or the amount of the claim. The District Court found, with respect to the bad faith claim, that Shelton did not present any material fact that precluded summary judgment and, with regard to the punitive damages claim, that Shelton admitted that there was no factual basis for a claim of malice and that there was no evidence of fraudulent behavior by the insurer. Summary judgment was granted to the insurer, and Shelton appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Shelton provided evidence tending to show that the insurer failed to collect necessary records and reports and failed to share the information among its own experts, neglected to attempt in good faith to effectuate a settlement, and may have acted with malice in failing to pay Shelton the minimum amount of money that it determined that Shelton deserved. These questions of material fact precluded summary judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Shelton v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 132, 337 M 378, 160 P3d 531 (2007).

Material Question Regarding Compensability of On-Call Hours — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Two emergency medical technicians sued the town of West Yellowstone for failing to compensate the technicians for hours that they were on call but not actually responding to an emergency. The District Court granted the town's motion for summary judgment, asserting that the on-call hours did not constitute compensable time under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA). The technicians appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under Skidmore v. Swift & Co., 323 US 134 (1944), the standard for addressing the question of whether on-call time is compensable is whether the employee was engaged to wait or waiting to be engaged. Whether on-call time falls within or without the FLSA is a question of fact to be resolved by appropriate findings of the trial court. Additionally, pursuant to Shamblin v. City of Colchester, 793 F. Supp. 834 (C.D. Ill. 1992), if an employer allows employees to hold second jobs but the on-call requirements preclude them from effectively doing so, that factor should also be considered in determining the extent to which an employee actually engaged in personal activities during on-call time and was thus engaged to wait or waiting to be engaged. The District Court, in this case, did not consider the Shamblin factor, so, with that material fact in dispute, summary judgment was inappropriate, and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. Sands v. W. Yellowstone, 2007 MT 110, 337 M 209, 158 P3d 432 (2007).

Material Question Whether Insurer Committed to Paying Plaintiff's Ongoing Medical Expenses — Summary Judgment Based on Insurance Representative's Oral Settlement Agreement Improper: Defendant drove his vehicle into the path of plaintiff's vehicle, both cars were totaled, and defendant was cited for failing to yield the right-of-way. None of the parties suffered immediate injury, but plaintiff later began experiencing back and neck pain. An adjuster for defendant's insurer called plaintiff and offered $1,000 for injuries incurred in the accident, which plaintiff accepted. The day after the telephone conversation, plaintiff received treatment from a chiropractor for the back and neck pain and sought compensation from the insurer for the treatment, but plaintiff was informed that further payment would be denied because acceptance of the $1,000 constituted a full and final release of any bodily injury claim arising from the accident. Plaintiff then sued to have the purported release declared void. Defendant moved for summary judgment based on the oral settlement agreement, and the District Court granted the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Both parties agreed that the adjuster misspoke some items. When making all reasonable inferences in favor of plaintiff's position, a material question of fact remained as to whether the insurance adjuster's ambiguous language committed the insurer to pay plaintiff's ongoing medical expenses. Because a factual dispute existed regarding whether the oral settlement agreement included coverage of future medical expenses and whether plaintiff and the insurer intended to settle all medical expenses for $1,000, summary judgment was inappropriate, and the case was remanded to allow a jury to decide the issue. Hajenga v. Schwein, 2007 MT 80, 336 M 507, 155 P3d 1241 (2007).

Questions of Material Fact Regarding Excavation Project — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Plaintiff was an excavation subcontractor on defendants' project. Several modifications arose during the project beyond the original contract bid. Plaintiff completed the requested modifications, but defendants offered only $180 to cover the extra work. Plaintiff filed a construction lien but failed to notify defendants and then sought to foreclose the lien. The District Court granted plaintiff's request for summary judgment, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court reversed because numerous fact issues remained that were not susceptible to summary judgment, including whether: (1) plaintiff's services were extras or alterations personally ordered by defendants; (2) leftover materials validated the construction lien by constituting substantial completion of the contract or whether the materials signified incomplete work; (3) defendants' failure to pay constituted a breach that prevented plaintiff from completing the work, thus enacting the exception to the substantial completion rule; (4) the parties intended an oral contract whereby defendants personally ordered plaintiff to complete additional work; and (5) the contract was substantially complete, thus validating the lien. Gwynn v. Cummins, 2006 MT 239, 333 M 522, 144 P3d 82 (2006).

Question of Fact Whether State Liable After Contracting With County for Maintaining Road Five Weeks Before Accident — State Motion for Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Five weeks before a fatal accident, the state contracted with the county to maintain a section of road where an accident had previously occurred. When the fatal accident occurred, the state moved for summary judgment on grounds that the state was no longer responsible, but the District Court declined to allow the state to introduce evidence of the contract or to dismiss the state from suit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed in part, noting the state's duty concerning the original construction and design of the road and duty to keep highways in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary use. It was a question for the jury whether 5 weeks was a reasonable time for the county to remedy the road's deficiencies, so denial of summary judgment was proper. However, the District Court erred by disallowing evidence regarding the contract because it was appropriate for the jury to evaluate the reasonableness of the state's contention that it no longer had responsibility for the road's condition or the accident in light of the contract provisions. The Supreme Court noted that on remand, the contract evidence was not admissible for purposes of apportioning liability to the county. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority Negligent Violation of Duty of Care: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. On December 30, Russell stabbed Prindel at a party, and Russell was sentenced to life in prison for attempted deliberate homicide. Prindel subsequently sued the county, alleging that the failure to incarcerate Russell on the 28th, despite a court order that Russell begin serving a sentence on that day, amounted to negligence that proximately caused Prindel's injury. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, concluding that the county had no duty to prevent Russell from injuring Prindel and that the issue of causation need not be addressed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The county's argument that it had no duty of care without a written order was without merit because the oral pronouncement of sentence constituted the competent authority to incarcerate Russell, and the jail's ignorance of the commitment order did not diminish the court order's status as a competent authority. The county had a special relationship of custody under 7-32-2205 to take Russell into custody for the protection of the public, and failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law. Russell posed a foreseeable risk, Prindel was a foreseeable plaintiff, and the county owed a duty to Prindel to exercise reasonable care to protect him against Russell. Reasonable minds could differ as to whether Russell's act of stabbing Prindel was so unforeseeable as to sever the chain of causation, so summary judgment for the county was error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), following Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

Administration of HIV Test Without Consent — Lack of Requisite Information Regarding Patient's Significant Other — Motion for Summary Judgment and Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Howard was brought to the hospital by Schultz, who identified herself as Howard's roommate and girlfriend, after Howard suffered a seizure. Schultz then left the hospital. Howard then suffered another seizure, became violent, and had to be sedated and restrained. Hunter then arrived at the hospital and also identified herself as Howard's girlfriend. A physician ordered an HIV test to determine if the seizure was related to that disease. Because Howard was mentally incapacitated and Hunter's relationship with Howard was unclear to the doctor, the test was administered without consent. At trial, Howard moved for summary judgment and a directed verdict on the issue of the hospital's liability for administering an HIV test without the consent of Howard's significant other, allegedly Hunter, in violation of 50-16-1007 (now repealed), but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that because a genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether the hospital understood whether Hunter met the statutory definition of Howard's significant other and because there was credible evidence to support a finding that Hunter was not Howard's significant other, the question was properly left for the jury to decide. Howard v. St. James Community Hosp., 2006 MT 23, 331 M 60, 129 P3d 126 (2006).

Questions of Fact Regarding Ambiguous Contract and Damages — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Upon remand of a breach of contract action in Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2003 MT 82, 315 M 75, 67 P3d 306 (2003), the District Court granted Bradley's motion for summary judgment a second time without considering the merits of defendant's defense to the breach of contract. However, because questions of fact still existed regarding ambiguous language in the contract and potential damages, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was again reversed and remanded for further consideration. Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2005 MT 309, 329 M 448, 124 P3d 1143 (2005).

Bad Faith Claim Related to Vague Credit Life Insurance Application Not Barred — Denial of Summary Judgment Proper: When Clarence and Barbara purchased a vehicle, the dealer offered credit life insurance as part of the transaction. Clarence died within 1 year of the purchase, but the insurer denied a life insurance claim and rescinded the policy. Barbara sued the insurer for fraud and bad faith. Defendant contended that because Barbara failed to establish the elements of fraud, defendant was entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the fraud issue and that because 33-18-242 barred Barbara's bad faith claim, defendant was entitled to summary judgment on Barbara's claims. The District Court denied defendant's claims for judgment, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Both of Barbara's claims were supported, and 33-18-242 did not bar Barbara's bad faith claim that was related to defendant's vague application and not the defendant's handling of the claim. Questions of material fact remained, so summary judgment was not proper, and judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate because there was sufficient evidence to submit the issues to the jury. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005).

Inapplicability of Filed Rate Doctrine to Claim of Violation of State Law Regarding Credit Life Insurance: Plaintiff asserted that defendant's credit life insurance application was ambiguous, entitling plaintiff to judgment as a matter of law when defendant rejected plaintiff's claim for benefits and rescinded plaintiff's certificate of insurance. Defendant claimed that any ruling that plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law based solely on the application form would violate the filed rate doctrine set out in Keogh v. Chicago & NW. Ry. Co., 260 US 156 (1922). The doctrine arose from a concern that deviation from a rate filed with a federal regulatory agency can result in imposition of civil or criminal sanctions by a court without sufficient knowledge or expertise in the ratesetting process of a regulatory agency, and the purpose of the doctrine is to ensure that rates are reasonable and evenly applied. The doctrine initially applied to common carriers but was later applied to insurance. The Montana Commissioner of Insurance asserted that the doctrine has not been extended to include insurance forms approved by a state agency and that the state's regulatory authority does not preclude a claim against an insurer for a violation of state law. The Supreme Court agreed. The filed rate doctrine did not apply in this case because there was no evidence that defendant's rates were set, reviewed, or filed by a federal regulatory agency, so defendant was not immunized under the doctrine for a violation of state law. Nevertheless, plaintiff was not entitled to summary judgment because a material question of fact remained as to whether plaintiff's husband misrepresented his health when filling out the application and, if so, whether the misrepresentation was material. Additionally, judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate because there was sufficient evidence to submit the issues to the jury. Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005).

Failure to Prove Agency — Summary Judgment on Nonliability for Constructive Discharge by Alleged Agent Improper: Plaintiff sued defendant corporation American Music Co. (AMC) for constructive discharge based on individual defendant Kelman's tortious interference with plaintiff and AMC's business relationship. Kelman founded AMC and then transferred ownership to his daughters but remained a creditor of AMC and owned the building where the business was located. Plaintiff cited numerous instances of Kelman's intimidating and threatening behavior in the office, contending that Kelman's actions and AMC's failure to control Kelman impaired plaintiff's ability to function normally at work and resulted in plaintiff's constructive discharge.

Kelman moved for summary judgment on grounds that Kelman was an agent of AMC and thus was privileged from claims of tortious interference. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment to Kelman and AMC. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Kelman was not employed by AMC and thus was not an actual agent, nor did ostensible agency exist because AMC never caused any third person to believe that Kelman was an AMC agent. Absent an agency relationship between Kelman and AMC, Kelman's claimed privilege from suit failed. In addition, constructive discharge is usually a question of fact for the trier of fact to decide and is not subject to summary judgment. Plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether a reasonable person would have felt forced to resign, so the grant of summary judgment to AMC was also reversible error. Bellanger v. Am. Music Co., 2004 MT 392, 325 M 221, 104 P3d 1075 (2004).

Montana Safety Act Not Limited to Workplace — Question of Employer's Duty to Protect Life and Safety Precluding Summary Judgment: Moore employed Peyatt to haul hay from North Dakota to Montana. When the hay was being loaded onto Peyatt's truck, he was seriously injured. Because there was no workers' compensation coverage for the injury, Peyatt brought a claim against Moore under the Montana Safety Act for failure to provide a safe workplace, adopt safe practices, and do anything else necessary to protect Peyatt's life, health, and safety. The District Court concluded that Peyatt's place of employment was the truck, not the loading environment at the farm, and that because Moore did not have the right to exercise control over the loading environment, Moore could not have breached the duty to provide a safe workplace. Summary judgment was granted to Moore, Peyatt appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. As a matter of law, Moore did not violate the duty to provide Peyatt with a safe workplace absent control over the location. However, the broad language of the Montana Safety Act does not limit the Act only to the workplace. Summary judgment also precluded Peyatt's claim under 50-71-201(4) to present evidence that Moore failed to do anything else necessary to protect Peyatt's life, health, and safety. Because there was a genuine issue of material fact whether Moore breached that duty, the case was remanded for a jury determination of whether Moore was liable for breach of that duty. Peyatt v. Moore, 2004 MT 341, 324 M 249, 102 P3d 535 (2004). See also Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175 (1996).

Sufficient Evidence of City's Willful or Wanton Misconduct to Preclude Summary Judgment — Negligence Claim Against City Barred by Recreational Use Statute: Plaintiff was injured on June 20, 2001, after falling through a damaged plank on the Polson city dock, and filed suit against the city for negligently maintaining the premises and for failing to warn of the unsafe condition. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on grounds that plaintiff failed to present evidence in support of the claim that the city was aware of the defective plank before June 20 or that the city acted willfully or wantonly. The court also concluded that plaintiff's negligence claim was precluded by 70-16-302, the recreational use statute. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts, when considered in a light most favorable to plaintiff, were sufficient to raise a genuine issue as to whether the city's failure to timely repair the damaged plank or warn plaintiff of the danger constituted willful or wanton misconduct, precluding summary judgment and warranting a trial on the issue. However, the Supreme Court agreed that the recreational use statute barred plaintiff's negligence claim. Jobe v. Polson, 2004 MT 183, 322 M 157, 94 P3d 743 (2004).

Attorney's Duty of Care Owed to Estate Beneficiary — Standing of Estate to Bring Legal Malpractice Action: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. Before granting summary judgment to the attorney, the District Court raised the issue of whether the estate and personal representative had standing to bring the suit, based on a questionable fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that as a representative of the decedent, the estate stood in the shoes of the decedent and was thus considered to be in privity with the attorney, so the estate had standing to bring a malpractice claim. Further, the question of whether the trust and the personal representative had standing was a question of fact to be determined at trial, so summary judgment was precluded and the case remanded for further proceedings. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim by Estate Not Barred by Res Judicata, Equitable Estoppel, or Judicial Estoppel: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. The trust beneficiaries brought a separate suit against the trustee. The District Court granted summary judgment for the attorney on grounds of res judicata, equitable estoppel, and judicial estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Res judicata and collateral estoppel did not apply because the subject matter and parties in the beneficiaries' suit were different. Equitable estoppel did not apply because the defendants did not present any evidence to establish that they relied on an act by the personal representative or changed their position for the worse because of that act. Judicial estoppel did not apply because the judicial admission in this case referred only to plaintiffs' legal theory and not to an unequivocal statement of fact and because of the absence of any evidence that defendants were misled by a judicial admission. Thus, summary judgment was inappropriate. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim Timely Filed — Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Date of Discovery and Accrual Disputed: The Watkins estate filed a legal malpractice claim against an attorney who set up the trust. The District Court found that the 3-year statute of limitations had run on filing the suit and granted summary judgment for the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. After concluding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied, the court examined the applicability of both rules. The claim was filed in 1997, but the estate did not discover the attorney's negligence until 1995, which was excusable because: (1) the trustee relied on the fiduciary relationship and trusted that the attorney's assertion that the trust was revocable was correct, even though it was irrevocable; (2) of the complexity of the estate plan, which was difficult even for experts to understand and was beyond the understanding of a layperson; and (3) the attorney may have fraudulently concealed the malpractice. Further, because the trustee continued to treat the trust as revocable in reliance on the attorney's advice, the estate did not sustain any actual damages until the irrevocable nature of the trust was discovered and trust beneficiaries brought suit to remove the trustee in 1996, well within the statute of limitations. The attorney's contention that res judicata and estoppel barred the present suit because the beneficiaries also maintained a separate suit for damages also failed because neither the parties nor the issues were the same. Summary judgment was thus improper, and the case was remanded. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004), following Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Summary Judgment on Breach of Contract Affirmed — Wrongful Discharge Claim Reversed for Determination of Whether Claimant Was Employee or Independent Contractor: Tvedt brought a claim for breach of contract, wrongful termination, and indemnification of expenses, alleging that defendant group had breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, waived the at-will clauses in their employment agreement, and mischaracterized Tvedt as an independent contractor, rather than an employee. Defendant group moved for summary judgment and filed a contingent counterclaim stating that in the event that Tvedt was found to be defendant group's employee, then defendant group's obligation to pay Tvedt the contract value should cease and all payments made to Tvedt should be returned. The District Court determined that Tvedt was not an employee and granted summary judgment to defendant group on all claims, and Tvedt appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment on the breach of covenant issue because Tvedt was given adequate notice of termination, defendant group was exercising the specific language of the at-will termination provision of the contract, and Tvedt did not demonstrate that defendant group had waived the right to enforce that provision. However, the court reversed summary judgment on the wrongful discharge claim because the District Court incorrectly applied defendant group's novation argument and because genuine issues of fact remained whether Tvedt was an employee or independent contractor and whether a manager's agreement that recognized Tvedt individually was in effect at the time of termination. Remand was ordered because the District Court never considered whether Tvedt was entitled to relief for wrongful discharge as a matter of law and, if so, whether the claim for indemnification was appropriate. Tvedt v. Farmers Ins. Group of Co., 2004 MT 125, 321 M 263, 91 P3d 1 (2004).

Improper Resolution of Disputed Issues of Material Fact Once Insurer's Duty to Defend Established — Reversible Error: A driver was injured when his vehicle struck a horse and filed a claim against Staples, who was allegedly pasturing the horse just prior to the accident. Staples then filed a third-party complaint against the horse owners, claiming that as the horse's custodian, he was an additional insured under the insurance policy of one owner and was entitled to a defense. Defendant insurer unilaterally decided that its insured was not the horse's owner and sought a declaration that it had no duty to defend or provide coverage to Staples. On cross-motions for summary judgment, the District Court found that Staples might be an insured under the policy and that defendant had a duty to defend Staples, but then went on to conclude that because the policyholder did not own the horse at the time of the accident, Staples was not a third-party insured. Therefore, summary judgment was granted to the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Having correctly determined that the insurer had a duty to defend, the District Court should have ended the analysis and concluded that because the insurer breached that duty, it was estopped from denying coverage and that Staples was entitled to coverage. It was error for the District Court to then proceed to resolve disputed issues of fact in ruling on the summary judgment motion in favor of the insurer. Staples v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 108, 321 M 99, 90 P3d 381 (2004), followed in Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rumph, 2007 MT 249, 339 M 251, 170 P3d 934 (2007), and following Independent Milk & Cream Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co., 68 M 152, 216 P 1109 (1923), Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214 (1990), Grindheim v. Safeco Ins. Co., 908 F. Supp. 794 (D.C. Mont. 1995), Insured Titles, Inc. v. McDonald, 275 M 111, 911 P2d 209 (1996), Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Horton, 2003 MT 79, 315 M 43, 67 P3d 285 (2003), and Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

No Contemporaneous Impact Requirement for Determining Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress — Sacco Rule Applicable: Wages' son was injured by a vehicle driven by defendant's insured. Although Wages did not witness the accident, he sued defendant insurer for severe emotional distress as a result of the insured's negligent operation of the vehicle. Both parties moved for summary judgment. The District Court cited Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661 (1997), for the proposition that an individual who witnesses a family member sustain injury or death states a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress, but an individual who is not at the scene to witness the accident may state a claim for loss of consortium. The court granted summary judgment to defendant. Wages appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court distinguished Treichel and held that the District Court should instead have applied the rule from Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. Duty and foreseeability are inextricably linked, and both must be determined by the trial court. The case was remanded for further proceedings in light of Sacco. Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003).

Advance Insurance Payment Not Required When Liability Not Reasonably Clear: Plaintiffs' child was injured when run over by a car while sledding. Plaintiffs moved for summary judgment requiring the driver's insurer to advance payment for the child's medical expenses pursuant to 33-18-201. The insurer also moved for summary judgment of the issue, contending that an advance was not required because liability had not been clearly established. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that an advance is required when liability is reasonably clear, but in this case, there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the driver or the child was negligent. Because genuine issues of material fact existed regarding negligence and liability, summary judgment on the question of the advance was not required. The District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Travelers Indem. Co., 2003 MT 289, 318 M 73, 78 P3d 880 (2003), following Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Error in Failing to Consider Estoppel Related to Waiver of Right to Declare Contract Forfeiture — Summary Judgment Improper: When plaintiffs began experiencing financial problems, they notified defendants that they would not be able to make the annual payment on their property. Defendants allegedly told plaintiffs that they would have whatever time they needed to come up with the money, as long as they paid any additional interest and other expenses. Defendants subsequently sent plaintiffs a default notice and terminated the contract for deed. Plaintiffs contended that defendants waived the right to terminate the contract and should be estopped from forfeiting the contract. The District Court dismissed the waiver and estoppel arguments as an attempt to offer parol evidence to amend the contract and granted summary judgment to defendants. However, plaintiffs were not trying to amend the contract, but rather were simply trying to show that defendants waived the right to foreclose for at least a period of time, that plaintiffs relied on the waiver, and that defendants should be estopped from foreclosure. Because material questions remained as to whether a waiver occurred, summary judgment was improper and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Danelson v. Robinson, 2003 MT 271, 317 M 462, 77 P3d 1010 (2003).

Two-Month Lapse in Use of Road Insufficient to Demonstrate Intent of Abandonment — Summary Grant of Prescriptive Easement Reversed: The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on a prescriptive easement, based on the fact that plaintiffs did not continuously use a road for an entire 5-year period because they were out of state for 2 months, demonstrating an interruption or abandonment of the claimed easement. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the District Court misinterpreted the meaning of continuous and uninterrupted use, and the Supreme Court agreed. For purposes of a prescriptive easement, continuous use is use that is made often enough to constitute notice of the claim to the potential servient owner. Further, uninterrupted use is not interrupted by the act of the owner of the land or by voluntary abandonment by the party claiming the right. During the 5-year period in question, defendant did nothing to interrupt plaintiffs' use of the roads in question. The fact that plaintiffs were in Missouri for 2 months and did not use the road during that time may have cast some doubt on whether there was continuous use of the road, but a genuine issue of material fact remained as to whether plaintiffs continuously used the road. Because a question of genuine fact remained, summary judgment was improper, and the Supreme Court reversed for further proceedings, including plaintiffs' claims for infliction of emotional distress and punitive damages. Cook v. Hartman, 2003 MT 251, 317 M 343, 77 P3d 231 (2003). See also Restatement (Third) of Property, Servitudes 2.17.

Previously Raised but Unlitigated Alter Ego Claim Not Barred by Res Judicata: Following a dispute over the sale of irrigation equipment, H-D Irrigating and Lane sued Kimble Properties and Kimble for false representation of the irrigation equipment and damages. Kimble Properties and Kimble counterclaimed for the balance due on the equipment, alleging that H-D Irrigating was a sham and the alter ego of Lane. The alter ego claim was never pursued. The Supreme Court eventually decided the case in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95 (2000), and remanded for judgment in favor of Kimble. In an effort to collect, Kimble sought to compel Lane to testify regarding the assets of H-D Irrigating, but rather than appear, Lane filed bankruptcy and received a stay on further proceedings. Kimble then filed an action to collect from Lane personally, again raising the alter ego issue. Lane asserted that the issue had been already decided in the prior litigation and sought supervisory control on res judicata grounds. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court decided that res judicata did not bar Kimble's litigation of the alter ego claim. The action to pierce the H-D Irrigating corporate veil was neither previously adjudicated in District Court nor were the facts upon which the claim was based known to Kimble at the time that the counterclaim was filed or at any other time during the course of the previous action. The case was thus remanded for further proceedings on the alter ego claim. Lane v. District Court, 2003 MT 130, 316 M 55, 68 P3d 819 (2003), applying Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

Material Question Regarding Insurer's Duty to Investigate Claim Information — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurer violated 33-18-201(4) by declining to investigate the accident or plaintiffs' injury claims and make advance payments to cover plaintiffs' medical expenses. The District Court determined that because the insurer had attempted to discover the amount of plaintiffs' outstanding medical expenses and had forwarded a check for $5,000 to cover outstanding expenses, which was rejected by plaintiffs, summary judgment for the insurer was appropriate. The Supreme Court reversed. A genuine issue of fact remained regarding whether the insurer conducted a reasonable investigation, so the issue was not properly resolved with summary judgment. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003).

Question of Material Fact Regarding Law Firm's Handling of Real Estate Contract — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Plaintiff sued its law firm for work performed in writing a contract for a real estate transaction. Plaintiff's expert opined that the firm violated the standard of care when it: (1) had a nonattorney with no contract drafting experience draft the initial agreement and insert an inaccurate legal description of the property obtained from plaintiff's own engineering firm; (2) used the phrase "more or less" to cure defects in the property description when the legal description was clearly deficient; (3) failed to include a provision that required the seller to sign future applications for a final plat; and (4) failed to execute proper escrow documents to prevent the seller from having veto power over any proposed development of the property. The law firm presented its own expert to refute the allegations. The District Court analyzed the allegations of negligence, applying the legal malpractice standards in Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335 (1989), and, finding no issues of material fact, granted the law firm's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed, finding that summary judgment was improper. The conflicting expert testimony itself raised a material issue of fact regarding the standard of care that required resolution by a trier of fact. Further, material questions remained concerning whether the law firm's independent failure to recognize a problem with the legal description contributed as a cause to plaintiff's damages, whether the firm followed the requisite standard of care in drafting the escrow agreement, and whether the purported terms of the escrow agreement satisfied the requisite standard of care. Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 M 364, 69 P3d 1145 (2003).

Question of Material Fact Concerning Potential Repossession of Business Property and Potential Breach of Duty Regarding Care of Collateral — Summary Judgment Improper: Defendant pledged personal property to plaintiff as collateral for loans. Defendant failed to make payments, and plaintiff notified defendant in 1998 that the property had been repossessed. The same day, several members of defendant's company resigned and formed a new company, to which defendant then leased its personal property for $100 a month. Two other codefendants also claimed an interest in the collateral and objected to the nonjudicial foreclosure of the property. As a result of the objections, plaintiff proceeded with a judicial foreclosure and later moved for summary judgment, claiming that it was entitled to foreclose on the property. Codefendants opposed the summary judgment motion on grounds that plaintiff breached 30-9-207 (repealed 1999) by not taking reasonable care in the custody and preservation of the collateral. The District Court found that although plaintiff sent a notice of repossession, it did not actually take possession of the property and thus did not violate 30-9-207, so summary judgment was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Possession is the triggering factor for the duties in 30-9-207, and material facts remained in dispute regarding plaintiff's potential possession of the property and potential breach of 30-9-207, so summary judgment was improper. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003).

Question Whether Holographic Document Intended as Codicil or List of Property to Be Dispensed — Testamentary Intent Question of Fact to Be Determined by Judge or Jury — Summary Judgment Improper: Johnson executed a formal will and also executed and signed a holographic document consisting of a handwritten list of possessions and names. The District Court concluded that the holographic document was a personal property list made pursuant to 72-2-533, rather than a codicil, and applied 72-2-523 in ordering distribution of the property because there was no intent by Johnson that the holographic document should constitute the complete will. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied 72-2-522, which deals with holographic wills, rather than 72-2-523. The three requirements for a valid holographic will are: (1) individuals must be at least 18 years old and of sound mind; (2) the material provisions of the will must be in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the testator; and (3) the individual must have testamentary intent that the document will dispose of the individual's property after death. Here, the first two elements were met, but a question of fact remained concerning Johnson's intent, precluding summary judgment. The case was remanded to give the parties an opportunity to present evidence concerning Johnson's intent so that the trier of fact could decide the issue under the correct standard. In re Estate of Johnson, 2002 MT 341, 313 M 316, 60 P3d 1014 (2002).

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67 (1988).

Material Fact Remaining Regarding Circumstances of Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment Improper: Contreras entered a highway from a side road and collided with Fitzgerald, who was passing a truck in the same lane that Contreras entered. Fitzgerald requested summary judgment regarding Contreras's negligence as a matter of law for failure to yield the right-of-way. The District Court found that whether Contreras was negligent was a question best left to the jury and denied the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although violation of a motor vehicle statute will not constitute negligence as a matter of law only under extremely limited circumstances, in this case, it was uncertain from the record about what occurred immediately preceding the accident. Evidence conflicted concerning when Contreras entered the highway, whether Contreras and Fitzgerald entered the same lane simultaneously, and how much time Contreras had to react and prevent the accident. These material questions of fact were for the trier of fact to decide, and summary judgment was not proper when these material fact questions remained. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002).

Ambiguity Regarding Whether Settlement Contingent on Alternate Financing — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff sought to foreclose on a loan made to defendant, alleging that defendant's liabilities exceeded the value of the collateral, resulting in default pursuant to the terms of the note. The parties made several attempts to settle the issue, resulting in defendant's payoff to plaintiff, but in an amount that the plaintiff claimed was insufficient. The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff and ordered enforcement of the settlement agreement. However, a letter memorializing the settlement agreement, when considered with the parties' other correspondence, created an ambiguity regarding whether the settlement was contingent on alternate financing. Because there was more than one reasonable interpretation regarding the parties' intention, the parties' affidavits and testimony were admissible to determine intention and raised an issue of fact that precluded summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Stockman Bank v. Potts, 2002 MT 178, 311 M 12, 52 P3d 920 (2002).

Wife Sued for Recovery of Medical Expenses of Estranged Husband — Material Question of Fact Whether Husband Abandoned Wife or Whether They Were Separated by Agreement as Precluding Summary Judgment: The husband moved from the family home, the wife filed for divorce, and the husband died a few weeks later after incurring $32,496 in medical expenses. The wife served as personal representative of her husband's estate and claimed the family allowance as his surviving spouse. Plaintiff was assigned the debt for medical services for purposes of collection. Citing Missoula YWCA v. Bard, 1999 MT 177, 295 M 260, 983 P2d 933 (1999), plaintiff argued that the medical expenses were necessaries of the family and that the wife was therefore responsible for the debt under 40-2-106, while the wife argued that she was not responsible because the parties were legally separated at the time that the expenses were incurred and because the husband had not supported the family during that time. The District Court concluded that because the wife acted as personal representative and received the family allowance as surviving spouse, she was estopped from arguing that she was not legally married and that because there were no factual disputes, plaintiff was entitled to summary judgment. The wife appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Nothing in statute precludes an abandoned or separated spouse from acting as personal representative of a deceased spouse's estate, nor does the role of personal representative preclude a spouse from arguing abandonment or separation by agreement. Section 40-2-104 provides an exception to liability imposed under 40-2-106 if a spouse has been abandoned or if spouses are living separately by agreement. Because a question of material fact existed as to whether the wife was abandoned or separated, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Balyeat Collection Professionals v. Garland, 2002 MT 167, 310 M 464, 51 P3d 1127 (2002).

No Assumption of Risk in Purchase of Damaged Real Property — Summary Judgment Reversed: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a nuisance complaint and a complaint seeking compensation from the companies for damages, after the Lewises acquired title to the inn in 1998. The District Court dismissed the Lewises' claim for damages arising after title was acquired on grounds that the Lewises had assumed the risk of those damages when they purchased the property. On appeal, the District Court was reversed on the issue of postpurchase damages. Under Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782 (1994), assumption of risk is no longer available as a separate affirmative defense in negligence cases. Instead, that defense now merges into the general liability scheme of comparative negligence in which the conduct of the parties is compared based on evidence of negligence and contributory negligence, as established by reasonable and prudent person standards. Here the questions of whether the Lewises negligently purchased an inn that they knew might be subject to future damages or whether those future damages were sufficiently foreseeable to be taken into account in the purchase price of the inn were questions of fact for a jury and should not have been dismissed by summary judgment. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Sufficient Evidence to Create Question of Fact Whether Employee Satisfactorily Performed Job — Summary Dismissal of Wrongful Discharge Suit in Error: The District Court granted a motion by employer Plum Creek Manufacturing, L.P. (Plum Creek), for summary judgment on employee Andrews' wrongful discharge claim, concluding that although the discharge issue was a question of fact for a jury, even if a discharge had occurred, Plum Creek had good cause for the dismissal. The court declined to use the discharge element as a basis for granting the motion for summary judgment. Andrews argued on appeal that she was either actually or constructively discharged and maintained that any inadequacy on her part was a result of Plum Creek's failure to train her, define procedures, and appropriately supervise and evaluate her in her job. Plum Creek asserted that it had reasonable job-related grounds for dismissing Andrews based on economic grounds and Andrews' failure to satisfactorily perform job duties, regardless of who was at fault for that failure. The Supreme Court noted that District Courts may not adjudicate questions of fact on motions for summary judgment. There was conflicting evidence regarding the admission of failure to perform job duties and regarding performance of job duties, and it was the function of a jury, not the court, to weigh the evidence. Andrews presented sufficient evidence to create a question of fact whether she had satisfactorily performed her job, and the District Court should have allowed the jury to decide if good cause existed to discharge Andrews. Granting of the motion for summary dismissal was erroneous, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings. Andrews v. Plum Creek Mfg., L.P., 2001 MT 94, 305 M 194, 27 P3d 426 (2001).

Liability Exemption Distinguished From Contractual Indemnification: Liss had a homeowner's policy with Safeco Insurance Co. (Safeco) that covered personal liability and medical payments to others. Liss shot Bruthers and claimed that it was an accident and that she was involuntarily intoxicated, but she was nevertheless convicted of aggravated assault after pleading nolo contendere. Bruthers was a nonresident and filed a federal action for compensation for physical injuries, emotional distress, and punitive damages, but eventually dropped the intentional tort claim. Liss gave Safeco a copy of the complaint, and Safeco provided Liss a defense under the personal liability provisions of the homeowner's policy. Safeco then filed a declaratory action, claiming that it had no duty to defend Liss in federal court or to indemnify Liss, based on its theory that: (1) Montana policy and 28-2-702 forbid the contractual indemnification of an individual for intentional and illegal acts; (2) the shooting did not constitute an occurrence as defined in the policy; (3) the intentional act and illegal act exclusions barred coverage; and (4) Liss was collaterally estopped to contest the issue based on the guilty plea. Safeco's motion was granted by summary judgment based on policy provisions excluding intentional and illegal acts from personal liability coverage and the undisputed fact that Liss pleaded guilty to aggravated assault. Both Liss and Bruthers appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a contract whose object is to exempt a person from future potential liability is clearly distinguishable from an insurance contract that indemnifies a person for another party's damages once liability is imposed. Therefore, Safeco's duty to defend and indemnify Liss could not be excused by a declaratory judgment based on public policy in 28-2-702. The question of whether the shooting incident constituted an insurable occurrence or accident remained shrouded in material facts and was inappropriate grounds for summary judgment. The shooting did not fall within the nexus of the per se intentional act case law, absent an admission or substantial evidence establishing the intent of the insured. Lastly, Safeco presented no evidence other than Liss's guilty plea to satisfy its burden of proof that Liss either intentionally shot Bruthers or that the shooting was an illegal act, so the Supreme Court addressed whether a nolo contendere guilty plea in a criminal matter is conclusive proof of intent or illegality and precludes relitigation of the issues in a subsequent civil proceeding. The court applied the three-part collateral estoppel rule in Teitelbaum Furs, Inc. v. Dominion Ins. Co., 375 P2d 439 (Calif. 1962), and Aetna Life & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 207 M 409, 673 P2d 1277 (1984), the second prong of which requires a final judgment on the merits. A guilty plea as a matter of law fails the test because a guilty plea does not constitute a final judgment, so in this case, the plea to aggravated assault carried no collateral estoppel effect in the subsequent civil proceedings. Summary judgment was improper, and the case was remanded. Safeco Ins. Co. of America v. Liss, 2000 MT 380, 303 M 519, 16 P3d 399, 57 St. Rep. 1621 (2000).

Forman Defense — Issues of Material Fact Regarding Whether Insurance Company Breached Duty to Inform Agent of Litigation Risks in Sale of Policy — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserts a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that, pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. The District Court found that Revere owed Deonier a fiduciary duty pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Agency 435 (1958), but, apparently applying 33-18-242, determined that Revere did not breach that duty, and dismissed the breach of fiduciary duty action by summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court found the application of 33-18-242 to be misplaced, the proper analysis being simply whether Revere breached Restatement (Second) of Agency 435 (1958). The Supreme Court agreed that a principal has no duty to inform its agent of unknown future legal positions, but in this case, the potential consequences of applying the Forman defense were not unknown, having been the subject of a Revere corporate counsel paper published in 1987, years before the disability policy at issue in this case was issued. The court also found Revere's argument based on Doettl to be without merit. Although Doettl applied some Montana law, it was not binding on the Montana Supreme Court. Because the issue was still one of first impression in Montana, Revere could not rely on Doettl to support its position that as a matter of uncontroverted fact and law, it had no knowledge of risk to its agents. Thus, the question of whether Revere breached its duty to inform Deonier of the risks of litigation involved issues of material fact, so the District Court's award of summary judgment to Revere was reversible error. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622, 57 St. Rep. 989 (2000).

Duty of City to Inspect City Property for Hazards: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. Plaintiff contended that the city was negligent in allowing a dangerous and hazardous condition to exist on a public right-of-way and guilty of negligence per se under 81-4-105 for allowing a public nuisance. The District Court granted summary judgment, determining as a matter of law that the city owed plaintiff no duty of care because: (1) she was not walking on a sidewalk, street, or path of any kind; (2) the city did not invite her to travel in that area; and (3) there were no city lights or signs in the vicinity. On appeal, plaintiff cited Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), contending that the city ignored its duty to maintain the public streets, sidewalks, and rights-of-way within corporate limits in a reasonably safe condition for public travel by never going onto the premises, mowing it, raking it, or removing debris and that if routine maintenance had been done, the wire would have been found and removed. The Supreme Court agreed. The city's contention that it did not owe a duty of care in this case, because there was nothing in the area suggesting that it was a walkway or inviting the public to use it as such, failed under the Richardson test because of the city's neglect in exercising ordinary care or skill in the management of its property. Reasonable minds could differ on whether the city should have taken some action to inspect or maintain the property, so summary judgment was improper and thus reversed for a jury determination of negligence, including possible contributory negligence. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Summary Judgment Based on Recreational Use Statute Inappropriate: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. The District Court allowed the city to assert an affirmative defense based on 70-16-302, which restricts the liability of a landowner when a person is injured while using the landowner's property for recreational purposes. Because plaintiff submitted no facts, arguments, or evidence to rebut the inference that she was on city property for recreational purposes, the District Court ruled that the city was immune from liability pursuant to the recreational use statute. Notwithstanding that plaintiff was precluded from arguing on appeal what was not raised at trial, the Supreme Court nevertheless considered the argument as part of its de novo review and disagreed that the city was entitled to judgment as a matter of law or that summary judgment was appropriate in this case. The court noted that although walking may in some circumstances be considered a recreational purpose, walking to and from one's home in a residential area of a city may not. Rather than a recreational purpose, walking to and from one's home is an everyday, ordinary, and expected use of city property by one of its citizens, and the District Court erred in applying the recreational use statute in these circumstances when granting summary judgment. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Double Analysis of Foreseeability in Dispute Over Intervening Act of Third Party — Duty of Police to Protect Hospital Worker From Intoxicated Person in Voluntary Custody: Havre police received a report of two girls fighting downtown. They responded and found two intoxicated women fighting, one of whom appeared to require medical treatment. LaTray was working as a nurse at a hospital emergency room when police officers delivered the woman for treatment, accompanied by her sister. The injured woman was placed in protective custody, but neither woman was arrested. When attempting to administer medical care to the injured woman, LaTray was intentionally assaulted and injured by the sister, and LaTray filed an action against the city police officers for negligently failing to exercise proper control over the sister. The District Court found that because the intentional assault was not reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law, there was no duty owed LaTray by the city, and summary judgment was granted to the city. The Supreme Court held that intervening criminal acts of third persons are not automatically unforeseeable as a matter of law, but rather must be addressed in the foreseeability context on a case-by-case basis (see Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018 (1997)). Although foreseeability is ordinarily analyzed only under the duty element of negligence, in a dispute over intervening criminal acts of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice: first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and, second, with regard to proximate causation (see Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999)). The city relied on Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), arguing that because LaTray did not claim the existence of a special relationship or otherwise show that the officers owed LaTray a greater duty of care than that owed to the general public, the city owed LaTray no duty of care. The Supreme Court noted that Phillips has been clarified in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), which stated that a duty to protect third persons arises only when a police officer actually makes an arrest or otherwise takes possession or custody of an individual. Although the officers did not actually arrest the sister or otherwise have a basis for taking her into custody in this case, the officers voluntarily undertook possession or custody in transporting her to the hospital and consequently harbored the ability to control her actions and prevent an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons like LaTray, who falls within the scope of the risk that negligent supervision would foreseeably entail. Thus, the Supreme Court held that, as a matter of law, the city owed a duty of reasonable care to adequately supervise the sister so as to prevent harm to a third person who would foreseeably be placed within the scope of risk arising from negligent supervision. Whether the city breached that duty is an issue for the jury because the causal issue of intervening acts of third parties normally involves questions of fact. Viewed in the light most favorable to LaTray, there was sufficient evidence of the sister's irascible conduct to raise a jury question as to whether she posed a danger to those around her on the day in question, and reasonable jurors could differ as to whether she presented a foreseeable risk of injury to persons in her immediate vicinity. These contested issues of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment as a matter of law, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000), followed, with regard to appropriateness of summary judgment on issues of negligence, in Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006). See also Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988), and Estate of Strever v. Inherent Danger of Trenching Activity — Vicarious Liability of Employer for Injuries Caused by Subcontractor's Failure to Reduce Risks: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court found that trenching activity was not inherently or intrinsically dangerous and granted Butte-Silver Bow's motion for summary judgment. The court, citing Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270 (1986), ruled as a matter of law that trenching activities did not fall under the inherently dangerous exception because Beckman's injury could have been avoided through standard precautions. On appeal, the Supreme Court decided that the analysis of the inherently dangerous activity exception in Kemp was manifestly wrong, and overruled that case and its progeny. Instead, the court reaffirmed the holding in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), in which it was determined that the vicarious liability of an employer of a subcontractor was contingent on the nature of the work performed and not on the existence of standard precautions. An employer is therefore vicariously liable for injuries to others caused by a subcontractor's failure to take precautions to reduce unreasonable risks associated with engaging in an inherently dangerous activity. Risks associated with people working in trenches where a cave-in can cause death or serious bodily injury are well recognized in the construction industry as intrinsically or inherently dangerous and are recognized as such as a matter of law. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000), overruling Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990). Beckman was followed in Cunnington v. Gaub, 2007 MT 12, 335 M 296, 153 P3d 1 (2007).

Material Question Whether County Negligently Exercised Control Over Subcontractor as Precluding Summary Judgment: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court cited Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990), in holding that the county did not assume a nondelegable duty of safety by contract, finding that Butte-Silver Bow never agreed to supervise the safety of the trenching operations and therefore did not assume a nondelegable duty based on contract that extended to Beckman. Thus, summary judgment was granted to Butte-Silver Bow. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court correctly recognized the distinction between a nondelegable contractual duty and a duty based on the negligent exercise of retained control. However, Micheletto and Kemp provide an incorrect statement of the doctrine of retained control. Here, despite the lack of a written contract, the county retained the means with which to both discover and cure any unreasonably dangerous conditions. The terms of the water mains extension document, which provided that the county may supervise the water extension project, required the county to furnish a qualified construction inspector to monitor work performed during the installation of the water supply system and required that the materials and methods of construction conform to county requirements. The terms, combined with the fact that county employees were present during the trenching operation, constituted sufficient facts to preclude summary judgment for the county. The case was reversed and remanded. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000). See also Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in 27-1-221, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004), in which summary judgment was held to be proper under the Sherner standard absent evidence that an employer knew that an employee would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident.

Determination of Whether Publication of "Most-Wanted" List Considered Privileged — Abuse of Conditional Privilege as Jury Question: Hale brought defamation and negligence claims against the Billings Police Department for publishing Hale's photograph and personal information and broadcasting the information on a cable television most-wanted fugitive program. The District Court summarily dismissed Hale's claims on grounds that the communication between the police and the media was privileged, either as a proper discharge of an official duty or as part of a judicial proceeding pursuant to 27-1-804. However, the court neglected to determine as a matter of law whether the privilege was an absolute or conditional privilege. Absent a mandate by law that the police provide information regarding arrest warrants to crime prevention programs, the privilege was, at best, conditional. Thus, it was a matter for the jury to determine whether the discharge of the official duty exercised by the police in providing criminal information was proper to the extent that the police did not abuse the privilege. Further, under Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), statements made by the police as to the facts of the case or the evidence expected to be given are not yet part of the judicial proceeding and are not privileged. Summary judgment was improper. Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413, 56 St. Rep. 830 (1999), distinguishing Cox v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 222 M 527, 723 P2d 238, 43 St. Rep. 1476 (1986).

Public Airing of County's Most-Wanted Fugitive List — Material Facts as to Falsity of Statements Precluding Summary Judgment: Hale brought defamation and negligence claims against the Billings Police Department for publishing Hale's photograph and personal information and broadcasting the information on a cable television most-wanted fugitive program and for failing to pull the information from the program after Hale's arrest. The District Court summarily dismissed Hale's claims on grounds that the information was truthful or, if not truthful, then constitutionally protected and therefore not defamatory. Hale was depicted on the program as a potentially armed and dangerous fugitive. However, Hale's warrant for domestic abuse was chosen randomly from 3,000 to 5,000 outstanding warrants on file, and his whereabouts was known at all times by the police, suggesting that under the plain meaning of the terms, Hale was not accused of using a weapon and thus could not be considered "armed and dangerous", and was not a "most-wanted" suspect or a "fugitive" from justice. Clarifying Roots v. Mont. Human Rights Network, 275 M 408, 913 P2d 638, 53 St. Rep. 205 (1996), the Supreme Court held that it was improper for the District Court to create an artificial dichotomy by distinguishing statements of opinion from statements of fact, thereby granting unqualified immunity to the former. Citing Restatement (Second) of Torts 617 (1965), the court held that if an opinion is not based on disclosed facts and, as a result, creates the reasonable inference that the opinion is based on undisclosed defamatory facts, that opinion is not afforded constitutional protection. Without that protection, genuine issues of fact regarding the falsity of the statements made during the broadcast remained, making summary judgment improper. Further, the issue remained as to what constituted timely notification of Hale's arrest to the media by the police to avoid breach of their duty not to infringe on Hale's rights. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded. Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413, 56 St. Rep. 830 (1999), following Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co., 497 US 1, 111 L Ed 2d 1, 100 S Ct 2695 (1990).

Special Relationship of Custody or Control by Prerelease Center — Responsibility for Public Safety Within Zone of Risk — Foreseeability: A prerelease center entered into a contract with the Department of Corrections to supervise residents like Gardipee, who walked away from the center and subsequently injured Lopez. The District Court granted summary judgment for the center on grounds that the attack on Lopez was unforeseeable. Generally, there is no duty to protect others against harm by third persons, but in this case, the contract created a special relationship of custody or control, in turn creating a special responsibility upon the center to protect those members of the public who would be placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by negligent supervision of a prerelease resident. As a matter of law, the center owed a duty of reasonable care to all persons present within the zone of danger created by the center's failure to exercise reasonable care in supervising Gardipee. Here, reasonable minds could differ as to whether it was reasonably foreseeable by the center that a failure to supervise Gardipee could pose an unreasonable risk of harm to Lopez in particular. There was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the center knew or should have known that there was enmity between Gardipee and Lopez and a possibility of violence if Gardipee escaped, as well as whether Gardipee's attack was a superseding cause of the harm to Lopez. Both questions were suitable for resolution by a trier of fact, precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a trial on the merits. Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Actionable Section 1983 Claim Under State-Created Danger Theory: A government official who, while acting under color of state law, deprives an individual of constitutionally protected rights may be subject to personal liability for civil damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983. Generally, a government official's failure to protect an individual from harm does not constitute a due process violation. Inaction by the state, even when a danger is known, does not trigger a due process obligation except under the "state-created danger" theory, derived from DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services, 489 US 189, 103 L Ed 2d 249, 109 S Ct 998 (1989), which provides that a constitutional duty to protect may be imposed when state actors have affirmatively acted to create plaintiff's danger or to render plaintiff more vulnerable to it. Adopting the test in Huffman v. County of Los Angeles, 147 F3d 1054 (9th Cir. 1998), the Supreme Court held that to assert an actionable 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim under the state-created danger theory, plaintiff must demonstrate that the state acted affirmatively, with deliberate indifference, in creating a foreseeable danger to plaintiff, leading to deprivation of plaintiff's constitutional rights. In the present case, material facts existed as to whether an officer affirmatively and with deliberate indifference placed a woman in danger, increased her vulnerability to danger, or deprived her of her right to life; thus, summary dismissal of her husband's personal liability claim against the officer was reversible error. Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999). See also Wood v. Ostrander, 879 F2d 583 (9th Cir. 1989), and Kneipp v. Tedder, 95 F3d 1199 (3rd Cir. 1996).

Public Duty Doctrine as Applied to Law Enforcement Personnel — Exception in Cases of Special Relationship: Trina admitted that she had been drinking when stopped in her vehicle by Officer Driscoll, who nevertheless believed that sufficient probable cause did not exist to arrest the woman. Instead, thinking Trina might be impaired, the officer suggested a ride home or that Trina walk the 2-mile distance and warned Trina about returning to the vehicle. Trina decided instead to walk to a phone and call for a ride and was killed in traffic. Trina's husband brought suit for civil damages under 42 U.S.C. 1983, claiming that the officer breached the duty to protect, in violation of Trina's due process rights. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, holding that because no probable cause existed for Trina's arrest, the officer had no duty to protect Trina from harm and that without a duty, the action failed. The public duty doctrine provides that a police officer's duty to protect and preserve the peace is owed to the public at large rather than to a particular person, unless a special relationship exists, thus giving rise to a special duty that is more particular than that owed to the public. A special relationship is established: (1) by a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which the plaintiff is a member, from a particular type of harm; (2) when a government agent undertakes specific action to protect a person or property; (3) by governmental actions that reasonably induce detrimental reliance by a member of the public; and (4) under certain circumstances when the agency has actual custody of the plaintiff or of a third person who harms the plaintiff. Relying on Stewart v. Standard Publishing Co., 102 M 43, 55 P2d 694 (1936), the Supreme Court agreed that although the officer may not have initially owed Trina a duty to protect, that duty was assumed as a matter of law when the officer prevented the woman from driving her car and ensured that she did not attempt to drive. The question of whether the duty to protect was breached is a question of fact for the jury, so summary dismissal was improper. Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999), clarifying and distinguishing Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988). Nelson was followed in Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004), as to elements of exception to the public duty doctrine (nonlaw enforcement case), in Orr v. Extrinsic Evidence on Testamentary Intent Raising Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: Kuralt gifted Shannon with 20 acres along the Big Hole River, disguising the transaction as a sale. Shortly before he died, he sent Shannon a letter, which constituted a holographic will, suggesting that he intended to do the same with another 90 acres. The District Court allowed introduction of the letter as extrinsic evidence regarding testamentary intent, then granted summary judgment to the estate after finding that the letter contemplated a separate testamentary instrument not yet in existence to accomplish the transfer of the Montana property. Nevertheless, the letter raised a fundamental disagreement as to a genuine material fact—namely, whether Kuralt intended that the letter effect a posthumous disposition of the property. Regardless of whether the court admitted the evidence because it considered the letter ambiguous or because it agreed with Shannon that extrinsic evidence may be discretionarily admitted in holographic will disputes, the court nevertheless improperly resolved contested issues by granting summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for trial. In re Estate of Kuralt, 1999 MT 111, 294 M 354, 981 P2d 771, 56 St. Rep. 460 (1999).

Burden on County to Show Material Fact Regarding Height of Hedge — Nonconforming Use Not Proved — Summary Judgment Improper: A municipal code provision, passed in 1978, regulated, for traffic safety purposes, the height of hedges that could be grown on corners of intersections at 3 feet, but also permitted the existence of nonconforming uses prior to 1978. Ramirez was injured in a vehicle accident at an intersection where the hedge was taller than 5 feet and sought to hold the county accountable for failing its duty to enforce the ordinance. In granting summary judgment to the county, the District Court held the hedge to be a prior nonconforming use, noting that the hedge had been there since at least 1959. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the county had offered no proof that the hedge was either taller than 3 feet in 1978 or had not been trimmed since 1978. The county did not meet its burden of showing the absence of this genuine issue of material fact; thus, summary judgment was improper. Ramirez v. Hatch, 1999 MT 107, 294 M 316, 979 P2d 1281, 56 St. Rep. 441 (1999).

Genuine Issues of Fact Raised by Newly Discovered Evidence — Summary Judgment Precluded: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The newly discovered evidence, which Ranch Recovery should have been allowed to present in support of the amended counterclaim, raised genuine issues of material fact regarding First Security's compliance with a standby agreement upon which First Security relied for foreclosure against Ranch Recovery's interest. The existence of these issues of fact made summary judgment inappropriate, and the District Court was reversed. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Question of Duty of Highway Contractors to Maintain Road Construction Site in Reasonably Safe Condition — Summary Judgment Precluded: Schmidt was injured on his motorcycle in a road construction area. He sued the contractor, Washington Contractors Group, and the subcontractor, Alpine Construction, for personal injuries. The District Court entered summary judgment for Washington and Alpine, concluding that significant uncontroverted evidence supported the theory that neither breached its standard of care. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that both Washington and Alpine had a duty of ordinary care in maintaining the road construction site in a reasonably safe condition, not the duty of a possessor of premises as in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997), but rather the duty of acting as a reasonable, prudent person would under the circumstances. Questions of fact remained as to: (1) whether the contractors complied with the Manual of Uniform Traffic Control Devices (MUTCD) and, if so, whether mere compliance equated with the exercise of due care, given the condition of the exit ramp; (2) where warning road signs were placed and whether the placement complied with the MUTCD; (3) whether the pavement height differential was unreasonably dangerous to motorcycles; and (4) whether evidence of three other motorcycle accidents that happened at the same spot within 72 hours of Schmidt's accident was sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the contractors were on notice of an unreasonably dangerous condition that required remediation and possibly warnings over and above the requirements of the MUTCD. Reasonable minds could differ regarding whether a breach of the contractors' duty of ordinary care caused Schmidt's accident and subsequent damages; therefore, summary judgment was precluded, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Schmidt v. Washington Contractors Group, Inc., 1998 MT 194, 290 M 276, 964 P2d 34, 55 St. Rep. 814 (1998), distinguishing Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995), and followed in Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006).

Question of Whether Contract Was Orally Modified Sufficient to Preclude Summary Judgment: For an oral contract to effectively alter the terms of a written contract, the oral agreement must be fully executed on both sides of the agreement. Whether Bernhard and his attorney agreed to permit Doble to continue logging Bernhard's property until all harvestable timber was removed, thereby agreeing to effectively extend the terms of the logging contract, was a question of material fact that precluded an award of summary judgment in Bernhard's favor. Doble v. Bernhard, 1998 MT 124, 289 M 80, 959 P2d 488, 55 St. Rep. 489 (1998).

Reasonableness of Investigating Officers' Use of Deadly Force — Summary Judgment Precluded: The trial court granted the police officers' motion for summary judgment in a case involving the officers' use of deadly force, concluding that, as a matter of law, the officers reasonably feared the imminent use of deadly force against them and were thus justified in responding with deadly force. However, when presented with expert testimony and circumstantial evidence regarding the officers' veracity, jurors could differ as to whether the officers acted reasonably on the day of the shooting. These genuine issues of material fact precluded summary judgment. Scott v. Henrich, 1998 MT 118, 288 M 489, 958 P2d 709, 55 St. Rep. 457 (1998).

Weak Possibility of Manufacturing Defect and Product Liability — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court granted defendants' request for summary judgment on a manufacturing defect claim when the key piece of evidence was unavailable and the expert testimony was conflicting on whether or when a defect existed, concluding that plaintiffs' evidence suggested only a weak possibility that a manufacturing defect was present when the product was shipped from the manufacturer 30 years earlier. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court, considering the evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, concluded that a jury could reasonably find that a defect existed before the product left the manufacturer and that as long as a material issue of fact was in dispute, summary judgment was improper. Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Documents Evidencing Amount of Debt Incorporated Into Complaint and Effectively Put in Issue by Answer — Summary Judgment Inappropriate — Cross-Motions Not Proof of Absence of Genuine Issues of Fact: Montana Metal Buildings, Inc. (MMB), constructed a metal building for Shapiro at the Three Forks Airport and later served a notice of claim and construction lien upon Shapiro for $26,889.43. MMB claimed that this amount was owed by Shapiro as the balance due for labor and materials necessary for construction of the building. MMB subsequently sued Shapiro for that amount in foreclosure of the lien, attaching copies of invoices to its complaint. MMB moved for summary judgment on all issues, and Shapiro moved for summary judgment on issues concerning the defectiveness of the lien. The District Court granted summary judgment on all issues for MMB. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment and that genuine issues of fact still existed in that when MMB attached copies of the invoices to its complaint, they became part of the complaint for all purposes. The amounts established by those invoices were effectively put into issue by Shapiro when, in his answer, he asserted that he owed no further payments to MMB. The Supreme Court held that at this point in their proceedings, MMB had the obligation, as the party moving for summary judgment on the issue of the amount owed, to come forward with other evidence in the form of affidavits, discovery documents, or otherwise to overcome Shapiro's denials and establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact. The only affidavit that was submitted by MMB, the Supreme Court noted, addressed the issue of the sufficiency of the property description for the purposes of the lien and did not present evidence as to the amounts owed by Shapiro. Citing Bozeman v. AIU Ins. Co., 262 M 370, 865 P2d 268 (1993), the Supreme Court pointed out that MMB could not rely on arguments of counsel to overcome the existence of an issue of material fact. The Supreme Court further noted, citing Gallatin Trust & Sav. Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), that because the invoices were not submitted or filed by MMB as part of its motion for summary judgment, the invoices are not evidence of what was contained in the invoices but merely allegations of the complaint and were insufficient to overcome Shapiro's denials in his answer. In response to MMB's argument that Shapiro waived any right to object to MMB's evidentiary basis for its motion, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was no evidentiary basis for MMB's motion for summary judgment on the issue of the amount of the debt because the invoices were not submitted for the purposes of the motion but only for the purposes of the complaint and had been effectively addressed by Shapiro's answer. Citing Duensing v. Traveler's Co., 257 M 376, 849 P2d 203 (1993), the Supreme Court also pointed out that just because both parties have moved for summary judgment does not alone establish the absence of a genuine issue of material fact, particularly when the motions are not on precisely the same issues, and the District Court therefore apparently assumed, incorrectly, that there were no such genuine issues.

Mont. Metal Bldg., Inc. v. Shapiro, 283 M 471, 942 P2d 694, 54 St. Rep. 731 (1997), followed, with regard to the holding that the fact that both parties have moved for summary judgment does not in itself establish the absence of genuine issues of material fact, in Sands v. W. Yellowstone, 2007 MT 110, 337 M 209, 158 P3d 432 (2007).

Question Over Existence of Links Between Feline and Plaintiff's Catapulting Down Stairs: Smith argued that Kerns was negligent in letting his cat have the run of his veterinary office because as she was leaving the office, she looked behind her to make sure that the cat was not going to run outside and fell down the stairs. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's grant of summary judgment dismissing Smith's claim, ruling that there was a question as to whether the cat moved, thereby distracting Smith and causing her to fall. Smith v. Kerns, 281 M 114, 931 P2d 717, 54 St. Rep. 86 (1997).

Foreseeability of Results of Practical Joke — Substantial Factor Test of Causation — Defense of Superseding Intervening Cause Unavailable: Codefendants Linda and David played an April Fools' Day joke on their friend Dennis by calling him at another friend's residence and feigning distress. In his rush to assist, Dennis was in a car accident and injured plaintiff Kolar. The District Court summarily dismissed Kolar's claim against Linda and David, holding that reasonable minds could not differ as to the issue of foreseeability and that although the results of the practical joke were tragic, they were not in any way foreseeable by Linda and David. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment, holding that Dennis's state of mind when he left the friend's residence and the extent to which Kolar's injuries should have been foreseeable by Linda and David were questions of fact for the jury, not susceptible to summary judgment. Because the case involved allegations of contributory negligence, multiple causes, and multiple defendants, the use of the substantial factor test of causation was appropriate. The affirmative defense of superseding intervening cause was not available to defendants involved in a practical joke. Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867, 53 St. Rep. 1395 (1996).

Questions as to Buyer's Intent and Seller's Impossibility of Performance — Summary Judgment Improper: Seller sold 20 acres with a separate option agreement to reacquire 15 of the acres. The option agreement stated that if the option was not exercised within a year, buyer was to retain the 15 acres and the option was void. The buyer's affidavit stated that it was his intent to purchase 20 acres, subject to the option, and to retain all 20 acres if the option was not exercised in accordance with its terms. Because of a conflict between the local government master plan (now growth policy) and the zoning map for the area, which was not resolved within the year of the option, the option could not be exercised. The District Court granted seller summary judgment in the seller's action for declaratory relief, ruling that it was impossible for seller to comply with the option because of the conflict between the master plan (now growth policy) and the zoning map and that equity and good conscience required that seller be given reasonable additional time to comply with the option conditions. The language of the option agreement and the buyer's affidavit showed a genuine issue of material fact with regard to the parties' intent. In addition, the buyer's contention that seller was dilatory in exercising the option and that the delay caused the option to expire raised a genuine issue of material fact as to the question of impossibility of performance. Therefore, the grant of summary judgment was error. Furthermore, the District Court exceeded its authority in granting equitable modification of the express terms of the option contract to give seller additional time to perform. 360 Ranch Corp. v. R&D Holding, 278 M 487, 926 P2d 260, 53 St. Rep. 1038 (1996).

Negligent Failure to Illuminate Sidewalk as Question of Fact — Resolution by Jury Rather Than Summary Judgment: Brown was injured on Demaree's unlit sidewalk stepdown landing while delivering a newspaper. The trial court granted Demaree's motion for summary judgment, holding that while a property owner has a duty to maintain sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition and to warn of hidden and lurking dangers, Demaree had done all that society could reasonably ask in this regard. The court noted that Brown had carried a flashlight but chose not to use it and that requiring a home owner to constantly illuminate property would place an unreasonable burden on the home owner that the law did not contemplate. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment. In this case, reasonable minds could differ on whether Demaree should have illuminated the sidewalk or warned of the sidewalk stepdown landing and the question should have been resolved by a jury. The test to be applied by the jury is not whether some other landowner under different factual circumstances is or is not required to illuminate property, but rather whether the landowner keeps a premises reasonably safe and warns of hidden dangers while taking into consideration the use to which the property is put and its setting, location, and other physical characteristics, along with the type of person who would foreseeably visit the premises and the type of hazard or unsafe condition alleged. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Brown v. Demaree, 272 M 579, 901 P2d 567, 52 St. Rep. 819 (1995), following Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985), and distinguishing Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969). See also Welton v. Lucas, 283 M 202, 940 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 562 (1997).

Dismissal of Action for Tortious Interference With Business Relationship Improper: Farrington sued Buttrey for tortious interference with a business relationship because Buttrey's refusal to allow him to enter its stores for any purpose resulted in his being fired by a company that supplied food products to Buttrey. The lower court granted Buttrey's motion for summary judgment, ruling that because of previous dealings with Farrington when he had been employed by a different supplier, Buttrey was justified in excluding him from Buttrey store premises. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that Farrington's duties with the new supplier were different from the duties that he had with the first supplier and that a question of fact existed as to whether or not Buttrey was justified in excluding Farrington from store premises. Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277, 52 St. Rep. 667 (1995).

Evidence by Both Parties Regarding Elements of Liability — Summary Judgment Improper: When both parties produced evidence and testimony to support their arguments concerning the elements of negligence in contention, a summary or directed verdict was inappropriate. Because the determinative question was one of fact and both sides presented facts in support of their positions, the conflicting evidence on questions regarding duty, breach of duty, and causation precluded summary judgment in light of genuine issues of material fact. Contreras v. Vannoy Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 270 M 393, 892 P2d 557, 52 St. Rep. 246 (1995).

Standard of Care for Nonemergency Dental Care: Burlinghams sued dentist Mintz, alleging that Mintz's negligence caused Candance Burlingham's injury. Applying the standard of care set out in Negaard v. Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968), the District Court excluded two of Burlinghams' standard of care experts, one a suburban dentist from St. Louis and the other an oral surgeon from Albany, Oregon, on grounds that the experts had no idea of the standard of care in Eureka, Montana, or a similar community, and lacking expert testimony, the court summarily dismissed plaintiffs' case. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the standard of care enunciated in Negaard was no longer appropriate for nonemergency dental care in Montana. The Supreme Court noted that the foundation for testimony must necessarily include evidence that the witness is familiar with the standard of care at the time when and the place where the alleged act of negligence occurred. Expert testimony may consist of direct or indirect knowledge of the standard of care in the community where the act occurred or in a similar community and may be based on evidence that the standard of care for a procedure at issue is the same in all communities, regardless of size or location. If the basis of the witness's familiarity with the applicable standard of care is that the standard is uniform throughout the country and evidence to the contrary is presented, then the issue raised by the contrary evidence goes to the weight of the witness's testimony but does not preclude its admission. In the case at hand, Burlinghams presented two appropriate experts who were familiar with the applicable nonemergency standard of care for dentists in the community, by either direct or indirect knowledge, thereby meeting their burden of establishing a prima facie case. The District Court erred by excluding the experts and granting summary judgment. Burlingham v. Mintz, 270 M 277, 891 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 181 (1995), overruling, to the extent in conflict, Negaard v. Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968).

Questions Regarding Proper Settlement of Estate — Summary Judgment Precluded: An attorney employed to settle an estate contended that pleadings and supporting documents established that he had a right to funds he retained, based on the parties' agreement and the fact that he settled the case as requested. He also contended that plaintiffs could not establish the elements of ownership and damage essential to a claim for conversion and that he was thus entitled to summary judgment on the issue of conversion of funds from an estate settlement. Plaintiffs offered evidence that there was no such agreement and thus there was a factual issue regarding ownership and that the attorney's withdrawal of funds without consent was sufficient to establish damages. The Supreme Court found that sufficient genuine issues of material fact existed to preclude summary judgment. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Question Regarding Water Hookups and Conformance With Water Users' Bylaws — Summary Judgment Improper: In granting summary judgment, the trial court found that a water users' association had complied with its bylaws in restricting simultaneous use and transfer of memberships. However, there were disputed issues of fact regarding application of the bylaws that precluded summary judgment as a matter of law, and the Supreme Court reversed for further proceedings. Roe v. Corbin Water Users' Ass'n, 267 M 503, 885 P2d 419, 51 St. Rep. 1134 (1994), citing Edgewater Townhouse Homeowner's Ass'n v. Holtman, 256 M 182, 845 P2d 1224 (1993).

Alleged Invalidity of Promissory Notes — Summary Judgment Improper — Stockholder Status Not Prerequisite for RICO Claim: In a suit seeking payment on promissory notes, the first of which was executed in exchange for 1,500 shares of stock, the validity of the note was challenged on the grounds that it was in violation of 35-1-606 (now repealed), which provided that neither promissory notes nor future services constitute payment for shares of a corporation. The Supreme Court held that it was error for the lower court to grant summary judgment when the record did not contain sufficient facts to allow a determination of the invalidity of the promissory notes at issue and that it was further error to dismiss defendant's RICO counterclaims because stockholder status is not a prerequisite for standing to bring a RICO claim. Kuhns v. Koessler, 266 M 339, 880 P2d 1293, 51 St. Rep. 800 (1994).

Failure to Comply With Provisions of Federal Act Incorporated by Reference Into Contract — Affirmative Defense: The Farm Credit Bank instituted suit to foreclose on a loan agreement with the Graveleys and filed for summary judgment. The Graveleys argued that the bank was estopped from foreclosing because it had not complied with the restructuring provisions of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, which had been incorporated by reference into the parties' agreement. The Supreme Court held that the Graveleys were entitled to assert as an affirmative defense the failure of the bank to follow the provisions of the Act and that allowing the defense was not synonymous with allowing a foreclosure court to substitute its judgment for that of the bank's loan officers. The Supreme Court also held that the lower court had correctly denied the motion for summary judgment on the basis that factual issues existed with respect to the merits of the Graveleys' affirmative defense. State ex rel. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. District Court, 267 M 1, 881 P2d 594, 51 St. Rep. 709 (1994), following Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Parsons, 758 F. Supp. 1368 (D.C. Mont. 1990), followed in AgAmerica, FCB v. Robson, 272 M 413, 901 P2d 100, 52 St. Rep. 800 (1995).

Act Within Scope of Employment and Authority — Summary Judgment Improper: Cloutier arranged to have a pickup truck owned by State Medical Oxygen & Supply, a company of which he was an officer and director, used to haul mattresses and employees of Cay Enterprises, a company of which he was also an officer and director. A Cay Enterprises employee who was injured in the move sought damages from State Medical Oxygen & Supply, alleging negligence in supplying the vehicle. The District Court dismissed the claim by summary judgment, improperly applying Restatement (Second) of Torts 390 (1965), which deals with supplying a chattel to a person incompetent to use it safely. The more proper application was Restatement (Second) of Torts 308 (1965), which deals with the use of a thing or engaging in an activity under the control of an actor if the actor knows that the use or activity might create an unreasonable risk of harm to others. Cloutier was operating within the course and scope of his employment with both companies, thus his knowledge as agent was imputed to the company as principal. That knowledge was a question of fact to be determined by a trier of fact. Summary judgment was improper given that issues of negligence remained to be decided. Williams v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 265 M 111, 874 P2d 1225, 51 St. Rep. 458 (1994).

Skier Responsibility Law — Questionable Skiing Conditions as Precluding Summary Judgment: Mead was injured in a skiing accident, but the District Court summarily dismissed his damages claim because the injury resulted from inherent risks of skiing, as set forth in 23-2-736. However, disputed questions of fact existed as to whether the injury was a result of variations in skiing terrain and whether Mead was skiing beyond the designated trail. Those questions were issues to be decided by the finder of fact after consideration of all the evidence; therefore, summary judgment was inappropriate. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Factual Issues Involving Loaned Title and Adverse Possession — Summary Judgment Precluded: Johnson agreed to loan Anderson the title to several lots that Johnson owned on Flathead Lake so that Anderson could mortgage the lots and use the proceeds for a business venture. Johnson and Anderson both executed deeds to the property, and Anderson occupied the property pursuant to a lease agreement. Later, the agreement was breached when Anderson conveyed his interest to a third party and cut trees from the property. Both parties sought a declaration of ownership in a quiet title action. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied Anderson's motion for summary judgment because there were genuine issues of material fact as to the parties' oral agreement, as to the conditions under which Anderson occupied the property, and as to which of the two deeds controlled the transaction. Anderson v. Johnson, 264 M 66, 870 P2d 59, 51 St. Rep. 149 (1994).

Part-Time Employee Fired After Taking Second, Full-Time Job — Mitigation of Damages: It was error to find that a part-time Burger King employee fired shortly after she took a second job at the Black Angus mitigated any wrongful discharge damages by working full-time at the Black Angus and earning more than she earned at Burger King. It was also error to find that defendant was entitled to summary judgment because employee suffered no damages. The work hours at the two places were presumably compatible, so she could have worked both jobs. Therefore, she suffered the loss of her Burger King earnings. Morton v. M-W-M, Inc., 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576, 51 St. Rep. 39 (1994).

Restaurant Employee Fired After Taking Second Job at Another Restaurant While on Vacation: A Burger King assistant manager was fired. Defendant's motion for summary judgment in the wrongful discharge proceeding claimed that plaintiff requested vacation to tend to her family and used it to work at the Black Angus, that she was thus dishonest, and that the Black Angus was a Burger King competitor. Burger King permitted moonlighting with a noncompetitor. Summary judgment for defendant was reversed because plaintiff raised issues as to whether her vacation request was made according to Burger King policy, whether she had misled Burger King to obtain vacation time to work at a second, new job, and whether her two employers were competitors. Morton v. M-W-M, Inc., 263 M 245, 868 P2d 576, 51 St. Rep. 39 (1994).

Question of Potentially Defective and Dangerous Marshmallows — Summary Judgment Improper: After a small child aspirated a piece of marshmallow and suffered brain damage, the family sued the manufacturer and attending physician, contending that the marshmallows were defective and unreasonably dangerous because they lacked an effective warning. In summarily dismissing the issue, the trial court relied on Comment j, Restatement (Second) of Torts 402A, for the proposition that a seller is not required to warn with respect to products that are only dangerous when consumed in excessive quantities if that danger is generally known and recognized. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erroneously resolved questions of fact regarding the chemical properties of marshmallows, the foreseeability of the danger of aspiration in children, and causation. Summary judgment was therefore improper, and the case was remanded for trial. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Issues of Fact Regarding Damages From Fish Kill — Summary Judgment Improper: Hagens sought damages when over 8,000 pounds of trout in their fish farm died after the county weed management district applied a weed poison adjacent to the ditch that supplied water to the farm. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the district and the chemical manufacturer, concluding that Hagens had failed to submit sufficient evidence to establish that exposure to the weed poison caused the death of the fish. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that although a plaintiff does not meet the burden of proof by merely establishing that an incident occurred, in actions dealing with product liability, sufficient evidence to make a prima facie case may consist of establishing the circumstances of the incident, similar occurrences under similar circumstances, and elimination of alternative causes. Substantial questions of fact existed as to the cause of death, including contrasting expert testimony, to preclude summary judgment on the issues of liability and punitive damages. Hagen v. Dow Chem. Co., 261 M 487, 863 P2d 413, 50 St. Rep. 1421 (1993).

Genuine Issue Whether Employee Fired for Cause or for Reporting Crimes at Workplace: An auto dealer employee reported apparent illegal drug activities by several dealership employees to state authorities and at their request agreed to continue to provide such information and to attempt to purchase illegal drugs. There was no evidence that he was to be paid for this. He was fired 6 days later, allegedly because, as stated in a recorded phone call he made to his boss, he was "a [expletive deleted] snitch and we don't want you around here . . . . Every time we make a move, you call the [expletive deleted] FBI." Several weeks later, he was paid $40 for the information provided. Summary judgment for the employer in a wrongful discharge action thwarted the very purpose of the statute, which provides that a discharge in retaliation for reporting a violation of public policy is a wrongful discharge, and was reversed, although denial of employee's motion for summary judgment was affirmed because employer alleged reasons that if proved would support employee's dismissal. The case was remanded to determine whether the discharge was for good cause or for reporting a violation of public policy. Krebs v. Ryan Oldsmobile, 255 M 291, 843 P2d 312, 49 St. Rep. 1016 (1992), followed in Motarie v. N. Mont. Joint Refuse Disposal District, 274 M 239, 907 P2d 154, 52 St. Rep. 1209 (1995).

Material Question of Value of Profit Share Granted Employee as Element of Termination Agreement — Summary Judgment Improper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for a distribution to him of a share of company profits, both prior to and after the termination of employment. Any issue of profit distributions prior to termination was barred by a waiver of claims. However, a question of material fact regarding the calculation of and disproportionate nature of the profit sharing distribution after termination was sufficient to preclude summary judgment because the amount to be paid was unknown to both parties at the time of termination. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Questions of Proper Adherence to Personnel Policies as Precluding Summary Judgment on Issue of Wrongful Discharge: The existence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding personnel policies in effect at the time of an employee's alleged wrongful discharge, coupled with denial of the employee's opportunity to enter into evidence written personnel policies purported to be in effect at the time of discharge, effectively denied the employee a hearing on the issue and precluded summary dismissal of the employee's wrongful discharge claim. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992).

Issues of Fact Arising From Separation Agreement — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: A separation agreement provided that the husband's partnership interests be liquidated and the proceeds be placed in trust for the payment of child support. When the interests had not been liquidated or child support paid in full 37 months after dissolution, the District Court granted summary judgment, holding husband responsible for $52,200 in support. Reversing and remanding, the Supreme Court found summary judgment inappropriate when issues of fact remained as to the value of the partnership, reasons for failure to liquidate, and husband's capacity to pay the support obligations. In re Marriage of Wilsey, 253 M 85, 831 P2d 590, 49 St. Rep. 406 (1992).

Failure to Consider Affidavit of Expert on Value of Farm Equipment — Question of Whether Sales Were Commercially Reasonable as Precluding Summary Judgment: The District Court granted summary judgment to creditor who sold farm equipment to satisfy deficiencies, finding that the sales were commercially reasonable because the creditor properly notified debtor Michels of the pending sales pursuant to 30-9-504 (now repealed). In opposing summary judgment, Michels submitted the affidavit of a former farm implement dealer who was familiar with the equipment and who testified that the amount sought through the sales was far below the value of the equipment. The affidavit raised a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether the sales were commercially reasonable that was sufficient to constitute error in the grant of summary judgment. Agricredit Acceptance Corp. v. Michels, 250 M 23, 817 P2d 704, 48 St. Rep. 874 (1991).

Summary Judgment Improper — Terms of Purchase Agreement Unclear: The defendant had entered into an agreement with the bank to purchase certain real estate from the bank and had placed $50,000 in escrow as earnest money. The buyer refused to go through with the sale on the basis that the mortgage presented by the bank at the time of sale differed from terms agreed to in the buy-sell agreement. The lower court granted the bank's motion for summary judgment and awarded the bank the earnest money and attorney fees. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the terms of the mortgage were different from the terms set out in the buy-sell agreement and that therefore the summary judgment was improper. Payne Realty & Housing, Inc. v. First Sec. Bank of Livingston, 247 M 374, 807 P2d 177, 48 St. Rep. 234 (1991). On remand, the District Court reasoned that the bank, as both lender and seller, did not offer the buyer financing terms consistent with the buy-sell agreement and that because there was no meeting of the minds, summary judgment was proper and the buyer was entitled to return of the earnest money, together with interest and attorney fees. The bank appealed, contending that genuine issues existed precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court agreed, concluding that the buyer had not established an absence of factual issues with regard to his allegation that the buy-sell agreement was not binding or that if the contract was binding, the bank was the breaching party. Further, contradictory evidence showing the possibility of issues of prevention of contract performance, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, promissory estoppel, and negligent misrepresentation also made summary judgment improper. The case was remanded again for resolution of the factual issues. Payne Realty & Housing, Inc. v. First Sec. Bank of Livingston, 256 M 19, 844 P2d 90, 49 St. Rep. 1098 (1992).

Dispute as to Existence of Oral Contract: When there was a dispute as to the existence of an oral contract and as to whether, if there was such a contract, it was capable of performance within a year, it was error to grant summary judgment. Beaverhead Bar Supply, Inc. v. Harrington, 247 M 117, 805 P2d 560, 48 St. Rep. 117 (1991).

Control by General Contractor With Subcontractor Consent: It was error to grant summary judgment in an action for a work-related accident when the employee alleged that the general contractor had exercised direct control of the employee with the consent of the employee's employer, the subcontractor. Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519, 48 St. Rep. 59 (1991).

Refusal to Grant Defendant's Motion for Ruling of No Liability — Plaintiff's Motion for Ruling of Liability Not Automatically Granted: In a wrongful discharge case, the defendant brought a summary judgment motion seeking a ruling that it was not liable as a matter of law. The lower court refused to grant the motion. The plaintiff then moved the court for a ruling that the defendant was liable as a matter of law, and the lower court granted the motion, stating that it was compelled to grant the motion because it had denied the defendant's motion for a ruling of no liability. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the denial of the defendant's motion only meant that the defendant's nonliability could not be determined as a matter of law but that the defendant could still argue its case during trial. The ruling against the defendant did not mean that the lower court had to grant the plaintiff's motion on the opposite side of the question. State ex rel. First Bank System v. District Court, 240 M 77, 782 P2d 1260, 46 St. Rep. 1956 (1989).

Ambiguity of Draft Purporting to Be Release That Is Also Receipt — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court improperly granted summary judgment for an insurance company after finding plaintiff had signed a release from suit. The Supreme Court found a contractual ambiguity existed because the release language was contained in a $1,500 draft that purported to be a release but was also a receipt in certain situations. The District Court adopted verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions presented by the insurer, which put it in the position of a trier of factual issues rather than determining whether genuine issues of material fact existed on the motion for summary judgment. Existence of ambiguity precluded summary judgment. Buskirk v. Nelson, 237 M 455, 774 P2d 398, 46 St. Rep. 964 (1989).

Challenge of Validity of Release on Basis of Unconscionability — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff signed a release for personal injuries with an insurance company in exchange for $8,900. Plaintiff later sued insureds, who were granted summary judgment after pleading the affirmative defense of release. However, a release is governed by contract law and may be rescinded for the same reasons that allow rescission of a contract. Therefore, the validity of a release may be challenged on the basis of unconscionability. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment after finding the release was unconscionable based on: (1) plaintiff's dire financial situation, lack of education and legal advice, and vulnerability; (2) substantial uncertainty as to the extent of injury and future prognosis at the time of settlement; and (3) haste in executing the release. Taken together, the circumstances raised an issue of fact whether justice was done, precluding summary judgment. Kelly v. Widner, 236 M 523, 771 P2d 142, 46 St. Rep. 591 (1989).

Nonstatutory Exceptions to At-Will Termination of Employment — Reversal of Summary Judgment: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment dismissing employee's suit, holding that factual questions existed on whether the termination fell under one of the four nonstatutory exceptions to the right of the at-will employer to discharge an employee. The court stated that the exceptions were: (1) the discharge violates public policy; (2) the discharge breaches an express or implied promise of job security; (3) the discharge breaches the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and (4) negligent discharge. Prout v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 236 M 152, 772 P2d 288, 46 St. Rep. 257 (1989).

Issue of Material Facts as to Plaintiff's Mental Illness — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Nearly 8 years after the plaintiff was discharged from his employment, his guardian ad litem filed a complaint against his former employer alleging wrongful discharge and claiming that the 3-year statute of limitation was tolled due to the plaintiff's mental illness. Upon the employer's motion for summary judgment, the trial court dismissed the complaint as untimely filed. In response to the employer's contention that the plaintiff's pursuit of other benefit claims demonstrates an absence of mental illness, the Supreme Court held that that is an issue to be decided at trial, not on a motion for summary judgment, because it is not an issue that is susceptible to resolution based on written affidavits without the benefit of cross-examination in court. Therefore, the matter was remanded because there is a material issue of fact concerning the plaintiff's mental condition that precludes summary judgment. Bestwina v. Village Bank, 235 M 329, 767 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 27 (1989).

Question of Encroachment in Sale of Property — Summary Judgment Improper: A grant of summary judgment was improper on a claim for breach of contract for sale of real property because neither party submitted proof as to whether there was a legal right of encroachment, and this fact question was material to the outcome. D'Agostino v. Schapp, 230 M 59, 748 P2d 466, 45 St. Rep. 14 (1988).

Responsibility of Defendant or Third Party — Issue of Fact: Defendant city contracted with third party consultant to provide engineering services for a pumphouse project. The pumphouse was allegedly built on the land of another property owner. The trial court adopted the city's contention that, as engineer, the consultant was responsible for the error. Summary judgment was granted. The Supreme Court vacated the judgment, finding a contested question of fact concerning whether the city or the consultant had the responsibility to locate and actually did locate the pumphouse site. Stidham v. Whitefish, 229 M 170, 746 P2d 591, 44 St. Rep. 1869 (1987).

Parol Evidence Necessary to Determine Intention When Latent Ambiguity Exists: A party transferred property back to sellers in lieu of foreclosure. The transfer arguably constituted a technical conveyance. "Conveyance" had different meanings for the parties and therefore was to be interpreted in accord with the manifest intent of the parties. Parol evidence was necessarily admissible to demonstrate and explain this latent ambiguity, and summary judgment on the issue was improper. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987), followed in Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Agency Relationship of National Realty Organization With Locally Owned Franchisee as Question of Fact: Summary judgment was improper where a genuine issue as to a material fact existed regarding home buyers' reliance on the name and reputation of a national realty organization despite an "independently owned and operated" disclaimer displayed on materials furnished by the local franchisee. Burkland v. Electronic Realty Associates, Inc., 228 M 113, 740 P2d 1142, 44 St. Rep. 1384 (1987).

Question Whether Checks Cashed Without Authorization — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court improperly granted summary judgment to bank when it assumed, absent evidence in the record, that checks were cashed by an unauthorized signer. The determination that the signature was unauthorized could not be made without dealing with the rights and liabilities between the signer and the person to whom the checks were originally made out. First Nat'l Bank in Eureka v. Giles, 225 M 467, 733 P2d 357, 44 St. Rep. 407 (1987).

Nonapplicability of North Dakota Dram Shop Law to Montana Bar — Liability Under Montana Law Not Litigated in North Dakota: In a wrongful death action, the personal representative filed suit in North Dakota and Montana. The North Dakota Supreme Court dismissed the action with prejudice, narrowly holding that a Montana bar could not be liable under the North Dakota Dram Shop Act; however, the issue of liability under Montana law was never litigated. The Montana Supreme Court held that, under the Full Faith and Credit Clause, Art. IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., and under 26-3-203, relitigation of the issue of extraterritorial effect of the North Dakota Dram Shop Act was barred by res judicata. However, factual questions precluded summary judgment in Montana, and as the liability issue was not litigated, Montana courts were free to examine the issue. Thoring v. LaCounte, 225 M 77, 733 P2d 340, 44 St. Rep. 264 (1987). See also Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329, 43 St. Rep. 93 (1986), and Thoring v. Bottensek, 350 NW 2d 586 (N.D. 1984).

Questions of Anticipated Harm and Duty of Ordinary Care as Material Issues of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In reversing a summary judgment as improper, the Supreme Court found that material questions of fact for a jury existed on the issues of whether: (1) the town of Whitehall should have anticipated that harm would be caused by the condition of the sidewalk despite the knowledge and obviousness of the condition; and (2) the town of Whitehall exercised ordinary care to keep the sidewalk reasonably safe. Even if it appeared that recovery under these issues was very remote, they constituted genuine issues of material fact; therefore, summary judgment was not appropriate. Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986).

Interpretation of Deed Reservation — Summary Judgment Improper: When a royalty reservation in a deed was ambiguous and the true intent of the parties was discernible only with reference to extrinsic evidence and not from the deed alone, it was error for the trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of the mineral owners against the royalty owners. Proctor v. Werk, 220 M 246, 714 P2d 171, 43 St. Rep. 333 (1986), distinguished in Ferriter v. Bartmess, 281 M 100, 931 P2d 709, 54 St. Rep. 79 (1997).

Summary Judgment Erroneous on Damage Issue — Affidavit Not Considered: Appellants requested the lower court to wait until an engineer's affidavit was submitted before ruling on the county's motion for summary judgment on a road damage issue. The court ruled on the motion without waiting for the affidavit. The Supreme Court remanded for consideration of the affidavit by the court. Lee v. Flathead County, 217 M 370, 704 P2d 1060, 42 St. Rep. 1258 (1985), distinguished in Carelli v. Hall, 279 M 202, 926 P2d 756, 53 St. Rep. 1116 (1996).

Issue of Fact — Capacity in Which Promissory Note Signed: Summary judgment was not proper in an action on a promissory note when defendants had been sued individually but claimed, despite the appearance of the note, to have executed the note in their capacity as officers of a landscaping company. Although generally an unambiguous note cannot be varied by parol evidence, 30-4-403 specifically allows proof beyond the provisions of the note itself; thus, defendants' contentions established the existence of an issue of material fact. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank v. Papp, 215 M 494, 698 P2d 851, 42 St. Rep. 577 (1985).

Insurance Coverage — Family Relationship — Implied Consent — Issue of Material Fact: The son ran away from home with his parents' vehicle and subsequently was involved in a one-car accident. The trial court erred in granting summary judgment, holding that there was no liability insurance coverage for the insureds' minor son under the parents' policy. Because a family relationship exists between the insureds and the vehicle's driver, the parents' implied consent to their son's use of the vehicle remains a genuine issue of material fact. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Janzer, 215 M 260, 697 P2d 460, 42 St. Rep. 337 (1985).

Attorney's Obligation to Deal in Good Faith: Because of the inequality that exists between attorney and client in bargaining over a fee, attorney has an obligation to deal fairly and in good faith when negotiating, charging, and collecting a fee. In a fee dispute over handling of dissolution, client pleaded sufficient facts to raise question whether there was a breach of the obligation owed to deal fairly and in good faith. District Court erred in granting summary judgment for attorney. Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial, giving client leave to amend counterclaim to specifically describe a breach of the implied covenant. Morse v. Espeland, 215 M 148, 696 P2d 428, 42 St. Rep. 251 (1985).

Effect of Guaranty on Promissory Note — Issue of Material Fact: The District Court erred in granting summary judgment because material issues of fact emerged at the hearing on motion for summary judgment. The parties to a loan guaranty both had a different idea concerning the amount of the loan proceeds being guaranteed by plaintiffs. Summary judgment is usually inappropriate where the intent of the contracting parties is an important consideration. Twite v. First Bank, 214 M 348, 692 P2d 471, 41 St. Rep. 2518 (1984), followed in Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

Priority of Interests in Receivership Property: In proceeding relating to the priority of interests in the property of entity in receivership, summary judgment for plaintiffs was improper where several important issues of fact remained, especially concerning the validity of the security interests held by certain creditors. The judgment was reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Doubt Resolved in Favor of Party Opposing: Reagan's predecessor in interest converted his "net proceeds interest" in certain oil and gas leases into a "general obligation and liability" of Union Oil and Montana Power. Reagan brought suit alleging that Union Oil and Montana Power had improperly withheld portions of Reagan's annual payment for payment of taxes. The District Court erred in granting Reagan's motion for summary judgment as there was a genuine issue of material fact concerning whether the conversion to a general obligation and liability created an "economic interest". In addition, the conduct of the parties in the execution and acquiescence to the terms of the division orders created a genuine issue of fact. The party opposing a motion for summary judgment must be afforded the benefit of all reasonable inference which may be drawn from the offered proof. Reagan v. Union Oil Co., 208 M 1, 675 P2d 953, 41 St. Rep. 131 (1984). See also Dare v. Mont. Petroleum Marketing Co., 212 M 274, 687 P2d 1015, 41 St. Rep. 1735 (1984), and Whitehawk v. Clark, 238 M 14, 776 P2d 484, 46 St. Rep. 1053 (1989).

Negligence — Judgment Based on Facts Deemed Admitted Due to Failure to Respond to Request for Admission: On June 29, 1979, plaintiff filed a complaint alleging that in July 1977, defendants negligently caused herbicides to be sprayed in a springwater ditch leading to plaintiff's pond and that the herbicides killed 32,411 rainbow trout which plaintiff was raising in his pond for commercial resale. On June 3, 1981, plaintiff filed a request for admission of facts and genuineness of documents under Rule 36(a), M.R.Civ.P. Defendants failed to respond within 30 days of service. Defendants did not answer the complaint until July 29, 1981, 1 day after plaintiff moved for a default judgment. On June 15, 1982, plaintiff moved for summary judgment, alleging that no genuine issue of material fact existed since each of the matters set forth in his request for admission was deemed admitted and that plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. The court gave defendants 1 week from June 30, 1982, to file a brief in opposition to the motion for summary judgment. No brief was filed until the day before a hearing scheduled by the court in February 1983. In opposition to the motion, defendants argued that summary judgment was improper because plaintiff had not established each of the elements of negligence and that genuine issues of material fact existed. The District Court ruled in favor of plaintiff, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Because defendants had admitted each fact necessary to sustain plaintiff's negligence claim against them, plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Further, defendants had not properly raised any additional material factual issues. The initial burden of proof in summary judgment matters rests with the moving party, but that burden shifts when the record discloses no genuine issue of material fact. Detert v. Lake County, 207 M 460, 674 P2d 1097, 41 St. Rep. 76 (1984).

Issue of Fact as to Whether Promissory Note Procured by Fraud: In 1978, plaintiff had leased a number of mink to defendants in return for payment by defendants of a portion of the annual kit crop. At the time of the lease, plaintiff strongly suspected that a small percentage of the mink were infected with Aleutian Disease (AD), a disease impairing mink productivity and resistance to other diseases. In December 1980, after 2 years of greater than normal losses among the leased mink, the parties replaced the lease with a promissory note containing a clause releasing plaintiff from any liability arising out of the lease. After the promissory note had been made, plaintiff informed defendants that tests of his mink in November 1980 indicated that 30% were infected with AD. Subsequent testing of defendants' mink revealed that 70% had AD. Defendants made no payments on the note. In a suit on the note, defendants counterclaimed, alleging that the note had been procured by fraud. The District Court granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that defendants' affidavit indicated an issue of material fact, i.e., whether defendants learned that the mink had AD before or after the note was signed, and that the plaintiff had not met the burden of establishing that there was no issue of material fact. Rogers v. Swingley, 206 M 306, 670 P2d 1386, 40 St. Rep. 1676 (1983).

Negligence Issue — Not Normally Susceptible to Summary Judgment: Plaintiff was injured when a car struck her as she was crossing a street at an intersection. Plaintiff sued the driver of the car and a beer distributing company whose truck was at least partially blocking one of four lanes of traffic and the intersection. The District Court granted summary judgment to the distributor. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the District Court's decision, holding that issues of negligence are not ordinarily susceptible to summary judgment. There was a material issue of fact as to whether the truck was illegally parked, and if so, whether the truck's position was a proximate cause of the accident. Hendrickson v. Neiman, 204 M 367, 665 P2d 219, 40 St. Rep. 909 (1983).

Insurance Coverage — Accidental Death Benefits: It was error to grant summary judgment to the insurers when material issues of fact remain regarding the policy, premiums, coverage, and the insured's knowledge of such matters. Darrah v. Milbank Mut. Ins. Co., 202 M 323, 658 P2d 374, 40 St. Rep. 117 (1983).

Failure to Hear Liability Issue — Summary Judgment Denial of Due Process: A complaint for an injunction was filed, and a temporary restraining order was granted. On defendant's appeal of denial of his motion to quash, the order was upheld and the case remanded "with directions to expedite the trial of the cause for damages". Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment based on the Supreme Court opinion was granted, the court stating that the Supreme Court had affirmed its judgment and directed the District Court to have a hearing on damages following remand. There was in fact never a hearing or trial on the merits of the issue of liability, and it is clear that the District Court misconstrued the language of the Supreme Court opinion, which had not decided the issue of liability but had merely decided it was proper to continue the temporary restraining order and had remanded for an expedited trial. The foreclosure of defendant's opportunity for a hearing denied him due process, and the summary judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a trial on the merits. Boyer v. Kargacin, 202 M 54, 656 P2d 197, 39 St. Rep. 2323 (1982).

Swimming Pool Accident — Negligence of Pool Owner: A father suing for alleged injury to his son found submerged in defendant's swimming pool was properly denied summary judgment where defendant presented a number of genuine issues of material fact, including the question of whether defendant provided a sufficient ratio of lifeguards to pool users, the question of how long the son was under the water, and the question of whether defendant had properly instructed its patrons in pool use. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982), distinguished in Schwabe v. Custer's Inn Associates, 2000 MT 325, 303 M 15, 15 P3d 903, 57 St. Rep. 1370 (2000).

Construction of Terms of Agreement — Factual Issue Precluding Summary Judgment: A June 1976 agreement between the parties provided that plaintiff would advance money for the downpayment in the purchase of real property in Billings and would receive certain benefits, including a 50% interest in the property, in return. Plaintiff was to control any contractual arrangements until defendant had contributed, by payment of the monthly installments, a sum equal to the downpayment. In 1977, prior to the equalization of contributions, plaintiff entered negotiations to sell the property. No agreement between plaintiff and defendant was reached regarding the sale, and plaintiff filed suit seeking specific performance of the agreement. Plaintiff was granted summary judgment allowing him exclusive control of contract negotiations concerning the land for 1 year. Defendant contended on appeal that summary judgment was improper as there were factual controversies as to whether he had ever received an offer to sell the property and whether "control of any contractual arrangements" contemplated selling the property. Where, as here, the written agreement was imprecise and not artfully drawn, reference to extrinsic evidence indicating the intention of the parties would be proper, particularly since the same attorney represented both parties. Factual issues existed, and the case was remanded for trial on the merits. Downs v. Smyk, 200 M 334, 651 P2d 1238, 39 St. Rep. 1786 (1982).

Issue of Fact as to Existence of Grantor Support Agreement: Over a period of years, grantor, a 95-year-old woman, had deeded various parcels of land near her home to several relatives. She filed a complaint against grantees, alleging that the land had been conveyed in return for their promise to support her and that they had failed to live up to their agreement. As relief, grantor sought either damages or, in the event that the agreement was determined to be unenforceable under the Statute of Frauds, return of the land. Grantees denied the existence of any agreement and pleaded the Statute of Limitations as a defense. The District Court granted grantees' motion for summary judgment and further ruled that grantor's claims were barred by the Statute of Limitations. The Supreme Court reversed in part, ruling that grantor was entitled to present evidence on two of her claims because Montana law provides for the enforcement of a grantor support agreement, that there was a genuine issue of fact as to whether or not such an agreement had been made, and that the trial court's ruling on the Statute of Limitations was premature. Additionally, the court ruled that grantor had no claim for return of the land since, if an agreement existed, grantor's partial performance of that agreement rendered the Statute of Frauds inapplicable, and if no agreement existed, grantor was not entitled to any relief. Sands v. Nestegard, 198 M 421, 646 P2d 1189, 39 St. Rep. 1101 (1982).

Breach of Stockbroker's Duty: A customer of a stock brokerage firm brought a negligence action alleging the firm's failure to disclose the true risks involved in a commodity straddle. Summary judgment was inappropriate, there being issues of material fact regarding breach of duty by the broker and proximate cause of the customer's injuries. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Negligent Misrepresentation: A stockbroker testified that what he told a customer regarding the risk of a transaction was what he believed to be true. The customer testified that he did not believe he had been deliberately misinformed by the broker. A prima facie case of negligent misrepresentation having been made, summary judgment was improper. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Stockbroker's Duty to Execute Order: Because of a deteriorating commodity spread position, a customer instructed his stockbroker to "lift a leg". The broker would not immediately execute this order until the risk could be explained to the customer. Whether or not the broker's duty to execute an order within a reasonable time was breached was a genuine issue of material fact for which summary judgment should not have been granted. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Property Settlement Agreement: The intent of the parties as to the finality of their property settlement agreement, the effect of the husband's failure to disclose an insurance policy, and the intent of the husband's beneficiary designation on the life insurance policy in light of the property settlement agreement were factual issues making the trial court's entry of summary judgment premature. Soha v. West, 196 M 95, 637 P2d 1185, 38 St. Rep. 2153 (1981), distinguished in Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 308 (1993).

Summary Judgment Improper if Proven Allegations Would Show Breach of Duty: When a duty is imposed upon defendant and plaintiff's allegations, if proven, would support a finding of breach of the duty, summary judgment for the defendant is improper. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981). See also Abell v. Reno, 204 M 156, 663 P2d 335, 40 St. Rep. 738 (1983).

Issue of Conspiracy of Government Officials Not Resolvable by Summary Judgment: Where the defendant state and federal livestock officials revoked the right of the plaintiffs to carry on a portion of their veterinary practice, the court refused to grant the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the issue of the conspiracy to deny the plaintiffs their constitutional rights. Questions of material fact remain as to certain conversations between and actions by the defendants that cannot be resolved by summary judgment. Doran v. Houle, 516 F. Supp. 1231, 38 St. Rep. 1086 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Issue of Qualified Immunity of Government Official Not Resolvable by Summary Judgment: Where the defendant state and federal livestock officials revoked the right of the plaintiffs to carry on a portion of their veterinary practice, the court could not, on the basis of the affidavits submitted by one defendant, find that he was entitled to qualified immunity. That immunity is available to executive officers who act within the scope of their discretion and who have a good faith belief of that fact. In this case, material issues of fact remained in question and summary judgment was therefore inappropriate. Doran v. Houle, 516 F. Supp. 1231, 38 St. Rep. 1086 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Abuse of Deposition Process — Basis for Tort of Abuse of Process: The plaintiff and his wife were divorced in 1976. The plaintiff sought to have the property agreement set aside as unconscionable and failed. In 1979, he filed a fraud action against his ex-wife and her attorney in conjunction with the dissolution. The ex-wife petitioned the court to hold plaintiff in contempt for failure to comply with the dissolution decree. Plaintiff, residing in Idaho, was served, failed to appear, and was held in contempt. The judge issued a bench warrant for his arrest. Defendants, counsel for the ex-wife in the fraud case, set a time to take plaintiff's deposition in Bozeman. Subsequent to noticing the deposition, defendants notified the District Court Judge that plaintiff would be in Bozeman that day. After taking plaintiff's deposition, defendants notified the judge, who had plaintiff arrested. Plaintiff filed suit against defendants for the tort of malicious abuse of process, and defendants moved for summary judgment. The federal court held that abuse of the power granted under Rule 30, M.R.Civ.P., relating to depositions can serve as the basis for the tort of abuse of process. Factual issues existed, so that the summary judgment motion was denied. Hopper v. Drysdale, 524 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 1970 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Cost of Overrun — Material Issue of Reliance on Plans: Kalispell argued that contract documents plainly advised all bidders to make their own determination as to the amount of material to be moved and not to rely on the figures on the city's plans and specifications. By entering into the contract, allegedly the bidders bound themselves to do the rough grading at the price bid and should get no additional compensation for overrun. However, the District Court rejected the city's argument that the plaintiffs' complaint, therefore, failed to state a claim and that there could be no issues of material fact before the District Court. Based on a recent line of cases from the Supreme Court, the District Judge determined that the factfinder had to hear the evidence in order to find whether or not the contractors justifiably relied on the plans. Stenerson v. Kalispell, 193 M 8, 629 P2d 773, 38 St. Rep. 938 (1981).

Livestock on Roadway — Persons Protected by Statute — Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Plaintiff sued defendant, alleging the injuries he sustained in a motorcycle accident were caused by the presence of defendant's goats on the road. Defendant contended that 81-4-201 and 81-4-202, enacted in 1895, were enacted to protect the property of landowners, and therefore motorists were not a protected class under the statutes. Defendant moved for summary judgment. The court found that the continuing in effect of these statutes and their amendment in 1945 were part of the historical process of conforming the open-range law to the needs of the modern world. The court held that the complaint stated a cause of action and denied the motion for summary judgment. Read v. Buckner, 514 F. Supp. 281, 38 St. Rep. 735 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Materiality of Facts in Negligence Action — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: In an action for damages caused by the wrongful death of the plaintiff's son as a result of the negligent operation of the defendant's automobile, the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion for summary judgment. The affidavits submitted by the parties show discrepancies in whether there were other children on the highway where the decedent was struck and as to the location where the decedent, a 5-year-old boy, ran onto the highway. Contrary to defendant's assertions, these facts are material to the case as they bear upon the defendant's ability and duty to exercise due care. Because material facts are in dispute, the motion was improperly granted. Big Man v. St., 192 M 29, 626 P2d 235, 38 St. Rep. 362 (1981).

Piercing Corporate Veil — Fraud — Agency — Factual Issues: In an action on a promissory note given on a contract for deed involving multiple corporate identities of defendant Ming, who was the real estate agent for seller and who was the purchaser of the property, denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment was entirely proper where the following factual issues were in dispute and could only be resolved by a trial on the merits: (1) whether defendant operated certain corporations as his personal businesses; (2) whether defendant fraudulently represented to plaintiffs that he would be liable on the contract and notes; (3) whether defendant acted as an agent for the defendant corporations; and (4) whether the corporate veils should be pierced so as to hold defendant liable on the notes. Flemmer v. Ming, 190 M 403, 621 P2d 1038, 37 St. Rep. 1916 (1980).

Obligation to Insure and Defend Under Ambiguous Contract — Genuine Issue: In an action based on the obligation to insure and defend in a lawsuit by a subcontractor's employee for injury caused by the plaintiff's employees, the Supreme Court found a genuine issue of material fact in the question of whether the work being performed by the plaintiff's employees at the time of the accident was undertaken pursuant to Contract No. 2081, whose language "risks of any kind relating to construction" was the focal point of the duty to insure and defend. Determination of the intent of the parties regarding such ambiguous or uncertain language was precluded by the erroneous grant of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Anaconda Co. v. Gen. Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 189 M 447, 616 P2d 363, 37 St. Rep. 1589 (1980).

Issue of Fact as to the Existence of an Oral Contract: Defendant/respondent contends on appeal that evidence defendant submitted in trial court to prove existence of an oral contract was sufficient to exclude any real doubt as to the existence of an issue of fact regarding the existence of an oral contract. The Supreme Court held where defendant submitted as evidence an affidavit alleging existence of a contract, a letter from plaintiff to defendant referring to an agreement, on admission from plaintiff with confused information and where the two parties disagree as to the existence of the contract, defendant had not met his burden of establishing the absence of an issue of fact as to the existence of the oral contract as alleged. Reaves v. Reinbold, 189 M 284, 615 P2d 896 (1980).

Issue of Fact as to Whether a Written Agreement Supersedes an Oral Agreement: Plaintiff's motion for summary judgment was properly denied where there was some question of fact as to whether one written agreement, signed by plaintiff as agent for his company by the company vice president, and by defendant entitling defendant to a salary advance supersedes a prior oral agreement allegedly made between plaintiff and defendant in which plaintiff personally guaranteed a salary to defendant. Reviewing the relationship of the two agreements in the light most favorable to the defendant, the alleged oral agreement is collateral to the written contract is distinct, involves a different party, and is able to stand independent of the other. Reaves v. Reinbold, 189 M 284, 615 P2d 896 (1980).

Petition for Real Estate Commission — Broker/Buyer's Duty to Disclose: Plaintiff employed defendant, a real estate broker, to sell his ranch. Defendant produced some willing buyers who were rejected by the plaintiff. Defendant then found a purchaser willing to buy the machinery and cattle but not the land. Defendant contacted several neighbors, each of whom were willing to buy a portion of the ranch. Defendant did not disclose this to plaintiff. Defendant then made an offer in conjunction with the buyer of the machinery and cattle in anticipation of selling the ranch in parcels to the neighbors. Defendant did not disclose that he was one of the offerors or that he had made contacts with other potential buyers after his offer was made. The court held that defendant had a duty of full disclosure until he was legally bound to buy the property, the day on which the buy/sell agreement was signed. It was improper to grant defendant summary judgment in this situation. First Trust Co. of Mont. v. McKenna, 188 M 534, 614 P2d 1027 (1980).

Consumer Protection Act Violation Alleged as Cause of Accident — Agency Rule Not in Conflict With Federal Law — Causation for Jury: The District Court properly denied summary judgment on plaintiff's count which claimed misrepresentation as to the odometer reading on a used car sold to her by defendant corporation as the proximate cause of her accident and subsequent injury. A state agency rule adopted pursuant to 30-14-104 was not inconsistent with the rules and decisions of the FTC and the federal courts, although the rule deals with sales and the main purpose of the federal law is to prevent unlawful restraint of trade. Whether the alleged violation was a cause of plaintiff's damages was a jury issue. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

Requirement for Payment of Insurance — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: The contract for the retail installment purchase of a mobile home contained a clause stating that credit life and disability insurance was not required by the seller. The buyer, now deceased, applied for the insurance and paid the first premium. The retail installment sale contract was assigned to the First National Bank, making it a creditor. An employee of the seller decided the buyer was not eligible for insurance and never forwarded his application to the parent company. Buyer's premium payment was not returned to him until the attorney for his estate requested payment on the insurance. If the payment by the buyer was required, 33-21-206(3) applies, and the seller was required to give written notice to the buyer which was not done. If no payment was required, 33-21-206(3) does not apply. This is a genuine issue of material fact and therefore summary judgment was improperly granted. Cameron v. First Nat'l Bank, 186 M 345, 607 P2d 1113 (1980).

Uncontroverted Issues Not Established by Invalid Collateral Judgment: When a contempt citation was issued in a separate, but related action, because of defendant's violation of Writs of Attachment and Execution, it was proper in a collateral attack to show that plaintiff had failed to comply with statutory requirements for attachment of property and hence void the underlying judgment upon which the contempt was based. As a result of the error in finding the defendant in contempt, the contempt order had no preclusive effect on the present case and it was error to strike defendant's defenses and grant plaintiff summary judgment upon the theories of res judicata, collateral estoppel, and collateral attack. Phillips v. Loberg, 186 M 331, 607 P2d 561 (1980).

Fact Issue as to Boundary Line Agreement in Adverse Possession Case — Summary Judgment Improper: In a case involving a contention of adverse possession, a genuine issue of material fact existed, namely whether an agreement existed between the parties which extended the boundary line between their properties to include the disputed portion of land. Therefore, the motion for a summary judgment was granted in error. Nott v. Booke, 183 M 260, 598 P2d 1137 (1979).

Facts Showing Laches Not Contained in Record: Laches means negligence to the assertion of a right and exists where there has been a delay of such duration as to render enforcement of an asserted right unenforceable. A complainant can be charged with laches if, but only if, he was either actually or presumptively aware of his rights. A complainant is presumptively aware of his rights where the circumstances of which he is cognizant are such as to put a man of ordinary prudence on inquiry. Here, summary judgment is not supported by the record because the record does not contain facts establishing that the appellant had knowledge of his rights. Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979).

Issue of Fact as to Applicability of Insurance Coverage Exclusion: In this case the District Court failed to determine the factual issue of whether the insured, Phalen, expected or intended Thu Duc Vo's injuries. The applicability of coverage provision of the insurance policy excluded those cases where the insured's deliberate acts or assaults resulted in injuries that would be expected or intended by him to result from his deliberate acts. The applicability of Northwestern National's coverage could not be determined until the factual issues concerning the intention and expectation of Phalen as to Vo's injuries was decided in the tort action. Therefore, summary judgment in favor of Northwestern in the declaratory judgment case at bar was improper. NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979), distinguished under the rationale of USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988).

Removal of Impediment — Common-Law Marriage — Fact Question: Ralph, the deceased, married Fern and then married Elsie while married to Fern. Fern died in 1973 and Ralph died in 1976. Ralph's will, executed in 1975, failed to mention Elsie or the two children he had by her. Elsie filed a petition for spouse's elective share. Summary judgment against Elsie was reversed and remanded because factual issues existed regarding whether Fern's death removed the impediment to Ralph's second marriage resulting in common-law marriage and whether the two children were issue of the decedent. Estate of Schanbacher, 182 M 176, 595 P2d 1171 (1979).

Question of Fraud — No Summary Judgment: When a lessee alleged fraud in the termination of his lease, he was not entitled to a summary judgment since fraud is always a question of fact. Chamberlain v. Evans, 180 M 511, 591 P2d 237 (1979).

Proximate Cause at Issue: In a wrongful death action in which plaintiff's husband struck a stalled truck and trailer, the trial court erroneously granted defendants' motions for summary judgment since there existed a genuine issue of fact as to proximate cause. McAlpine v. Dahl, 179 M 23, 585 P2d 1307 (1978).

Notice of Intent to Withdraw From Bargaining: The court erred when it granted the employer's motion for summary judgment in an action for employer contributions to Montana Laborers' Trust Fund because the employer, during collective bargaining negotiations, failed to communicate an unambiguous or unequivocal notice of intent to withdraw from collective bargaining. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Brasel & Sims Constr. Co., 176 M 1, 575 P2d 908 (1978).

Interest in Insurance Proceeds — Issue of Law: Summary judgment was improperly granted when the record disclosed, as a matter of law, that plaintiff had a possessory interest in a building on the property in dispute at time of destruction by fire, giving plaintiff a corresponding right to the insurance proceeds less the unpaid balance of the purchase price. This result was based on an implied waiver of a contract default provision by defendant county's failure to timely repossess. Hansen v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 175 M 273, 573 P2d 663 (1978).

Injured Workman — Third-Party Action: The Supreme Court vacated a lower court grant of summary judgment to a third-party defendant who was joined in an action for personal injuries sustained by an employee whose immediate employer elected to be covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Piper v. Lockwood Water Users Ass'n, 175 M 242, 573 P2d 646 (1978), overruling Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec., 164 M 319, 522 P2d 87 (1974).

Intent of Contracting Parties: Because the intent of the parties and other questions remained at issue, summary judgment was improperly granted. Engebretson v. Putnam, 174 M 409, 571 P2d 368 (1977).

Ambiguous Insurance Policy: Summary judgment on a claim for loss by theft of a commercial carpet cleaner was improperly granted defendant insurer when the policy of insurance was ambiguous as to exclusions from coverage. The particular exclusionary clause was subordinate to the general intent of the contract. Alpha Real Estate Dev., Inc. v. Aetna Life & Cas. Co., 174 M 301, 570 P2d 585 (1977).

Negligence Action: The court improperly granted a motion for summary judgment made by the defendant in a negligence action because the conclusions of law were based upon determinations of fact involving the character of the instrumentality which caused the injury and plaintiff's ability to observe, understand, appreciate, and avoid the danger. Mascarena v. Booth, 174 M 11, 568 P2d 182 (1977).

Specific Performance of Lease Option — Conditions Precedent: The court properly denied plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on an action for specific performance of a lease option agreement when he failed to show that he fully and fairly performed conditions precedent. Seifert v. Seifert, 173 M 501, 568 P2d 155 (1977).

Contract — Ambiguous Language: The disputed language in a contract reflecting intent of the parties was held ambiguous. Hence, there were material facts in dispute and summary judgment was improper. S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977).

Third-Party Complaint: Third-party defendants to an action under 50-77-101 through 50-77-106 (50-77-106 now repealed) were not entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law because issues of material fact remained unresolved. Bonawitz v. Bourke, 173 M 179, 567 P2d 32 (1977).

Error in Awarding: The court erred in granting summary judgment because the record was replete with fact questions. Equity Co-op Ass'n v. Bechtold, 173 M 103, 566 P2d 793 (1977).

Competency of Expert Medical Witness: The testimony of an expert medical witness concerning the required standard of care of treatment in a locality and its breach by defendant are matters to be decided by the jury and cannot be resolved by summary judgment since they involve genuine issues of material fact. Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 356 (1977), locality rule modified in Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

Determination of Rights and Reasonable Costs: Entry of summary judgment for plaintiffs constituted error because genuine issues of fact had not been resolved. Guthrie v. Dept. of Social & Rehabilitation Services, 172 M 257, 563 P2d 555 (1977).

Fraud — Summary Judgment Not Proper: Conflicting contentions regarding a brochure allegedly misrepresenting land indicate issues of fact precluding summary judgment. Bails v. Wheeler, 171 M 524, 559 P2d 1180 (1977).

Summary Judgment — Fraud: Summary judgment for defendant in fraud case was reversed. Defendants were not entitled to summary judgment because there were fact issues to be resolved. Bails v. Gar, 171 M 342, 558 P2d 458 (1976).

Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Determination — Record: When in a medical malpractice action a deposition of defendant disclosed his opinion that it was not advisable for a patient, described hypothetically, to walk on a healing leg but plaintiff alleged that defendant said to use the leg, there was an issue of material fact. Summary judgment is not a substitute for trial and it is error for a court to determine that contributory negligence exists when issues of material fact are raised. However, when counsel filed amended answers to interrogatories after summary judgment was entered, the court could not be held in error due to documents not before it at the time of its ruling. Baylor v. Jacobson, 170 M 234, 552 P2d 55 (1976).

Loaned Servant Doctrine: Court erred in granting summary judgment because defendant failed to meet the burden of proving his employee was the borrowed servant of plaintiff. Storrusten v. Harrison, 169 M 525, 549 P2d 464 (1976).

Theory of Recovery Determinative of Factual Issues: Negligent entrustment by defendant does not create factual issues where defendant did not have a superior legal right to the object entrusted. Bahm v. Dormanen, 168 M 408, 543 P2d 379 (1975), followed in Williams v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 265 M 111, 874 P2d 1225, 51 St. Rep. 458 (1994), applying Restatement (Second) of Torts 308 (1965). Williams was followed in McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 72, 972 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

Genuine Issues as to Damages: Where plaintiff sought damages against railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act, it was error for District Court to deny railroad's introduction of evidence to establish plaintiff's possible contributory negligence in diminution of damages where court granted partial summary judgment as to railroad's liability so that the only triable issue was damages. Dissent by Justices Daly and John C. Harrison asserting summary judgment is not appealable. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 167 M 485, 540 P2d 298 (1975).

Genuine Issues Not to Be Determined: On summary judgment the question to be decided is whether there is a genuine issue of material fact, not how such issue should be determined. Where police officer allegedly wounded plaintiff, it was error for trial court to grant summary judgment in favor of police officer based on sovereign immunity as plaintiff was not seeking to impose liability on county or state for conduct of police officer, neither being named as a defendant, but on police officer as an individual, therefore creating genuine issues of material fact concerning whether police officer wounded plaintiff; whether such action was reasonable under the circumstances; and whether his actions were done in good faith. Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975).

Intent of Contracting Parties Important — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Trial court erred in granting summary judgment to limited partners' declaratory judgment action, as to management fees charged by general partners for long-range renovation and improvement, where written partnership agreement was silent as to such fees and limited partners claimed an alleged oral agreement and that conduct of the parties modified the written agreement to a maximum fee, because a court considering the motion for summary judgment cannot go outside the written agreement to determine the intent of the contracting parties as this involves disputed questions of material fact which renders summary judgment inappropriate. Fulton v. Clark, 167 M 399, 538 P2d 1371 (1975).

Burden of Establishing Absence of Issue: The burden of establishing the absence of any issue of material fact is on the party seeking summary judgment, and when the ultimate legal issue of substantial compliance with the Tort Claims Act turned on the resolution of the factual issues of actual knowledge of an injury and claim by a city, there was a substantial issue of material fact barring summary judgment. State ex rel. Bozeman v. District Court, 166 M 234, 531 P2d 1343 (1975).

Prior Knowledge of Injury — Summary Judgment Precluded: Although plaintiff had not filed formal claim against city within the time limits prescribed, issues of fact as to the fact and extent of knowledge by city that plaintiff had been injured precluded summary judgment. State ex rel. Bozeman v. District Court, 166 M 234, 531 P2d 1343 (1975).

Sufficiency of Evidence: When the record contained insufficient evidence to support a finding that an 8-year-old boy had the capacity for contributory negligence, it was an error to grant summary judgment for the defendant. Ranard v. O'Neil, 166 M 177, 531 P2d 1000 (1975).

Negligence — Causation — Summary Judgment Improper: Liability cannot be adjudicated upon motion for summary judgment where factual issues concerning negligence and causation are presented. Duchesneau v. Silver Bow County, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971), followed in Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 273 M 408, 903 P2d 1374, 52 St. Rep. 1035 (1995). Duchesneau was followed, with regard to applicability of liability for involuntary action rule, in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Summary Judgment Improper — Negligence: Summary judgment was improper because, among other issues, negligence is a jury question and not subject to determination by the judge on a motion for summary judgment. Duchesneau v. Mack Trucks, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971); Kober v. Stewart, 148 M 117, 417 P2d 476 (1966). Duchesneau was followed, with regard to applicability of liability for involuntary action rule, in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999).

Third-Party Defendant — Negligence — When Dismissal Proper: Court erred in dismissing seller and manufacturer of truck as party defendants when many issues of material fact remained to be determined. Duchesneau v. Mack Trucks, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971).

Municipal Vacation of Streets: Summary judgment was not proper where pleadings in declaratory judgment action to invalidate municipal vacation of streets left triable issues of fact as to whether plaintiffs' easements would be impaired by vacation. Kemmer v. Bozeman, 158 M 354, 492 P2d 211 (1971).

Genuine Issue of Fact Found: Summary judgment was reversed because cognizance was not taken of amended allegation raising a genuine issue of fact. Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

No Duty to Anticipate Proof: Although fact that both parties moved for summary judgment does not establish that all factual questions have been answered, trial court need only consider evidence and issues presented and has no duty to anticipate possible proof that might be offered under the pleadings. Faith Lutheran Retirement Home v. Veis, 156 M 38, 473 P2d 503 (1970).

Summary Judgment Dismissing Third-Party Complaint Reversed: Supreme Court rejected proposition that Workers' Compensation Act is exclusive liability of employer and reversed summary judgment dismissing third-party complaint. DeShaw v. Johnson, 155 M 355, 472 P2d 298 (1970).

Consideration of Oral Testimony: Where trial court was present during taking of depositions, facts heard by court were properly considered on motion for summary judgment pursuant to this section since oral testimony is properly within matters which court may consider under such motion. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969).

Action on a Lease — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Trial court, in action on farm lease construing lessor's motion for dismissal as motion for summary judgment, improperly granted summary judgment where lessor failed to sustain burden of showing absence of any genuine issue as to material facts; record on appeal was replete with issues of fact determinable by jury. Byrne v. Plante, 154 M 6, 459 P2d 266 (1969).

Negligence — Third-Party Complaint: Summary judgment should not have been granted in favor of third-party defendant on third-party complaint initiated by hospital, sued for negligence by minor patient burned by defective television switch while in hospital, where third-party complaint raised genuine issue of material fact as to whether minor patient was injured solely through negligence of third-party defendant who had leased television equipment to hospital. Crosby v. Billings Deaconess Hosp., 149 M 314, 426 P2d 217 (1967), distinguished in Auto. Club Ins. Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 166 M 221, 531 P2d 1337 (1975).

Agent or Independent Contractor: In suit by guardians of patient for personal injuries sustained when patient was being X-rayed, District Court erred in granting defendant-hospital's motion for summary judgment where there was an issue of fact as to whether radiologist was an independent contractor rather than an agent of the hospital. Kober v. Stewart, 148 M 117, 417 P2d 476 (1966).

Summary Judgment Reversed — Taxation: Summary judgment for county and others was reversed, and summary judgment for taxpayer was ordered. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R. v. Bennett, 145 M 191, 399 P2d 986 (1965).

NO GENUINE ISSUE OF MATERIAL FACT
PARTICULAR CASES

Summary Judgment Improperly Denied — No Protected Property Interest in Use of Public Right-of-Way: Plaintiff property owner filed an inverse condemnation action against the Department of Transportation after its reconstruction of a portion of highway adjacent to the plaintiff's property significantly reduced the amount of space between the plaintiff's garage and the highway, although it did not encroach on the plaintiff's property itself. The District Court denied the Department's motion for summary judgment, but a jury found that no taking occurred. The Supreme Court affirmed on appeal but held that summary judgment should have been awarded to the Department since the plaintiff had no protected property interest in the use of the public right-of-way. Malpeli v. St., 2012 MT 181, 366 Mont. 69, 285 P.3d 509, distinguishing St. Highway Comm'n v. Keneally, 142 Mont. 256, 384 P.2d 770 (1963).

Summary Judgment Proper When No Reasonable Mind Could Interpret Facts Differently: The plaintiff sued his former attorney and arranged for the defendant attorney to assist in obtaining discovery. After the defendant withdrew from representing the plaintiff, the plaintiff sued the defendant for breach of contract and the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and for fraudulent deceit. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that when reasonable minds cannot differ, questions of fact can be determined as a matter of law. Because no reasonable person could interpret the defendant's conversations with the plaintiff as supporting a finding that the defendant made misrepresentations to the plaintiff, summary judgment was appropriate. Miller v. Begley, 2011 MT 230, 362 Mont. 115, 262 P.3d 1085.

Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Policyholder Vehicles From Underinsured Motor Vehicle Coverage Valid: Summary judgment was proper because the plain language of the insurance policy clearly and unambiguously excluded the insured's vehicles from the definition of an underinsured motor vehicle. In addition, the insurance policy did not violate public policy because it did not create illusory underinsured motor vehicle coverage. The exclusion set out in the policy denied coverage only in the case of a single-car accident in which the only vehicle in the accident was owned by the insured. Monroe v. Cogswell Agency, 2010 MT 134, 356 Mont. 417, 234 P.3d 79.

Inability to Obtain Real Estate Financing — Return of Earnest Money Proper: Defendants secured prequalification on a real estate loan and, pursuant to the buy-sell agreement, paid $53,000 in earnest money to purchase a condominium from plaintiff. The buy-sell agreement required the defendants to obtain financing for the remaining $946,000 of the purchase price. However, the economic climate later changed and required the need for a larger down payment, which defendants did not have. Defendants notified plaintiff and requested the return of the earnest money, but plaintiff refused and filed a fraud action, contending that defendants falsely represented their borrowing status and failed to obtain the required financing. The District Court summarily dismissed the fraud claims because the purchase agreement provided that if conventional financing could not be obtained, the agreement was void. On appeal, plaintiff asserted that a genuine issue of material fact remained regarding the fraud claims, precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court disagreed. It was undisputed that defendants applied for loans and were prequalified for financing, so defendants did not misrepresent their borrowing status. Summary dismissal of the fraud claims was appropriate as a matter of law, particularly because plaintiff had the opportunity to be heard on the issue. The District Court properly terminated the purchase agreement when defendants could not obtain financing, and plaintiff was correctly ordered to return the earnest money. Mill Creek Ltd. Partnership v. Lodge, 2010 MT 65, 355 Mont. 478, 228 P.3d 1144.

No Material Issue of Fact Regarding Default on Lease — Summary Judgment Proper: Parties entered a 5-year lease on a commercial building. Defendant failed to make a monthly lease payment and plaintiff sent a written 30-day default notice demanding payment of the late rent. Defendant subsequently missed the next payment as well, and instead of attempting to cure the late rent situation, defendant vacated the premises. Plaintiff moved for summary judgment for unpaid rent, costs, and attorney fees. Summary judgment was granted and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. There was no genuine issue of material fact that defendant was late making rent payments, and plaintiff did not breach the lease or the implied covenant or wrongfully evict defendant. Absent a genuine issue of material fact, summary judgment was proper. Hullett v. Gotcha Products, Inc., 2010 MT 50, 355 Mont. 322, 227 P.3d 1033.

Application of Proper Standard of Review of Summary Judgment on Subdivision Decision: The District Court granted defendants summary judgment absent a material fact regarding whether plaintiff's subdivision review was properly denied. Plaintiff contended that the court applied an abuse of discretion standard rather than the arbitrary or capricious standard required under 76-3-625. The Supreme Court disagreed. The District Court provided a wealth of reasoning for its decision and noted that clear and convincing evidence supported the decision to deny plaintiff's subdivision proposal. Overwhelming evidence and the absence of disputed fact entitled defendants to summary judgment on the issue, and the District Court was affirmed. Richards v. Missoula County, 2009 MT 453, 354 M 334, 223 P3d 878 (2009), followed in Richards v. Missoula County, 2012 MT 236, 366 Mont. 416, 288 P.3d 175.

Jockeys Not Included in Definition of Exhibitors for Purposes of Insurance Against Racing Injuries: Jockeys who suffered injuries in horseraces at MetraPark in Billings sued the county and the association that leased the facility for the races. The insurance policy listed numerous exclusions, including bodily injuries suffered by special event participants and by athletic or sports participants. The insurer cited the exclusions, denied coverage for the jockey's injuries, and refused to defend or indemnify the county and the association. The jockeys eventually settled with the county and the association and then sought to recover from the insurer. The District Court held that the policy was unambiguous, that the exclusions did not violate public policy, that the county and the association had no reasonable expectation that the policy would cover jockeys, and that summary judgment for the jockeys was therefore inappropriate. The jockeys appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. As used in 23-4-205, the term "exhibitors" means people who organize a horserace, not jockeys who are participants in the exhibition, so the claim that the exclusions violated public policy was correctly dismissed. The county's and association's expectations that the policy would cover jockeys was not objectively reasonable because the athletic or sports exclusion unambiguously excluded coverage for jockeys, and the District Court did not err in excluding the jockeys' claims. Giacomelli v. Scottsdale Ins. Co., 2009 MT 418, 354 M 15, 221 P3d 666 (2009).

Agreement for Commission for Sale of Real Estate Not in Writing — Summary Judgment Denying Commission Affirmed: Andersen assisted in the sale of Schenk's ranch, and although Schenk allegedly told Andersen that Andersen would receive a commission on the sale, no listing agreement was ever reduced to writing. The District Court granted summary judgment for Schenk on the commission issue because 28-2-903 provides that a real estate agreement authorizing an agent to transact for a commission is invalid if it is not in writing. Even though Schenk allegedly told Andersen that a commission would be earned if the ranch sold for at least $10 million, the sale price was $6.5 million, so Andersen could not hold Schenk to an agreement that Schenk never made. Absent a genuine issue of material fact, summary judgment for Schenk was affirmed. Andersen v. Schenk, 2009 MT 399, 353 M 424, 220 P3d 675 (2009).

Failure of Condominium Projects to Meet Prerequisites for Exemption From Subdivision Review — Summary Judgment for County Proper: In a case that consolidated possible exemption of two condominium projects from subdivision review, the District Court held that the projects did not qualify for the exemption and granted summary judgment to the county for not accepting deeds. Etzler v. Flathead County, 2009 MT 367, 353 M 252, 220 P3d 395 (2009).

Sufficient Probable Cause to Revoke Water Use Permit — Malicious Prosecution Claim Precluded — Summary Judgment Proper: The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation determined that plaintiff failed to comply with the conditions of a water use permit. After a show cause hearing, the hearings examiner did not issue a decision within the required 90 days, so plaintiff moved for dismissal with prejudice. The Department did not oppose dismissal but argued that it should be without prejudice because plaintiff was still in violation of the permit conditions. The hearings officer agreed and dismissed the revocation action without prejudice. Plaintiff then sued the Department for malicious prosecution. The Department moved for summary judgment, and the District Court granted the motion on grounds that plaintiff did not raise any genuine issues of material fact as to one of the elements of the malicious prosecution claim and on grounds that the Department was immune from suit because its actions were quasi-judicial. Plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that, as a matter of law, there was probable cause for the Department to revoke plaintiff's water use permit under 85-2-314 for not following the permit conditions and that because plaintiff could not prove a lack of probable cause for the Department's actions, the malicious prosecution claim failed and summary judgment was proper. Because the claim was properly summarily dismissed on administrative grounds, the Supreme Court never reached the issue of prosecutorial and quasi-judicial immunity. Blacktail Mtn. Ranch Co., LLC v. Dept. of Natural Resources & Conservation, 2009 MT 345, 353 M 149, 220 P3d 388 (2009), applying the elements of malicious prosecution set out in Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002).

Sandstone Not Considered Mineral With Respect to Mineral Reservation in Lease — Summary Judgment Proper: A deed conveying property to Craig reserved to Hart the rights, leases, and royalties to minerals on the property. After the sale, Craig mined and sold sandstone from a quarry on the property. Based on the reservation, Hart sued for the money Craig collected from the sale of the sandstone. The District Court granted summary judgment to Craig, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. Sandstone is not considered an exceptionally rare or valuable mineral simply because it can be sold commercially. Therefore, sandstone was not considered to be a mineral included in the general reservation of mineral rights. Hart v. Craig, 2009 MT 283, 352 M 209, 216 P3d 197 (2009). See also Farley v. Booth Bros. Land & Livestock Co., 270 M 1, 890 P2d 377 (1995).

No Duty of Care Owed by School District for Student's Unforeseeable Conduct: A student handed in a typing assignment that contained violent themes and unspecified threats. The student was counseled, but no subsequent actions were taken. About 17 months later, the student ran over a woman in an incident that resembled one of the themes in the typing assignment. The victim sued the school district for negligence, but summary judgment was granted for the school district on grounds that no duty was owed to the victim. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that, based on the facts known to the school district at the time of its allegedly negligent conduct, it was not foreseeable that 17 months later the student would intentionally run over a pedestrian off school grounds after school hours. The school district therefore had no duty to protect the victim from the student, so summary judgment for the school district was proper. Emanuel v. Great Falls School District, 2009 MT 185, 351 M 56, 209 P3d 244 (2009), distinguishing Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), Lopez v. No Material Issue of Comparative Negligence — Partial Summary Judgment Proper: During a lacrosse game in gym class between 14-year-old high school freshman boys, Powers struck Larchick in the eye with a lacrosse stick. The District Court granted Larchick partial summary judgment on the issue of comparative negligence, and the school appealed, asserting that comparative negligence raised a genuine issue of material fact because evidence showed that Powers was first hit in the leg by Larchick. However, there was no evidence that the initial contact by Larchick was anything other than incidental contact occurring during a gym class or that the initial contact was negligent. Additionally, the school principal testified that the school did not blame Larchick or Powers. Absent any material issue regarding comparative negligence, partial summary judgment for Larchick on the issue was not error, and the District Court was affirmed. Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009).

No Ambiguity in Complete, Final Sales Agreement — Parol Evidence Inadmissible: The parties entered a sale agreement for a ready-mix concrete plant. Plaintiff subsequently filed an action alleging that defendant violated the agreement by breaching the covenant to not compete and the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, which constituted malice resulting in lost profits, sales, and goodwill. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that the sales agreement constituted a complete, final agreement and unambiguously did not include a noncompetition provision, but in fact provided that plaintiff would sell concrete to defendant for use in the area. The intention of the parties was ascertainable from the writing alone, and the agreement was presumed to represent all transactions regarding elements extrinsic to the agreement and was thus considered complete and final, so parol evidence was inadmissible. Casino That Serves Alcohol Considered Bar or Tavern: Defendant owned a shopping center where plaintiff leased space. Pursuant to a 1973 lease agreement, no part of the shopping center was to be leased for a bar or tavern without the tenant's prior written consent. Defendant leased space to a casino and card room that also served alcoholic beverages. Plaintiff contended that defendant violated the original lease provisions prohibiting a bar or tavern. The District Court held that the casino fell under the common and ordinary understanding of a bar or tavern and granted summary judgment for plaintiff without a hearing. On appeal, defendant contended that the term "bar or tavern" in the lease language was ambiguous and created an issue of fact regarding the intent of the original parties to the contract, noting that the District Court used two separate dictionary definitions and a statutory definition in the Montana Clean Air Act to define the term. Defendant asserted ambiguity because any of three definitions might apply: (1) an establishment with the primary purpose of selling alcohol to be consumed on the premises; (2) an establishment that sells alcohol pursuant to a state liquor license for consumption on the premises; or (3) an establishment that does not include a casino or card room. However, defendant provided no authority to show that its alternative definitions reflect the ordinary or popular meaning of bar or tavern. The District Court's use of three definitions simply illustrated that the casino qualified as a bar or tavern under any of the three definitions, not that ambiguity existed in the definition. The District Court correctly concluded that the casino constituted a bar or tavern. The District Court also did not abuse its discretion in granting summary judgment without a hearing under these circumstances, given that either party could have requested a hearing to present evidence of a genuine issue of material fact but failed to do so. Dollar Plus Stores, Inc. v. R-Mont. Associates, 2009 MT 164, 350 M 476, 209 P3d 216 (2009), following SVKV, LLC v. Harding, 2006 MT 297, 334 M 395, 148 P3d 584 (2006).

Privileged Communication Precluding Defamation Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff contended that a Department of Transportation real estate appraiser defamed plaintiff by filing two written complaints with the Department of Labor and Industry alleging that plaintiff failed to comply with uniform standards when preparing appraisals on two condemned properties. The District Court summarily dismissed plaintiff's claim on grounds that the complaints were privileged communications. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The appraiser's complaints were made in an official proceeding authorized by law and were made to the proper authorities responsible for the interest being expressed and were thus, as a matter of law, privileged communications that were not subject to a claim of libel or slander. No genuine issue of material fact existed, so summary judgment for defendant was proper. McLeod v. St., 2009 MT 130, 350 M 285, 206 P3d 956 (2009), following Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981).

Arbitrated Reinstatement of Nurse Affirmed — Violation of Public Policy Exception Inapplicable: An arbitration panel found that a nursing home had wrongfully discharged a nurse and recommended that the nurse be reinstated with no loss of seniority, wages, or benefits. The nursing home appealed on grounds that reinstating the nurse would violate public policy regarding the licensing of nurses because the nurse's alleged impairment would present a threat to the health and safety of vulnerable patients. The Supreme Court concluded that the public policy exception to court enforcement of arbitrated decisions did not apply in this case. The fact that the subject of an inquiry by an arbitration panel may also involve a possible violation of public policy does not mean a court may do the arbitrator's task and determine that reinstatement is not appropriate. Simply because an employee has committed some act that violates a law or public policy during the course of employment does not mean that reinstatement would violate that public policy, and only if the record clearly shows that the grievant is likely to engage in wrongful conduct in violation of public policy in the future could reinstatement be said to violate public policy. Conclusory Statements and Speculative Assertions Insufficient to Establish Material Facts — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff contended that defendants' work on the Tin Cup dam caused the dam to leak, which resulted in an emergency declaration and damages to plaintiff. However, the knowledge to determine what caused the dam failure fell beyond the understanding of the trier of fact and required expert testimony. Plaintiff offered no experts and thus was left with mere conclusory statements and speculative assertions on the issue of causation, which did not constitute facts of a material and substantive nature. Because plaintiff failed to meet its burden to show any issues of material fact, summary judgment was properly granted to defendant. Tin Cup County Water/Sewer District v. Garden City Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 2008 MT 434, 347 M 468, 200 P3d 60 (2008). See also Weyler v. Kaufman, 196 M 132, 638 P2d 393 (1981), and Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687 (1984).

Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Filing Suit for Volunteer Fire Department Partial Pension: Marx served as a volunteer firefighter from 1979 to 1995, when he was terminated for failure to complete training requirements. About 6 months after termination, Marx requested the firefighters relief association board to grant him a partial pension. In 2004 Marx was notified by the board that his request was denied pursuant to 19-18-602(5) because there was no other factor beyond Marx's control that would qualify him for a partial or reduced pension. Marx then filed suit against the association for damages and declaratory relief. The association moved for summary judgment on grounds that Marx had failed to file suit within 2 years of termination as required in 27-2-211. The District Court granted summary judgment for the association and Marx appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Despite Marx's assertion that under 27-2-301 the time for running the statute of limitations did not begin until his request was formally denied, the District Court did not incorrectly determine the accrual date of Marx's cause of action. Marx cited no authority for the proposition that a demand was necessary to entitle him to maintain an action for a partial pension, and the Supreme Court declined to insert into 27-2-301 a requirement for formal repudiation or denial of a claim. Rather, the statute of limitation began to run from the time Marx knew the facts that would have justified a demand for the pension. The right to a service pension is a liability created by statute as contemplated in 27-2-211, and the association met its initial burden of establishing both the absence of genuine issues of material fact and its entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, while Marx failed to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Summary Judgment Proper When Employee's Allegedly Tortious Actions Unrelated to Employer's Business: The driver of a vehicle who collided head-on with another vehicle while attempting to pass in a no-passing zone and following a bar-hopping spree after work hours was not acting within the course and scope of his employment. His employer could not be liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior. Bowyer v. Loftus, 2008 MT 332, 346 M 182, 194 P3d 92, (2008).

Claim Outside Policy Coverage — No Duty to Defend: The Twites, who built housing complexes, were sued for failure to construct a housing complex in conformity with state and federal requirements to provide equal use and access for persons with disabilities. The Twites had a commercial insurance policy that required the insurer to defend the Twites against lawsuits alleging bodily injury resulting from accidents. The insurer determined that the claim against the Twites did not involve an injury and refused to defend, so the Twites brought a state action to require the insurer to defend. The District Court examined the policy, found no duty to defend, and granted summary judgment for the insurer, so the Twites appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Liberally construing the policy in favor of finding an obligation to defend, the court nevertheless found that the policy covered only bodily injury caused by an accident, and here no accident occurred. The claim unequivocally fell outside the policy's coverage, so there was nothing for a court to construe and no reason to impose a duty to defend. The Twites failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact, and summary judgment for the insurer was affirmed. Twite Family Partnership v. Unitrin Multi Line Ins., 2008 MT 310, 346 M 42, 192 P3d 1156 (2008).

Failure to Conduct Reasonable Investigation of Insurance Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs brought an unfair trade practice claim based on defendant insurer's failure to conduct a reasonable investigation prior to denying plaintiffs' claim for medical expenses. The District Court held that defendant's wrongful denial did not prove that its investigation was unreasonable and that any wrong was promptly cured by defendant's payment of the claim and granted summary judgment for defendant on the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The reasonableness of an investigation requires that the investigating adjuster examine the pertinent information thoroughly enough to retain and act upon it. In this case, the adjuster had access to plaintiffs' extensive file containing a record of plaintiffs' numerous prior claims for similar medical expenses, defendant's initial denial of those claims, intervention by the Insurance Commissioner on plaintiffs' behalf, defendant's ultimate admission of liability and eventual payment of those claims, and a note in plaintiffs' file that plaintiffs' claims were not to be denied on the basis of the unavailability of policy coverage, yet the adjuster failed to research the records and instead denied the claim. Therefore, plaintiffs were entitled to partial summary judgment on the issue of defendant's failure to conduct a reasonable investigation and the District Court was reversed. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008). See also McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191.

No Anticipatory Breach of Insurance Contract Given Equivocal Nature of Denial of Coverage — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs sued defendant insurer for anticipatory breach of contract when the insurer sent plaintiffs a letter initially denying coverage of plaintiffs' medical expenses. The insurer had denied but subsequently paid plaintiffs' claims for similar costs on five previous occasions. The District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer because plaintiffs did not meet the strict criteria for establishing a claim of anticipatory breach. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that an anticipatory breach occurs when a party repudiates a contractual duty before the contractually established time for performance has arrived, if the repudiation is absolute and unequivocal. In this case, the insurer's letter stated that plaintiffs' policy did not cover the claim but also stated that the insurer would conduct a review of the claim at plaintiffs' request. Thus, the repudiation in the letter was not absolute and unequivocal, but was instead equivocal by leaving open the possibility that plaintiffs' future claims would be honored, so the letter fell short of the unconditional type of statement required to establish a repudiation. Absent a disputed material fact regarding repudiation, summary judgment was proper and the District Court was affirmed. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), following STC, Inc. v. Billings, 168 M 364, 543 P2d 374 (1975), and Chamberlin v. Puckett Constr., 277 M 198, 921 P2d 1237 (1996).

No Evidence of Breach of Duty to Exercise Care in Keeping Animal — Negligence Claim Properly Denied: Two or three of Eichhorn's horses broke through a fence from Basta's property onto Peterson's property. Peterson herded the horses back onto Basta's property, the fence was secured, and Peterson decided to inform Basta about what had transpired. On the way back to her property, Peterson decided to feed another of Eichhorn's horses that was also corralled on Basta's property, but that was not one of the horses that had earlier trespassed, and the horse bit Peterson. Peterson sued Eichhorn on grounds that Eichhorn negligently breached the duty of care in keeping the horse in a manner to prevent the horse from causing foreseeable damages to persons in Peterson's position. The District Court summarily dismissed the negligence claim, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. Peterson failed to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Eichhorn's keeping of the horse in the corral on Basta's property fell below the degree of care required to prevent the horse from biting a person standing beside the corral and gratuitously throwing hay to the horse. Absent a showing of a breach of the duty of care, the negligence claim failed, and summary judgment was proper. Peterson v. Eichhorn, 2008 MT 250, 344 M 540, 189 P3d 615 (2008).

Conclusory Assertion Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Affirmed: Defendant owners of a building met their initial burden of establishing the absence of a genuine issue of material fact regarding a breach of the duty of reasonable care as a landlord in that the duty did not encompass liability for all injuries to tenants of a business on the premises, so the District Court granted summary judgment for defendants. On appeal, plaintiffs raised an issue regarding defendants' negligence in maintaining the premises of a different business on the premises, but that issue was not part of the original claim, and the Supreme Court found the assertion on appeal to be no more than conclusory. Plaintiffs' neither advanced the appellate claim during arguments for summary judgment nor pleaded the claim in the complaint. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was proper because no issue of genuine fact was raised on appeal that related to the issue considered on summary judgment. Meloy v. Speedy Auto Glass, Inc., 2008 MT 122, 342 M 530, 182 P3d 741 (2008).

No Special Relationship Between City and Residents to Protect Residents in Vicinity of Proposed Building Modification Based on Public Duty Doctrine: The city of Hamilton passed zoning ordinances that included a master plan for providing services and the orderly development of property. When the city approved a casino that bordered a residential zone, neighbors eventually complained about the noise and general nuisances surrounding the casino business. When the city did not respond to the neighbors' satisfaction, the neighbors sued the city on grounds that the ordinances imposed a special duty on the city to protect the residents pursuant to the public duty doctrine expressed in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999). The District Court determined that under the doctrine, neither the city nor its officials owed any special duty to the neighbors when passing the master plan or when deciding whether to take action to abate the alleged nuisance, and summary judgment was granted to the city. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The court noted that the doctrine generally provides that when a municipality owes a duty to the general public, that duty is not owed to any particular individual unless a special relationship exists, under an exception set out in Nelson, thus giving rise to a special duty that is more particular than that owed to the public. A special relationship is established: (1) by a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which the plaintiff is a member, from a particular type of harm; (2) when a government agent undertakes specific action to protect a person or property; (3) by governmental actions that reasonably induce detrimental reliance by a member of the public; and (4) under certain circumstances when the agency has actual custody of the plaintiff or of a third person who harms the plaintiff. In this case, the master plan was clearly adopted for the benefit of the general public and did not create a special relationship between the city and the neighbors, so the city had no special duty to protect the neighbors from any harm that might result from the city's adoption of the plan. Because no genuine issue of material fact existed regarding a special duty required of the city, summary judgment was proper. Prosser v. Kennedy Enterprises, Inc., 2008 MT 87, 342 M 209, 179 P3d 1178 (2008), distinguished in Kent v. Columbia Falls, 2015 MT 139, 379 Mont. 190, 350 P.3d 9.

Failure of Insured to Timely Notify Insurer of Claim — Coverage Precluded: Lee's insurance policy with Great Divide Insurance Company (Great Divide) required Lee to promptly send Great Divide copies of legal papers if a suit was brought. Lee never sent Great Divide a copy of a complaint alleging uninsured motorist coverage against a different insurer and did not provide Great Divide with a copy of a second amended complaint until 2 ½ years after the initial complaint. Notice of the suit did not disclose that the uninsured driver could not be found, that default judgment of over $1 million would be sought against the uninsured driver, and that Lee would pursue a suit against Great Divide. These omissions were a material breach of Lee's policy obligation and were independently sufficient to deny coverage to Lee. Great Divide was entitled to summary judgment. Lee v. Great Divide Ins. Co., 2008 MT 80, 342 M 147, 182 P3d 41 (2008).

No Corporate Policy Coverage for Person Occupying Vehicle Not Listed in Policy: Lee's corporate insurance policy covering company vehicles limited coverage to the corporation and to anyone else occupying a covered auto or temporary substitute for a covered auto. Lee was injured while driving a vehicle that was not listed in the policy or considered a substitute vehicle, but claimed that the policy should nevertheless be interpreted to provide coverage. The District Court determined that no coverage existed under the policy and granted summary judgment to the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court declined to expand corporate policy coverage to injured persons involved in the corporation who were not occupying a vehicle covered under the policy at the time of the accident. Summary judgment was affirmed. Lee v. Great Divide Ins. Co., 2008 MT 80, 342 M 147, 182 P3d 41 (2008), following Chilberg v. Rose, 273 M 414, 903 P2d 1377 (1995), and Lierboe v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2003 MT 174, 316 M 382, 73 P3d 800 (2003).

Failure to Establish Uninterrupted Possession to Qualify as Extinguished Easement — Summary Judgment Proper: A deed of restriction reserved easements on all existing roads within a subdivision for the scenic views and enjoyment of the property and for the reasonable general use of all subdivision property owners to access public lands. In 1984, defendants bought three subdivision tracts and promptly erected a locking gate across the road that intersected their property. Plaintiff subdivision association requested that defendants remove the gate because it was interfering with property owners' access to public lands. However, defendants refused and threatened legal action, so the association took no immediate action. The association eventually filed a complaint in 2000, accusing defendants of violating the deed of restriction by interfering with the easement. Defendants contended that the association had waived or abandoned any easement by not using the road for over 17 years. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment to the association. Defendants appealed on grounds that summary judgment was improper because a material fact existed as to whether the easement had been extinguished, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The association established the existence of a valid recorded easement that encumbered defendants' land, and defendants failed to show that their use of the road was continuous and uninterrupted for 5 years. In fact, the record was replete with admissions that association members continued to use the road, interrupting defendants' attempted adverse possession of the easement. Additionally, defendants testified that the gate was not locked all the time, that they lived outside the state part of the year, during which time they were unable to enforce their claim of right, and that the association had graded and maintained the road during the time in question. Thus, defendants' own testimony contradicted their claim of abandonment and adverse possession. The District Court did not err in finding that defendants' claims failed to establish a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Meadow Lake Estates Homeowners Ass'n v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 41, 341 M 345, 178 P3d 81 (2008).

Sufficient Evidence of Negligent Misrepresentation — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs sued for negligent misrepresentation because defendants allegedly misled plaintiffs regarding the output of a well on a subdivision lot purchased by plaintiffs. The District Court granted summary judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements in Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520 (1995), to determine whether the record affirmatively established that defendants made a false representation as to a past or existing material fact without any reasonable ground for believing it to be true, with the intent to induce plaintiffs' reliance, and that plaintiffs, unaware of the falsity of the representation, justifiably relied on the representation and suffered damage as a result of the reliance. Plaintiffs established that they had inquired about the well output on numerous occasions and that defendants indicated at closing that the well produced 3,600 gallons of water a day, even though they knew that the well produced only 700 gallons a day. Plaintiffs also established that they relied on defendants' representation and that they suffered damages by having to install a cistern and to haul water to the property instead of using the well. Evidence of negligent misrepresentation was thus proved and summary judgment for plaintiffs was affirmed. Walters v. Luloff, 2008 MT 17, 341 M 158, 176 P3d 1034 (2008).

County Attorney Immunity for Handling of Streambed Preservation and Stalking Complaints — Summary Judgment Proper: The Madison County Attorney filed a misdemeanor complaint against Rosenthal for a possible streambed preservation violation, but later moved to dismiss the complaint when the state's expert was not confident that a violation had occurred. The County Attorney also forwarded a stalking complaint against Rosenthal to the Attorney General's office because of a possible conflict of interest. Rosenthal subsequently filed a malicious prosecution complaint and also claimed intentional and negligent emotional distress. The District Court determined that the prosecutor's conduct was within the scope of his authority and that he was entitled to absolute prosecutorial immunity and granted summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The prosecutor properly exercised discretion both in filing the streambed protection complaint and then in dismissing the complaint when faced with the state expert's equivocation and was entitled to absolute immunity for this conduct. Regarding the handling of the stalking complaint, the allegedly injurious conduct arguably fell outside the County Attorney's quasi-judicial functions, so the court applied the test in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), to determine whether the qualified immunity shield applied. Rosenthal asserted no violation of a clearly established constitutional right, so qualified immunity barred the suit. At the very least, the County Attorney was entitled to qualified immunity for his actions, and the District Court did not err in determining that, as a matter of law, the County Attorney was entitled to immunity, either absolute or qualified, for his actions in prosecuting the complaints against Rosenthal. Rosenthal v. Madison County, 2007 MT 277, 339 M 419, 170 P3d 493 (2007), following Losleben v. Oppedahl, 2004 MT 5, 319 M 269, 83 P3d 1271 (2004).

Allocation of Referral Fee Among Law Partners — Summary Judgment Proper: Attorney Frampton received a large settlement fee in a personal injury case that was referred to him personally. Although he and one other partner did all the work on the case, Frampton gave each of the other partners a $25,000 bonus but kept his share of the settlement. One of the partners, Phelps, did no work on the case but was dissatisfied with the bonus and sued Frampton, asserting that his share should have been $120,000. Phelps asserted that Frampton breached the firm's written contract, violated partnership laws, breached an oral contract to share a substantial portion of the fee, breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, breached the fiduciary duty, and should have established a constructive trust because the fee was not Frampton's sole property and Frampton would be unjustly enriched by keeping the fee. The District Court granted summary judgment to Frampton on all the claims, and Phelps appealed. The Supreme Court examined each claim and affirmed. An unambiguous partnership agreement controlled the fee allocation. Although the District Court erred in finding that no covenant of good faith and fair dealing existed, Frampton did not breach the covenant because Phelps was not deprived of a benefit or justified expectation created by the partnership agreement. Phelps did not work on the case and was not entitled to a percentage of the fee under the agreement, and any expectation that Phelps had of receiving a share was unjustified. Additionally, the claim that Phelps had for breach of the written contract was directed at acts or omissions of the firm, and Phelps was barred from bringing claims against the firm by a signed release. Phelps v. Frampton, 2007 MT 263, 339 M 330, 170 P3d 474 (2007).

No Exception Shown to Rule on Nonliability of Owner to Employee of Subcontractor — Summary Judgment Proper: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court found that defendant was not liable and granted summary judgment for defendant. Fabich appealed on grounds that the court incorrectly rejected Fabich's theories of liability. Generally, an owner, employer, or general contractor does not have a duty to prevent injuries to an independent contractor's employees, but Fabich asserted that defendant nevertheless had a duty under three recognized exceptions to the general rule, claiming that defendant negligently exercised retained control, that the activity was inherently dangerous, and that defendant had a nondelegable duty (see Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), and Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000)). The Supreme Court examined each exception and affirmed summary judgment. First, Fabich's theory of negligence in exercising retained control failed because defendant did not retain control over the working circumstances. Second, the theory of inherently dangerous activity failed because the hazards associated with the job were normally encountered in the workplace and did not call for particular precautions. Third, there was nothing in the contract establishing that defendant assumed responsibility for initiating, maintaining, and supervising safety precautions, so defendant had no nondelegable duty. Absent a genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's liability, summary judgment was proper. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

No Duty of Insurer to Defend for Damages Not Covered in Policy — Summary Judgment Proper: Rumph's insurance policy covered vehicle accidents resulting from garage operations. The insurer denied coverage for damages resulting from an accident in which Rumph's son drove the insured vehicle home after a party. The District Court granted summary judgment to the insurer because the accident was not incidental to garage operations and thus was not covered by the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the insurer was not estopped from denying coverage and had no duty to defend when no reference in the complaint was made to anything remotely necessary or incidental to the garage business and that coverage unequivocally did not apply. No material facts precluded summary judgment, and because the accident was not covered, the insurer was not liable for breach of contract or unfair claims and settlement practices. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rumph, 2007 MT 249, 339 M 251, 170 P3d 934 (2007).

No Issue of Material Fact Regarding Disposition of Override Collection in Employment Agreement — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff entered an employment agreement that provided that plaintiff would receive an override commission on all business produced by defendant companies' agents that plaintiff managed and that defendants would set aside $1,610 a month from plaintiff's monthly override. The agreement allowed changes in writing; however, the agreement made no provision for the ultimate disposition of the monthly override collection. When plaintiff was terminated from employment, he sought to recover nearly $500,000 that had been collected during 25 years, 8 months of employment through the monthly set-aside. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants because the agreement was silent concerning plaintiff's right to collect the accumulated override collections. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The agreement language was not ambiguous, nor did plaintiff ever seek to clarify the agreement in writing regarding disposition of the money. Thus, the District Court did not err in finding that, under the clear language of the contract, no genuine issue of material fact existed regarding plaintiff's claim for the money. Reisbeck v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2007 MT 171, 338 M 171, 163 P3d 1289 (2007).

Right-of-Way Contract Granting Language Unambiguous — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court found that language in a right-of-way contract: (1) granted defendants an easement to bury a fiber optic cable on plaintiffs' land together with a pipeline; (2) did not limit use of the cable to operating and monitoring the pipeline; and (3) gave defendants the right to assign any of their rights, in whole or in part, to any third party. The language was unambiguous, and the court correctly applied the language as written and properly granted summary judgment to defendants. Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007).

Insufficient Debt Amount to Trigger Arbitration — Award Void Ab Initio — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff bank sued Talmage for $112,250.84 that was owed on a credit card. Talmage received an arbitration award from a Florida arbitrator and moved to dismiss, asserting that the claim was subject to mandatory arbitration. The District Court denied the motion, and Talmage appealed. The Supreme Court noted that in this case, arbitration was governed not by Montana law but by the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. 1 through 16, and that the federal Act provided that when arbitration does not follow the format provided for in the arbitration agreement, an arbitration award is void ab initio. In this case, the arbitration agreement provided for mandatory arbitration only if the amount owing was not less than $250,000. Because the amount owing was less than the trigger amount, the award was void ab initio and denial of Talmage's dismissal motion was proper. Summary judgment for plaintiff was proper because the only genuine issue that Talmage raised was the claim that the dispute was subject to a binding arbitration award. The District Court was affirmed. Wells Fargo Bank v. Talmage, 2007 MT 45, 336 M 125, 152 P3d 1275 (2007).

Plain Contract Language Establishing Operating Agreement Rather Than Franchise Agreement — Summary Judgment Proper: Defendant ran residential care facilities for plaintiff and asserted that the parties' contract established a franchise allowing defendant to collect franchise fees and royalties. The District Court found that although there were contractual obligations between the parties, there was no evidence of privity between the parties and no genuine issue of material fact regarding whether a franchise existed, so plaintiff was entitled to summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court examined the plain language of the contract and determined that there was no special meaning ascribed to the term "franchise", that the contract was essentially an operating agreement rather than a franchise agreement, and that no ambiguity was created concerning defendant's rights to collect franchise fees and royalties. No fact question regarding the parties intention existed, so summary judgment was proper, and the District Court was affirmed. SVKV, L.L.C. v. Harding, 2006 MT 297, 334 M 395, 148 P3d 584 (2006).

Summary Judgment for Bank That Disbursed Funds to Constituencies Absent Showing of Conversion, Despite Presence of Attorney's Lien on Funds: Plaintiff law firm represented a woman in divorce proceedings and filed a lien against the woman for attorney fees that she allegedly owed the firm. A divorce decree was issued that awarded the woman $400,000 from a bank trust account, but no fees were awarded to the firm, which subsequently filed a collection action against the woman, the account trustees, and the bank, asserting a breach of duty, conversion, malice, and actual fraud and seeking punitive damages. However, at no time did the firm obtain a judgment on the lien or a prejudgment attachment of the trust account. The District Court granted summary judgment for the account trustees and the bank, and the firm appealed regarding the conversion claim. The Supreme Court affirmed because the firm failed to establish conversion of its lien. Without a judgment fixing the debt or a writ executing a judgment upon the trust fund account, the firm could not establish its ownership of the funds or a right to possession of them, and the mere assertion of a lien did not suffice to defeat the bank's or the trustee's fiduciary duties, so summary judgment was proper. St. Peter & Warren, P.C. v. Purdom, 2006 MT 172, 333 M 9, 140 P3d 478 (2006), following King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895 (1994).

Expansion of Anchor Institutions Part of Neighborhood Plan — Approval of Zoning Proposal Affirmed: Plaintiffs contended that allowing expansion of a grocery store and a hospital did not comport with the goal of a neighborhood plan to maintain a sense of history and protect key landmarks, that the expansion would increase traffic congestion and create a pedestrian unfriendly environment, and that the scale of the big box style store was inconsistent with the character of the neighborhood, which the neighborhood plan sought to preserve. Defendants argued that the expansion stabilized two of the neighborhood's most important anchor institutions, thereby fulfilling a goal of the neighborhood plan to expand and enhance existing businesses. The City Council approved the expansion, and plaintiffs sued. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants, and plaintiffs appealed, also contending that the zoning proposal constituted illegal spot zoning. The Supreme Court affirmed. Not every zoning proposal will be consistent with every goal and objective expressed in a city's growth plan documents. However, the modified zoning proposal in this case complied with the growth plan by improving existing businesses and enhancing the growth of the anchor institutions, which was considered to be in the public interest. In addition, similar businesses had historically used the area, so the zoning proposal did not constitute illegal spot zoning. Citizen Advocates for a Livable Missoula, Inc. v. City Council, 2006 MT 47, 331 M 269, 130 P3d 1259 (2006), following Little v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 M 334, 631 P2d 1282 (1981).

Failure of Teacher to Exhaust Grievance Procedures Required Under Unambiguous Contract — Estoppel Inapplicable Absent Factual Representation of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Proper: When Wurl's speech-language pathology contract was not renewed, Wurl brought an action against the school district alleging that termination procedures were not followed pursuant to a collectively bargained master agreement and also brought claims for wrongful discharge and due process violations. The parties disagreed whether the master agreement applied because Wurl was not certified. The District Court found that the master agreement did not apply and granted summary judgment to the school district, and Wurl appealed. The Supreme Court found that the language of the employment contract unambiguously incorporated the entirety of the master agreement by reference, so the District Court erred in holding otherwise. Wurl also contended that because the District Superintendent had stated that the master agreement did not apply, collateral estoppel should bar the district from asserting that Wurl failed to go through the collectively bargained grievance procedure. On this point, the Supreme Court disagreed. The superintendent's statement was a legal interpretation rather than a factual representation of a material fact, so Wurl failed to prove the first required element of collateral estoppel, and the district was therefore allowed to argue that Wurl's claims should be barred by failure to exhaust the grievance procedure. Because the master agreement applied and Wurl failed to implement the mandatory grievance procedure, Wurl's claims were barred. The Supreme Court affirmed the summary judgment. Wurl v. Polson School District No. 23, 2006 MT 8, 330 M 282, 127 P3d 436 (2006), following Elk Park Ranch, Inc. v. Park County, 282 M 154, 935 P2d 1131 (1997).

No Employer Policy Requirement That Disciplinary Procedure Be Progressive: A discharge is wrongful if an employer violates the express provisions of its own written employment policy, but an employer has discretion to form an appropriate disciplinary procedure within the express language of its policy, which may or may not include a progressive disciplinary procedure. Here, absent a progressive disciplinary policy, plaintiff raised no genuine issue of fact as to whether the employer's disciplinary policy was violated, so summary judgment for the employer was proper. McConkey v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, 2005 MT 334, 330 M 48, 125 P3d 1121 (2005).

Reopening of Litigation for Injured Members of Class Action — Summary Judgment Proper: After plaintiffs settled with the insurer for damages incurred in the death of plaintiffs' daughter, a class action suit concerning insurance stacking provisions allowed plaintiffs to reopen their case and seek further damages from the insurer. Plaintiffs filed another damage claim with the insurer, but the claim was denied, so plaintiffs sued the insurer seeking full recovery of their damages. Plaintiffs filed a combined motion for summary judgment and motion to strike affirmative defenses, and defendant filed a cross-motion to bar plaintiffs from relitigating the wrongful death and survivorship action. The parties agreed that there were no genuine issues of material fact, and the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. As injured members of the certified class, plaintiffs were clearly entitled to relitigate their claims. The affirmative defenses that plaintiffs sought to strike did not include estoppel or res judicata, but those defenses were inapplicable in light of the scope of the class action agreement allowing reopening of litigation. Absent an issue of material fact, summary judgment for plaintiffs was appropriate. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

No Malice in Cooperating With Insurance Fraud Investigation — Summary Judgment Proper: Sherner was charged with felony theft by common scheme for defrauding an insurer. Sherner subsequently sued the insurer for malicious prosecution. The District Court concluded that the insurer was immune from civil liability pursuant to 33-1-1210 and summarily dismissed the claim, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The court applied the definition of malice in 1-1-204 to 33-1-1210, concluding that the insurer did not act with malice in investigating the claim against Sherner. Absent a showing of malice, the insurer was not subject to liability for cooperating with an investigation of insurance fraud, so summary judgment for defendants was proper. Sherner v. Nat'l Loss Control Serv. Corp., 2005 MT 284, 329 M 247, 124 P3d 150 (2005).

Dismissal of Complaint as Sanction for Discovery Abuses: Although Xu received timely notice of the need to respond in writing to defendants' discovery requests within 30 days, Xu filed incomplete, inappropriate, and unacceptable responses, and ultimately defendants sought an order compelling Xu's responses. Then, after defendants' unsuccessful attempts to schedule a deposition, defendants timely notified Xu of their intent to take Xu's deposition on May 11, 2004. Without response or explanation, Xu did not attend the deposition, so defendants sought an order compelling Xu's deposition and requesting sanctions, including dismissal of Xu's claims for failure to attend the May deposition. At a hearing, the District Court carefully explained to Xu the obligation to answer discovery and attend depositions. The court gave Xu an additional 3 weeks to provide discovery answers and be deposed. In response, Xu filed a pleading to reschedule the deposition, but failed to complete discovery or to attend the court-ordered deposition. On defendants' motion, the court then dismissed Xu's action with prejudice for failing to attend the depositions. Xu appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding from the record that Xu knowingly and repeatedly refused to cooperate with discovery request, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing Xu's claim as a sanction. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005).

Second Suit Based on Same Facts as Case Dismissed With Prejudice Properly Dismissed as Res Judicata: While a first employment termination claim was pending, Xu filed another claim based on the same facts. The first claim was ultimately dismissed with prejudice for Xu's failure to comply with discovery, and the District Court then summarily dismissed the second case based on res judicata and collateral estoppel. Xu appealed on grounds that it was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to dismiss the second case because the second case contained a new claim of defamation and because there was no final adjudication on the merits of the first claim. The Supreme Court disagreed. Res judicata applied not only to the issues that were raised in the first claim, but also to issues that could or should have been raised in the first litigation. Collateral estoppel applied because a dismissal with prejudice constituted an adjudication on the merits. Summary dismissal of the second case was therefore affirmed. Xu v. McLaughlin Research Institute for Biomedical Science, Inc., 2005 MT 209, 328 M 232, 119 P3d 100 (2005). See also Touris v. Flathead County, 2011 MT 165, 361 Mont. 172, 258 P.3d 1.

Clause in Insurance Policy Excluding Coverage for Transported Property Valid: Plaintiffs were transporting snowmobiles on a trailer when they were involved in a multiple vehicle accident that resulted in damage to their vehicle and the destruction of the trailer and snowmobiles. The insurer covered the loss of the trailer, but declined to compensate for the loss of the snowmobiles on grounds that they were excluded from policy coverage, and plaintiffs filed suit to recover damages. The District Court held that the policy exclusion for damage to property being transported was valid and granted the insurer summary judgment. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the policy provision violated 61-6-301, which mandates motor vehicle insurance. The Supreme Court agreed that an exclusion to mandatory coverage is void and unenforceable absent a statutory exclusion, but then noted that the statutory exclusion in 61-6-103 allows a policy exclusion for damage to property transported by the insured. The court held that the exclusion in 61-6-103 is not inconsistent with the purpose and intent of 61-6-301 and that because the policy provision was not void, there was no genuine issue of material fact and summary judgment was proper. Grimsrud v. Hagel, 2005 MT 194, 328 M 142, 119 P3d 47 (2005). See also Bain v. Gleason, 223 M 442, 726 P2d 1153 (1986), and Stutzman v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 284 M 372, 945 P2d 32 (1997).

Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Affirmed Absent Showing of Breach of Duty of Care: Bonilla claimed that the University of Montana was negligent in providing a chair at a concert that Bonilla attended when the chair broke and Bonilla was injured. Ordinarily, the determination of whether a defendant breached a legal duty is not susceptible to summary judgment unless the evidence is undisputed or susceptible to only one conclusion by reasonable people. However, Bonilla failed to produce any evidence explaining how or why the chair broke and whether it was due to the breach of any duty by the University. Bonilla never reported the incident, so the University had no record of the incident. The only evidence offered to support a negligence claim was Bonilla's own testimony that the chair would not have broken unless there was a problem with it. University officials explained their policy of assuring the safety of their chairs and of selecting chairs for durability and quality. The University met its burden of demonstrating the absence of material fact regarding any breach of a duty of care, while Bonilla did not meet the burden of showing that the University breached a duty of care. Summary judgment for the University was affirmed. Bonilla v. Univ. of Mont., 2005 MT 183, 328 M 41, 116 P3d 823 (2005).

No Montana Personal Jurisdiction Over Regional Out-of-State Insurer: Carter, a part-time "snow bird" resident of Montana, was injured in an automobile accident in Montana shortly after moving from Mississippi. Carter filed a declaratory judgment action against the defendant, a regional out-of-state insurer that did not do business in Montana, requesting interpretation of an insurance contract issued on Carter's vehicles in Mississippi. The insurer contested Montana's exercise of personal jurisdiction and moved for summary judgment. The District Court concluded that it did not have personal jurisdiction and granted summary judgment. Carter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court cited Bahn v. Chicago Motor Club, 634 A2d 63 (Md. 1993), for the holding that although an insurer's promise to provide nationwide coverage may establish that the insurer has agreed to submit to jurisdiction in any forum that has jurisdiction to adjudicate claims against its insured, this agreement does not imply a further agreement to allow the insured to bring suit against the insurer in any state. Even though the insurer could reasonably anticipate that the insured could suffer an injury within the insurer's 50-state coverage, that foreseeability, without more, was not sufficient to subject the insurer to personal jurisdiction in Montana courts. The underlying dispute related to coverage and had nothing to do with the fact that the accident occurred in Montana or that Carter was living in this state at the time. Thus, although Carter had every right to sue the insurer over its coverage issues, in this case, Montana courts did not have personal jurisdiction over the insurer that was required as a predicate to maintenance of an action in Montana. Summary dismissal was proper. Carter v. Miss. Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 2005 MT 74, 326 M 350, 109 P3d 735 (2005). See also Bi-Lo Foods, Inc. v. Alpine Bank, 1998 MT 40, 287 M 367, 955 P2d 154 (1998).

Landowner Subdivision Rights Precluded by Restrictive Covenants — No Oral Contract Without Consideration — Statute of Frauds Applied: Plaintiffs subdivided about 80 acres into a 40-acre water ski lake and five residential lots. Restrictive covenants provided that no more than six landowners would be allowed to use the lake, that five landowners would be owners of lots in the subdivision, and that one landowner would be the owner of a single family dwelling built on property immediately west of the lake. Plaintiffs initially intended to build on the west side of the lake and become the sixth landowner but changed their minds, sold the west side property, and decided to build on the south side instead. Four of the five landowners filed an affidavit that when they purchased their lots, they understood that plaintiffs would be the sixth landowner and that they had orally approved the relocation of plaintiffs' residence to the south shore. After plaintiffs' home was built on the south side, they sought a declaratory judgment that they were the sixth landowner under the restrictive covenants and thus had the right to use the lake. One dissenting landowner opposed the declaratory judgment and moved for summary judgment on grounds that the restrictive covenants prohibited plaintiffs from use of the lake. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that there was no evidence of consideration given to the landowners for modification of the covenants and that as a result, the modification benefited plaintiffs only. The right to use the lake ran with the land and was therefore a real property interest, and under the statute of frauds, any transfer of the right from one parcel to another had to be in writing or altered by an executed oral agreement. However, without consideration, there could be no oral contract, and without an oral contract, there could be no executed oral contract. Plaintiffs' argument that because they relied on oral agreements, equitable estoppel should prohibit defendants from denying plaintiffs' use of the lake also failed because equitable estoppel does not apply under the statute of frauds except when the statute would operate to perpetuate a fraud. The District Court was affirmed. Hanson v. Water Ski Mania Estates, 2005 MT 47, 326 M 154, 108 P3d 481 (2005).

No Federal Civil Rights Privacy Claim Against State or Municipal Entities: Barr sued the state and a municipal airport authority for violating his civil rights under 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 42 U.S.C. 1985 when the airport failed to hire him as a permanent security officer after discovering Barr's past public criminal record. The District Court summarily dismissed the claims, and the Supreme Court affirmed. In order for the municipality to be liable under the federal statutes, it was necessary for Barr to show that the municipality had a policy or custom that inflicted the injury of which Barr complained, which Barr could not show. Further, Barr's civil rights claims stemmed from a privacy invasion that did not occur, so he was unable to establish a federal privacy violation. Barr's claim against the state was also barred because states are not persons for purposes of the federal statutes. Barr v. Great Falls Int'l Airport Authority, 2005 MT 36, 326 M 93, 107 P3d 471 (2005). See also Monell v. Dept. of Social Services, 436 US 658 (1978), and Will v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 491 US 58 (1989).

No Right to Expectation of Privacy in Public Criminal Records or Negligence in Use of Records: In 1998, Barr applied for a part-time airport security officer position and consented to a background check. A 10-year check revealed no arrests, and Barr was hired. About 1 month later, another security officer requested a criminal background check on Barr, which revealed a 1968 arrest in Alaska for criminal nonsupport. Prior to the end of Barr's probationary period, his employment was terminated, and he sued the airport authority. Barr's claim was summarily dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that under 44-5-103, Barr's Alaska arrest was public information that anyone could access and its dissemination was not improper and that coupled with Barr's consent to the background check, Barr had no constitutional expectation of privacy in the criminal record. Barr's negligence claims also failed because he failed to offer proof of all elements of common-law negligence. Summary judgment for defendants was affirmed. Barr v. Great Falls Int'l Airport Authority, 2005 MT 36, 326 M 93, 107 P3d 471 (2005).

Possible Deferred Prosecution Agreement Not Considered Confidential Criminal Justice Information — Discussion by Prosecutor With Newspaper of Possible Deferred Prosecution Agreement Not Privacy Violation or Breach of Duty: Plaintiff alleged that the County Attorney negligently breached a legal duty and violated the Montana Criminal Justice Information Act of 1979 when the County Attorney told a local newspaper that plaintiff was considering a deferred criminal prosecution agreement. Plaintiff asserted that the information was confidential and that dissemination of the information was tortious. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that criminal justice information is defined as information relating to criminal justice that is collected, processed, or preserved by a criminal justice agency and held that mere discussion of a possible deferred criminal prosecution agreement does not constitute a discussion of criminal justice information. Although there may be circumstances in which a person suspected of having committed a crime has a reasonable expectation that the person's privacy will not be violated by the release of details of an investigation, plaintiff here could not seriously claim a privacy violation when it was already public knowledge that the allegations were against her, what the allegations were, who was involved as complainants, that she was the subject of a school board investigation concerning the allegations, and that her intended retirement from teaching was connected to the allegations. There was no material issue of fact concerning whether the County Attorney negligently breached a duty owed to plaintiff by discussing a possible deferred criminal prosecution agreement with the newspaper or by releasing a copy of the initial offense report, and summary judgment was affirmed. Svaldi v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 2005 MT 17, 325 M 365, 106 P3d 548 (2005), following Great Falls Tribune Co., Inc. v. Sheriff, 238 M 103, 775 P2d 1267(1989), and Citizens to Recall Mayor James Whitlock v. Whitlock, 255 M 517, 844 P2d 74 (1992).

Relitigating Issues Raised in Bankruptcy Proceeding Barred by Res Judicata: In defendants' bankruptcy proceeding, they contended that notes issued by plaintiff contained a usurious interest rate and were prompted by fraud. The Bankruptcy Court determined that the notes were valid, enforceable, and unaffected by usury or fraud. During plaintiff's subsequent collection proceeding in District Court, defendants sought to amend their answer to allege usury, but the District Court held that the Bankruptcy Court's judgment barred defendants' claim under res judicata and granted summary judgment for plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The Bankruptcy Court's judgment was accorded finality as to the issues raised or that could fairly have been raised in the adversary proceeding. Defendants were not precluded from litigating any of their defenses to the notes in the bankruptcy proceeding and thus were barred from relitigating the usury issue in District Court. Absent a genuine issue of material fact relating to defendants' default on the notes, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Olympic Coast Inv., Inc. v. Wright, 2005 MT 4, 325 M 307, 105 P3d 743 (2005), following Fox v. 7L Bar Ranch Co., 198 M 201, 645 P2d 929 (1982), and distinguishing Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604 (1993).

No Factual Issue of Waiver Under Contractual Consent to Assignment Clause — Summary Judgment Proper: The Nicholsons entered a contract option with J.G.L. Distributing (JGL) that gave JGL 5 years to purchase the Nicholsons' property. The option contained a consent to assignment clause that required JGL to obtain the Nicholsons' written consent before assignment to a third party. JGL subsequently assigned an interest in the property to plaintiff but did not notify the Nicholsons. Plaintiff spent money improving the property but missed a payment. The Nicholsons then notified JGL that the option expired and that they intended to sell the property to someone else. Plaintiff sued JGL and the Nicholsons, JGL counterclaimed against plaintiff and filed cross-claims against the Nicholsons, the Nicholsons counterclaimed against JGL, and all three parties moved for summary judgment. The District Court dismissed plaintiff's claim because plaintiff was not a party to the contract. The court also held that the consent to assignment clause was valid and enforceable, but that even though JGL breached the agreement by not notifying the Nicholsons of the assignment and by missing a payment, the breach was not material and did not serve to terminate JGL's right to exercise the option. The court then concluded that forfeiture would be too harsh a remedy, excused the forfeiture, and granted JGL 20 days to pay the Nicholsons the full purchase price. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to show a genuine issue of material fact that the Nicholsons waived their rights under the consent to assignment clause. The breach of contract by JGL was incidental rather than material, so the District Court's holding that forfeiture would be too harsh was not erroneous. Thus, the District Court correctly applied the antiforfeiture statute when it granted JGL equitable relief under 28-1-104 because JGL's breach was not grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent. It was only when the Nicholsons discovered that they could sell the property at a greater profit that they acted to strictly enforce the timely payment provision of the contract, so application of the antiforfeiture statute was appropriate to avoid an unjust result. Mere Denial of Public Nature of Road Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Public Prescriptive Easement Affirmed: The District Court found that the elements of a prescriptive easement over a road on defendants' property were satisfied and granted summary judgment to plaintiff county. Defendants contended that disputed issues of fact existed regarding proof of a prescriptive easement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The county proved that use of the road was open, notorious, exclusive, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutorily required period. The only evidence in support of defendants' position was a conclusory hearsay statement claiming that the previous owners had indicated that the road was not public. Defendants' mere denial of the public nature of the road was insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact sufficient to withstand summary judgment. Powell County v. 5 Rockin' MS Angus Ranch, Inc., 2004 MT 337, 324 M 204, 102 P3d 1210 (2004), following Heller v. Gremaux, 2002 MT 199, 311 M 178, 53 P3d 1259 (2002).

Failure to Notify Current Occupant That Tax Deed May Issue — Quiet Title Deed Properly Voided: Under 15-18-212, notice that a tax deed will be issued unless a property tax lien is redeemed must be made to each interested party and to the current occupant. In this case, defendant knew that plaintiff was the current occupant and knew where plaintiff was located but simply did not provide the requisite notice. Additionally, because plaintiff did not receive adequate notice, the county was without jurisdiction to issue defendant a quiet title decree. Every essential and material step of the tax deed statutes must be strictly followed. Thus, the District Court correctly voided defendant's quiet title decree and granted summary judgment to plaintiff because no genuine issue of material fact existed. Gentry Mont. Enterprises, Inc. v. McDonald, 2004 MT 322, 324 M 67, 101 P3d 767 (2004), following Moran v. Robbin, 261 M 478, 863 P2d 395 (1993).

Employer Unaware That Employee Would Be Injured During Routine Job Activity — No Showing of Employer Malice Under Sherner Standard: Olszewski was seriously injured while loading building trusses onto a flatbed truck. Olszewski recovered workers' compensation benefits but also brought an action alleging that the injury was covered under the 1999 intentional act exception in 39-71-413, which was in effect when the injury occurred. The District Court found no showing of malicious action on the part of the employer or foreman and granted summary judgment to the employer and foreman. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the malicious intent standard in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), and affirmed. Olszewski was unable to provide evidence that the employer knew that employees would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident, and absent a showing of that material fact, the statutory exception did not apply and summary judgment was proper. Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004).

Sledding in City Park Considered Recreational Purpose for Which City Immune From Liability: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. The trial court held that the city was immune from liability pursuant to 70-16-302. Citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), plaintiff contended that because city parks are freely available to the public, it was unnecessary for the law to encourage availability by limiting a city's tort liability. The Supreme Court disagreed and distinguished Dobrocke, holding that the use of city parks is discretionary, unlike the use of city streets and boulevards that was at issue in Dobrocke, so the legislative rationale behind 70-16-302 to encourage the availability of recreational areas applied. Winter sports, such as sledding, are explicitly listed in the statute as a recreational purpose, so summary judgment for the city was affirmed. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

No Showing of Malicious Act or Omission by Coworker in Death of Employee — Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Doctrine Applicable under 1999 Statute: Under the 1999 version of 39-71-413 and Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), a plaintiff was required to show both an intentional and malicious act or omission in order to avoid the workers' compensation exclusivity doctrine (revised in 2001 to require only the showing of an intentional act or omission). Here Everhard, a mine worker, was killed by a train driven by Aafedt after signaling that Aafedt could proceed. Everhard's estate sued Aafedt and the mining company. The District Court concluded that Aafedt's conduct was intentional when he moved the train without seeing Everhard, but there was no showing that Everhard suffered an injury caused by actual malice by Aafedt or the company, so summary judgment was granted to defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed. As a matter of law, it could not be said that Aafedt deliberately proceeded to act in conscious or intentional disregard or even indifference to the high probability of injury to Everhard under the definition of actual malice, so the estate failed to overcome the workers' compensation exclusive remedy rule, and summary judgment was proper. Blain v. Stillwater Min. Co., 2004 MT 141, 321 M 403, 92 P3d 4 (2004).

Speculation That Subcontractor's Work Caused Building Defect — Summary Judgment Proper: A contractor filed a third-party negligence and breach of contract action against a subcontractor who prepared the ground surface and laid the asphalt for some tennis courts. The District Court granted summary judgment for the subcontractor, and the contractor appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The contractor failed to present a genuine issue of material fact that the subcontractor's work was the cause of a purported bulge in the tennis court. Because implicating the subcontractor's work as the cause of the defect required speculation, summary judgment was proper because causation is a material element in sustaining a cause for negligence or breach. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Wage Claims Precluded by Separation and Release Agreement — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs were terminated from employment with defendant and signed a separation and release agreement that released defendant from all claims related to the employment and termination. Plaintiffs then sued defendant for wrongful discharge, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, contract interference, and tortious conduct. Defendant requested and was granted summary judgment based on relinquishment of claims in the separation and release agreement, and plaintiffs appealed, asserting that the agreement was void under 39-3-208. The Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs' affidavit in response to defendant's summary judgment motion made general allegations regarding both wage and hour violations and insufficient consideration, but despite the fact that plaintiffs had over 2 years to do so, the affidavit did not set forth specific facts to support either claim. Absent proof of the existence of any genuine issue of material fact regarding the validity of the agreement, summary judgment was proper. Old Elk v. Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies, Inc., 2003 MT 167, 316 M 320, 73 P3d 795 (2003), following Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532 (1985).

No Genuine Issue of Fact Regarding State Land Lessee's Rental of Property in Contravention of Zoning Regulations — Summary Judgment Proper: Stewart leased a parcel of state land for a residence in an area that was zoned for single-family dwellings. The state commenced a civil action challenging Stewart's use of a single-family unit as a multiple-family unit and seeking injunctive relief. The District Court granted the state's motion for summary judgment and issued an injunction against Stewart, and Stewart appealed. Stewart maintained that the residence had not been modified in any way following approval of architectural plans, so the residence was still in compliance with zoning restrictions. The state responded that it was not the structure itself but Stewart's use of the structure that violated zoning regulations. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. Testimony of former residents confirmed that Stewart's home was being used as a multiple-family residence, and Stewart offered no proof other than mere denial and speculation that a material question of fact existed regarding use of the structure as a multiple-family residence. Thus, summary judgment for the state was proper, and the grant of injunctive relief against Stewart was affirmed. St. v. Stewart, 2003 MT 108, 315 M 335, 68 P3d 712 (2003).

Duty of Railroad to Construct and Maintain Safe Railroad Crossing — Summary Dismissal of Liability Case Against County for Road Construction Proper: The North Alaska road crossing was built in the early 1920s through the cooperative efforts of the county and the railroad. The crossing was entirely on railroad property, and the railroad allowed access to the county over the years to maintain the road and to erect signs on the railroad's right-of-way. Fisch was injured in 1998 when his dump truck was struck by a train at the crossing. The railroad sought to ascribe liability to the county for negligent design and construction of the crossing. The county denied all allegations of negligence, and the District Court granted summary judgment to the county on the issue of liability. The railroad appealed on grounds that ARM 18.6.311 required the county to construct and maintain the roadway through the crossing in a safe manner. The Supreme Court disagreed. The clear intent of the administrative rule was to limit application of the rule to projects arising from the state's allocation of federal funds made available to improve the safety of railroad crossings and did not address road-rail alignment or crossing design. The historical ambiguity of whether the railroad or the county chose the exact location for the crossing raised no genuine issue of material fact and was irrelevant to the question of which entity had the duty to construct and maintain the crossing. Rather, under 69-14-602, that duty was statutorily assigned to and rested clearly with the railroad. Thus, summary dismissal of the liability claim against the county was proper. Fisch v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2003 MT 76, 315 M 13, 67 P3d 267 (2003).

Disclosure of Building Leakage and Source of Water Not Material Fact: Plaintiffs purchased a building in Philipsburg for use as a residence. Water began seeping into the basement a couple of years later, and plaintiffs sued the sellers for breach of the warranty of habitability and the city because the source of the water may have been from a broken water line nearby. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim against the sellers because the sellers' knowledge of prior leakage was not a material fact and because the question of the source of the water was not material to the transaction between the parties. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs all but conceded that the prior leakage was not important when they did not disclose the leakage to the bank when they refinanced the property. Further, plaintiffs' initial claim against the sellers was for nondisclosure of the leakage without regard to the source, so summary judgment was not precluded because the source was not essential to the case against the sellers. Bond v. Philipsburg, 2003 MT 74, 315 M 7, 67 P3d 255 (2003).

Breach of Subordination Agreement — Failure to Respond — Summary Judgment Proper: After submitting evidence in support of its motion, defendant moved for summary judgment because plaintiff breached a subordination agreement. The burden shifted to plaintiff to respond, but instead of filing a response brief, plaintiff filed two depositions and a set of discovery answers at the hearing and relied on oral argument. After consideration, the District Court granted summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, contending that summary judgment was improper because the depositions and discovery answers proved the existence of an intercreditor agreement between defendant and a codefendant, establishing a question of fact whether defendant received all funds to which it was entitled and thus whether defendant had any claim against plaintiff. The Supreme Court disagreed. Breach of the subordination agreement occurred before the intercreditor agreement existed, so the facts presented by plaintiff did not establish a material fact regarding the subordination agreement, and summary judgment was appropriate. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003).

No Requirement That Private Property Be Available for Public Use Before Landowner Liability Shield Applies — Landowner Immune From Suit Absent Consideration or Evidence of Misconduct: Saari went inner tube sledding with a church group on a hill at a ski resort after the resort was closed for the day. The group paid no fees to use the hill and did not rent or purchase equipment from the resort operator. During that evening, Saari lost control and crashed in a creek bed, suffering injuries which subsequently caused Saari's death. Saari's estate sued the resort operator on six negligence counts, including survival action, wrongful death, negligence, premises liability, attractive nuisance, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that 70-16-302 precluded liability by the operator because there was no duty of care owed to Saari and granted summary judgment to the operator on all counts. The estate appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By its terms, 70-16-302 provides for landowner liability when a recreational user gives valuable consideration to the landowner in exchange for using the property or when the landowner acts with willful or wanton misconduct. While conceding that Saari paid no consideration for use of the ski hill, the estate nevertheless argued that the operator generally benefited from after-hours sledders, which constituted consideration. However, no legal authority was advanced for the proposition that economic benefits received at a different point in time constituted valuable consideration given by Saari on the night in question, and these speculative statements did not give rise to a genuine issue of material fact. Moreover, the operator's failure to prevent or supervise after-hours sledding did not constitute willful or wanton misconduct. An absence of evidence cannot establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Finally, the estate cited Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), for the proposition that a question of fact existed regarding whether the property was open to the public. Under Simchuk, if the land upon which an injury occurs is not available for public use, the landowner does not enjoy the limited liability afforded by 70-16-302. However, a public use requirement would essentially negate the "without permission" language of the statute and exceed the parameters of the statute, and because the statute contains no express language that property be open for public use before the liability shield applies, the Supreme Court overruled Simchuk to that extent. Summary judgment on all counts was proper. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003).

Development and Use Agreement Not Precluding City From Entering Agreement for Construction Project on Public Property — Franchise Agreement Outside Scope of Citizen Group's Agreement With City: A citizen's group entered a franchise agreement with a professional baseball organization to bring a team to Missoula. After two potential sites were rejected, the city of Missoula accepted a gift of property upon which to construct a baseball facility and granted the citizen group the right to finance and construct the stadium on the property and to convey the completed facility to the city. The citizen group moved to enjoin the city from development of the proposed civic baseball stadium because of the city's failure to comply with statutory requirements for planning, funding, and managing the facility. All claims were dismissed on summary judgment, and the citizen group appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The development and use agreements in this case did not preclude the city from executing an agreement with another entity for the construction of a similar facility on public property or from leasing a city-owned facility for baseball games or any other purpose. Any franchise agreement between the baseball organization and the citizen group was outside the scope of the group's agreement with the city, so the voter-approval provisions of 7-5-4321 did not apply. The citizen group's argument that the city was required to comply with urban renewal laws also failed. The decision whether to proceed with development under the urban renewal statutes was up to the city, and the fact that the city designated the capital improvements associated with the stadium construction as an urban renewal project did not require that the citizen group's building project come under the same purview. Rather, under 7-16-4106, the city is permitted to obtain an athletic field and civic stadium through purchase, donation, or condemnation and to regulate its use, but nothing in the statute prohibits the city from designating a stadium project as an urban renewal project or mandates that the project be designated as an urban renewal project. The District Court properly found that the city appropriately exercised its administrative authority in accepting the gift property and then leasing the site to the citizen group for purposes of constructing a stadium using private financial resources. The citizen group failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact that would preclude summary judgment. Fair Play Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula, 2002 MT 179, 311 M 22, 52 P3d 926 (2002).

Statute of Limitations Tolled Until Discovery of Self-Concealing Injury — Exposure to Farm Chemicals and Injection: While assisting her former husband with farm duties in 1989, Elizabeth Nelson was exposed to farm chemicals and pesticides and was accidentally injected with bovine ecthyma vaccine. She lost consciousness briefly following the injection but recovered and continued assisting with sheep inoculations the rest of the day. From 1989 through 1998, Elizabeth received extensive medical evaluations and treatments for numerous physical ailments that either surfaced or worsened subsequent to the exposure to chemicals and the vaccine, but doctors were unable to pinpoint the cause and effect relationship between the ailments and the exposure until 1996. Elizabeth filed a complaint in 1998, but her former husband moved for summary judgment because Elizabeth allegedly knew of her injuries for more than 3 years before the action was filed. The District Court agreed that the claim was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204. Elizabeth appealed. In Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the onset of the statute of limitations is determined by applying the discovery rule and establishing when the injured person knew, or in the exercise of due diligence should have known, of the facts constituting the cause of action. However, the District Court distinguished Hando because Elizabeth's injuries following the injection were obvious and immediate, unlike the self-concealing injuries in Hando that developed over time. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although Elizabeth suspected the cause of the injuries and diligently sought medical treatment and diagnosis, there was no genuine issue of material fact that the actual causal connection was not discovered until 1996, well within the 3-year period prior to the filing of the claim. Thus, the complaint was timely filed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was improper, so the case was reversed for trial on the merits. Nelson v. Nelson, 2002 MT 151, 310 M 329, 50 P3d 139 (2002), distinguished in Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Failure to Prove Conduct a Cause in Fact of Alleged Damage — Summary Judgment Proper: Abraham's townhouse basement flooded, so Nelson, the builder of the townhouse, was sued for negligently designing and building the residence, breaching implied warranties of quality workmanship, good construction, and habitability, and causing the basement to flood. Causation is one of four elements that must be proved in a negligence action, and except in cases of intervening cause, proof of causation is satisfied by proof that a party's conduct was a cause in fact of the damage alleged. Here, when Nelson presented Abraham's deposition testimony that Abraham did not know the cause of the flooding, Nelson met the initial burden of demonstrating that no material question of fact existed regarding the element of causation, and the burden shifted to Abraham to provide facts to prove causation. However, Abraham could not merely point to lack of evidence as the factor creating a material question, nor did Abraham's suspicions or unsupported conclusory or speculative statements raise a genuine issue of material fact. Abraham could not merely rest on evidence of Nelson's negligence, but rather was required to show that Nelson's negligence was the cause in fact of Abraham's injury. Abraham failed to submit facts to create a material question upon which the District Court could determine whether Nelson's actions in designing and building the townhouse were the cause in fact of the flooding, so summary judgment for Nelson was proper. Abraham v. Nelson, 2002 MT 94, 309 M 366, 46 P3d 628 (2002). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), Gentry v. Douglas Hereford Ranch, Inc., 1998 MT 182, 290 M 126, 962 P2d 1205 (1998), and Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

Dismissal of Counterclaims by Summary Judgment Proper When All Prior Claims Resolved by Memorandum of Understanding: Defendant filed several counterclaims stemming from an agricultural lease. The District Court held that the underlying dispute regarding the parties' obligations applicable to the lease was settled by a valid and enforceable memorandum of understanding (MOU), and dismissed the counterclaims as a matter of law. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The MOU was a valid unconditional resolution of the parties' claims that effectively released any claims of the signatories, and the District Court did not err in summarily dismissing the counterclaims. Bar OK Ranch, Co. v. Ehlert, 2002 MT 12, 308 M 140, 40 P3d 378 (2002).

Statements of Intent to File Grievance Not Considered Formal Grievance — Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Warranting Summary Judgment: Offerdahl was notified by a supervisor that, based on complaints of inappropriate behavior toward a subordinate employee and the Department's investigation of the complaints, Offerdahl's employment would be terminated. Following a pretermination hearing that Offerdahl did not attend, his employment was terminated on September 15. He was notified of his right to respond or pursue a grievance in accordance with the state's grievance policy, which required that a formal grievance be filed within 15 working days after the grievable event. On September 19, Offerdahl sent the Department a letter indicating that he would not attend any other termination hearings and that he intended to follow the grievance procedure as directed in the September 15 letter. Offerdahl eventually mailed a written grievance on October 7 that was filed on October 8, but the grievance was denied as untimely. Offerdahl appealed to the District Court, but the court granted the state's motion for summary judgment on grounds that Offerdahl had failed to exhaust administrative remedies. Offerdahl appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Neither Offerdahl's oral statement to another Department employee that he intended to file a grievance, nor the September 19 letter of intent to file a grievance, met the requirements of a formal grievance. Offerdahl was required by the policy to file a formal grievance by October 6, but his grievance was not filed until October 8. Thus, Offerdahl's failure to timely pursue administrative remedies for termination of his employment barred pursuit of the claim, and the motion for summary judgment was properly granted. Offerdahl v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2002 MT 5, 308 M 94, 43 P3d 275 (2002).

Mortgage Against Party's Interest in Property Granted Pursuant to Dissolution — No Tortious Interference With Business, Prima Facie Tort, or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: When George and Joyce were divorced, the District Court granted George exclusive possession of the ranch until it could be sold and the proceeds divided between the parties. During the course of the dissolution proceedings, Joyce took out several loans for living expenses. After the dissolution, Joyce consolidated the $150,000 in loans, and the bank executed a mortgage on Joyce's interest in the ranch to secure the loan. When George found out about the mortgage and security interest, he became distraught because he believed that he would not be able to obtain loans on the property to enable him to conduct ranch obligations and meet his operations. George subsequently filed suit against Joyce, the bank, and the bank president, who was Joyce's son-in-law, alleging tortious interference with business relationships, prima facie tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, and George appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277 (1995), the court concluded that the acts of Joyce and the bank were legal and that, standing alone, the acts did not give rise to any presumption or inference that the acts were done to harm George. The court also declined to recognize a separate cause of action for prima facie tort under the facts of this case. Applying Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the court further concluded that because the defendants' acts were legal, no claim for emotional distress could arise from those acts. Absent material facts evidencing malicious intent or damages, summary judgment was proper. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Sale of Property Contingent on Financing — Financing Contingent on Grant of Contract — Oral Agreement to Purchase Additional Property Contingent on Initial Sale — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Genuine Issue of Fact: Community, Counseling, and Correctional Services, Inc. (Community), agreed to purchase Albright's property for a prerelease center. An additional oral agreement provided that Community would also purchase furnishings on the property when the sale was completed. The sale was contingent on Community's ability to obtain financing, and financing was contingent upon a grant for the prerelease center to Community from the Department of Corrections. Ultimately, the Department declined to issue the contract for prerelease services, Community was unable to obtain financing, and Albright was unable to sell the property or furnishings. Albright sued Community for breach of contract. The District Court granted summary judgment to Community, holding that under the plain language of the contract, the offer terminated when the Department did not issue the contract. Albright appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. No question of fact existed with respect to the conditions for the agreement because the agreement conditioned formation of any contract to buy the real property on Community's ability to obtain financing and Community could not obtain financing without the Department contract. Further, Albright's own affidavit stated that the oral agreement to purchase the furnishings was contingent on purchase of the property, so no issue of fact existed regarding the sale of the furnishings either, and that issue was also properly disposed of by summary judgment. Albright v. Community, Counseling, & Correctional Serv., Inc., 2001 MT 272, 307 M 289, 37 P3d 675 (2001).

Denial of General Liability Coverage Based on Liquor Liability Exclusion — Failure to Raise Alternative Negligence Theory — Summary Judgment Proper: Cusenbary was injured when a bar patron drove a car through the wall of Mortensen's tavern. Mortensen was covered by USF&G Co. under a general liability policy, but the insurance included a liquor liability exclusion. When Mortensen tendered the claim to USF&G Co. for defense, the company denied coverage and refused to defend based on the exclusion, so Cusenbary's claim was tried to a jury and Mortensen was found guilty of negligence (see Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351 (1999)). Mortensen then assigned all rights to coverage under the general liability policy to Cusenbary. Cusenbary then sued USF&G Co., contending that the company had a duty to indemnify Mortensen for negligent behavior in management of the bar, separate from the negligent conduct of serving alcohol to an intoxicated patron, because the separate conduct was not excluded by the liquor liability exclusion. The District Court granted summary judgment for USF&G Co., holding that the separate conduct related directly to the improper service or sale of alcohol and that Mortensen failed to set forth evidence supporting an alternative negligence theory, so as a matter of law, Mortensen's judgment was excluded by the express language of the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669 (1988). All claims and arguments at trial were related to Mortensen's negligence in serving alcohol, and no assertion was ever made that the proposed evidence was relevant to any other theory of negligence or to any other theory. All of the claims arose from serving alcohol and were thus excluded from coverage. Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

Absence of Genuine Issue of Material Fact Regarding Negligent Installation of Septic System — Summary Judgment Proper: Prior to the Sherrards' purchase of property for building a home and horse arena, they had the county sanitarian issue a resite evaluation that addressed ground water levels and designated appropriate septic systems to service each building. The sanitarian approved a permit for a shallow cap system for the horse arena. The system was subject to state regulations requiring minimum 12-inch trenches and prohibiting installation where the water table reached within 5 feet of the natural ground surface. The Sherrards contracted with Prewett to install the system. Prewett dug a hole for the septic tank, dug 36-inch deep trenches for lateral pipes in the drain field, placed washed gravel and pipes in the trenches, and prepared the system for inspection. The next day, the new county sanitarian inspected the system, found standing ground water in the septic tank and observed water in the lateral trenches, fixed the ground water level at 27 inches below the natural surface, and because the ground water level was too high to meet county and state requirements, revoked the Sherrards' permit. The Sherrards then sued Prewett for negligent installation of the system. The District Court determined that because the ground water depth was less than 5 feet and the shallow cap system could not meet regulations, the object of the contract between the parties was illegal and the Sherrards could not proceed with their contract-based claim. Therefore, the court concluded that no genuine issue of material fact existed and granted summary judgment for Prewett, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Sherrards' bare denial of the 27-inch ground water level and their speculation about the ground water level at the time that the original permit was issued, were insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact because they constituted mere denial, speculation, or conclusory statements. The material fact was not whether the ground water level was precisely 27 inches below the surface, but whether it was 5 feet or more below the surface as required by state regulations. To prevail, the Sherrards needed to come forward with substantial and material evidence with regard to the ground water level at the horse arena, but they failed to do so, so summary judgment was proper. Sherrard v. Prewett, 2001 MT 228, 306 M 511, 36 P3d 378 (2001).

Failure to Produce Evidence in Contradiction of Investigating Officer's Conclusions Regarding Cause of Accident — Summary Judgment Proper: Ten-year-old Vivier was riding her bicycle and, turning unexpectedly in front of a vehicle, was struck and injured. Vivier's parents sued the state Department of Transportation and Lewis and Clark County for negligently failing to make the road safe. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county on grounds that the county did not have a duty with respect to the design and construction of the road and granted summary judgment to the Department on grounds that the Department did not have a duty to undertake road reconstruction simply because standards of construction had changed since the road was originally constructed. The court also determined that the Viviers failed to submit evidence tending to show that the accident was caused by a design or construction problem. The Viviers appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A cause of action for negligence has four elements, including duty, breach, causation, and damages, and summary judgment is proper if the moving party establishes that one element lacks any genuine issue of material fact and the nonmoving party does not come forward with proof that a genuine issue exists. In this case, regardless of whether the county or the Department had a duty to improve the road, the evidence showed that the accident occurred because the child turned in front of the vehicle before the driver had a chance to react, not because the condition of the road prevented the driver from maneuvering to avoid the accident. The Viviers failed to produce any facts to contradict the investigating officer's conclusions with regard to the cause of the accident, and the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the county and Department was correct. Vivier v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 221, 306 M 454, 35 P3d 958 (2001).

No Standing to Recover Damages by Party Not Owner of Property — Fax Not Considered Valid Assignment of Damage Claim: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a complaint seeking compensation from the companies. Dale's parents eventually filed for bankruptcy, and the Lewises finally became the owners of record in 1998. When the companies discovered that the Lewises were not the owners of the inn at the time that the suit was filed, they moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court on grounds that the Lewises had no standing to assert a claim for damages arising before they acquired title. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited the general rule that persons cannot recover for damages to property that they do not own. Further, even though property damage claims have long been recognized as assignable, the fax did not meet the statutory requirements of a valid assignment and was unenforceable. Thus, on the issue of prepurchase damages, no material question of fact existed regarding ownership or assignment, so the Lewises had no standing to bring a claim for damages prior to their ownership of the inn. Summary judgment was affirmed. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Claim of Omitted Child Summarily Dismissed — Failure to Present Evidence of Mistaken Belief of Death of Child: Scotty Prescott married Howard Putman in 1946, and they had a son, William, in 1949. Scotty later found out that Howard's previous marriage had not been dissolved when they married, and Scotty was granted an annulment in 1954. She remained in Montana, attending Montana State College, and Howard moved to California with William. Aside from two letters in 1954, there was no evidence of any contact among Scotty, Howard, and William. William had no independent recollection of his mother and never attempted to contact her during the remaining 42 years of her life. Scotty executed a will in 1985, bequeathing the profits from the sale of her ranch to the college, the remainder of her estate to the Museum of the Rockies, and nothing to William, who later asserted that he was entitled to a share of the estate pursuant to 72-2-332 because Scotty mistakenly believed that he was dead. In a nonsubstantial revision of the will in 1991, Scotty had stated that "the line of succession for this branch of the Prescott family ends with me", which William contended raised a question of material fact as to whether his mother believed him to be dead. However, the statement was not made until 6 years after the will was executed and was consistent with the separate way that they lived their lives. Further, the record was replete with uncontroverted proof that the disposition of Scotty's estate was consistent with her intention stated as early as 1964 to endow the college and did not indicate that William was omitted from the will solely because Scotty believed him to be dead. In the absence of sufficient evidence required by 72-2-332(3) proving that William was an omitted child, the District Court correctly dismissed William's claim by summary judgment. In re Estate of Prescott, 2000 MT 200, 300 M 469, 8 P3d 88, 57 St. Rep. 779 (2000).

Lack of Meritorious Argument on Appeal of Summary Judgment: Kinsey-Cartwright and Burleson had a dispute over an easement across Kinsey-Cartwright's property. Burleson took his attorney, Brower, to investigate the disputed easement, during which time a confrontation occurred, resulting in a complaint against Brower for assault and trespass. The District Court granted Brower's request for summary judgment, and Kinsey-Cartwright appealed. With the exception of four sentences in her reply brief, Kinsey-Cartwright's entire argument was devoted to arguing that no easement burdened her land. However, the appeal was related to the complaint of assault and trespass, not the validity of an easement. The four sentences were simply a collection of conclusions and contained no discussion of the law relating to trespass or assault, no citation to legal authority or to the record, and no application of the law to the facts. It is not the obligation of the Supreme Court to formulate arguments or locate authorities for parties who appeal. Thus, absent any meritorious argument to consider on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court award of summary judgment. Kinsey-Cartwright v. Brower, 2000 MT 198, 300 M 450, 5 P3d 1026, 57 St. Rep. 769 (2000). See also St. v. Blackcrow, 1999 MT 44, 293 M 374, 975 P2d 1253 (1999).

Error in Denial of Opportunity to Respond to Amended Requests for Admission — Late Discovery Responses Properly Denied: Defendant neglected to respond to requests for admission within 30 days. On defendant's motion for summary judgment, the District Court amended two requests for admission, which nullified the matter contained in the requests as being conclusively established. Plaintiff should have been given an opportunity to respond to the amended requests and the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing plaintiff the chance to respond. The Supreme Court reversed the portions of the summary judgment that corresponded to the amended requests for admission, but, in accord with Easton v. Cowie, 247 M 181, 805 P2d 573 (1991), the portions of the summary judgment based on admissions demonstrating no genuine issue of material fact were affirmed because plaintiff did not respond in a timely manner to the discovery requests. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641, 57 St. Rep. 674 (2000).

No Duty Constituting Negligence When Danger or Risk Unforeseeable — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Material Fact Regarding Legal Duty: The father could not reasonably foresee that, by giving his child permission to go to a friend's house to play, the child would go to the house of a different friend, participate along with other children in burning a photograph using gasoline, and be burned when another friend accidentally kicked the container of flaming gasoline onto his child. The duty element of negligence turns primarily on foreseeability, and if a reasonably prudent defendant can foresee neither any danger of direct injury nor any risk from an intervening cause, there is no negligence. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment, but in this case, reasonable minds could not differ regarding the absence of material fact regarding any duty owed by the father, so summary judgment was proper as a matter of law. Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000), following Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999).

Doctrine of Reasonable Expectations Inapplicable When Policy Language Excludes Coverage — Liability Coverage on Borrowed Horse Trailer Limited to Policy Terms: Babcock borrowed a horse trailer from her neighbor, and even though the trailer ball on Babcock's truck was too small for the trailer hitch, she attempted to tow the trailer anyway. The trailer came unhooked, left the road, and struck a fence. Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) paid Babcock the full cost of the fence repair. Babcock requested that Farmers also pay for damages to the trailer. Farmers paid $500 toward the trailer, which constituted Babcock's policy limit for collision and comprehensive coverage. Babcock sued, claiming that Farmers was required to pay for the trailer damage under the liability coverage. The District Court granted summary judgment for Farmers, concluding that the plain policy language limited coverage to $500. Babcock appealed, asserting that the policy language was ambiguous but nevertheless created a reasonable expectation that a trailer was covered and that the exclusion for damage "to property owned or being transported by an insured person" did not apply because the trailer was not being "transported" when it was damaged, having separated from the truck. Farmers argued that, under Babcock's interpretation, a passenger ejected from a car would have no claim for medical payments because the passenger did not "occupy" the vehicle at the time of injury. The Supreme Court agreed. The doctrine of reasonable expectations does not apply to create coverage when the terms of the policy clearly demonstrate an intent to exclude particular coverage. In this case, the policy language clearly excluded liability coverage for the borrowed trailer because it was in Babcock's charge and she was transporting it at the time of the accident. Babcock v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2000 MT 114, 299 M 407, 999 P2d 347, 57 St. Rep. 479 (2000).

Failure to Timely File Discrimination Complaint With Commission — Prosecution in District Court Precluded: Skites filed a claim against her employer with the Montana Human Rights Commission 225 days after the most recent or continuing act of employment discrimination. Under 49-2-501, a complaint must be filed within 180 days after the unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered, and if the complaint is not timely filed, it may not be considered by the Commission. Further, pursuant to Hash v. U.S. W. Communications Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), timely filing before the Commission is a prerequisite to filing an employment discrimination complaint in District Court because Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, is the exclusive remedy for employment discrimination under Montana law. Skites' complaint was not timely filed with the Commission, thus her ability to prosecute the discrimination complaint in District Court was precluded. The District Court did not err in determining that no genuine issue of material fact existed that would preclude summary judgment for the employer. Skites v. Blue Cross Blue Shield of Mont., 1999 MT 301, 297 M 156, 991 P2d 955, 56 St. Rep. 1213 (1999).

Existence of Promissory Notes Creating Rebuttable Presumption of Sufficient Consideration — Speculative Statements Insufficient to Demonstrate Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Defendant Moon contended that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff on promissory notes because there was a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the notes were unenforceable for lack of consideration. However, 26-1-602 creates a rebuttable presumption arising from the fact of the promissory note itself that the note was given for sufficient consideration. Under Rule 301(b)(2), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), Moon was required to show a preponderance of evidence contrary to the presumption in order to overcome it, otherwise the court was bound to find the assumed fact in accordance with the presumption. Moon's conclusory and speculative statements in the pleadings, briefs, and affidavits did not constitute sufficient factual evidence to demonstrate that a genuine issue of material fact existed contrary to the presumption of valid consideration, so the grant of summary judgment was proper. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

No Requirement That Adulterated Food Poses Danger to Human Health — Embargo Justified — Summary Judgment Proper: The dairy filed a complaint against the state, challenging the state's embargo of the dairy's milk products following the discovery of a black substance in the milk. The dairy claimed that in order for milk to be contaminated, and thus adulterated, it must be dangerous to human health. The Supreme Court held that under the plain meaning of 50-31-509, there is no requirement that adulterated food be adulterated so as to be dangerous or fraudulent in order for it to be embargoed or detained. It is sufficient that the food is adulterated. When there was no evidence raising genuine issues of material fact concerning the scope of the embargo or the quantity and identity of the black substance, the District Court did not err when it granted summary judgment to the state on these issues. Clover Leaf Dairy v. St., 285 M 380, 948 P2d 1164, 54 St. Rep. 1203 (1997).

Grant of Equitable Relief From Forfeiture — Conditions: Defendant defaulted on a contract to operate a coal mine. The District Court granted summary judgment, finding no genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's unlawful detainer. Defendant sought equitable relief pursuant to 28-1-104. The Supreme Court may, under appropriate circumstances, equitably relieve a party from the harsh effects of a forfeiture. Circumstances warranting equitable relief must not only meet the statutory requirements of tendering full compensation within a reasonable time after service of notice of default and not acting in a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent manner, but the party seeking relief must also assert facts that appeal to the conscience of the court of equity. Mere financial inability is not sufficient to appeal to the court's conscience. In this case, defendant's request for equitable relief was deficient because it did not meet statutory and common-law criteria, so the grant of summary judgment was affirmed. Glacier Park Co. v. Mtn., Inc., 285 M 420, 949 P2d 229, 54 St. Rep. 1222 (1997), following Kovacich v. Metals Bank & Trust Co., 139 M 449, 365 P2d 639 (1961), distinguishing Parrott v. Heller, 171 M 212, 557 P2d 819 (1976), and followed in Weter v. Archambault, 2002 MT 336, 313 M 284, 61 P3d 771 (2002).

Attorney Duty of Care — Facts Indicate No Breach of Duty: Seeley argued that the lower court erred in dismissing his suit against a law firm because the facts showed that the attorneys should have known that he wanted them to deliver the earnest money on certain real property on his behalf before the result of the title search was known. The Supreme Court held that common sense dictated that the facts could only be interpreted that the earnest money was to be delivered if there was no problem with the title, otherwise Seeley could have delivered the money himself prior to the results of the title search. Seeley v. Davis, 284 M 517, 946 P2d 119, 54 St. Rep. 1006 (1997).

Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Liability Properly Granted: After examining the facts regarding Walker's undisputed breach of contract in the purchase and renovation of a house, the District Court granted Gierkes a partial summary judgment on the issue of liability. During a subsequent trial on the issue of damages, Walker alleged as an affirmative defense that Gierkes failed to adequately mitigate their damages. The Supreme Court found no genuine issue of material fact and affirmed the summary judgment as a matter of law. Further, the court also affirmed the trial court finding that Gierkes took reasonable and appropriate steps to mitigate their damages in requiring that Walker cease the renovation work and in denying him access to the property. Gierke v. Walker, 279 M 349, 927 P2d 524, 53 St. Rep. 1181 (1996).

Vehicle Owner Not Liable for Adult Daughter's Accident — Speculative and Conclusory Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Material Fact: The plaintiff sued the owner of a vehicle driven by the owner's adult daughter. The District Court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was proper because the plaintiff failed in the burden to raise any genuine issue of material fact that the daughter was the owner's agent at the time of the accident or that the owner negligently entrusted the vehicle to the daughter. As a matter of law, the owner was not liable for the daughter's alleged negligence merely by being the owner of the vehicle. Ulrigg v. Jones, 274 M 215, 907 P2d 937, 52 St. Rep. 1198 (1995).

Retaliatory Employment Requirement — Not Relevant to Requirement's Constitutionality: The date on which the state began to require that its firefighters protecting civilian and National Guard aircraft be members of the National Guard was not a material issue of fact precluding a summary judgment that the requirement was unconstitutional. The date was relevant to the petitioner firefighter's claim that the requirement was in retaliation for a firefighters' wage and hours suit against the state, but whether the requirement was in retaliation for the suit was not relevant to the issue of whether the requirement was constitutional. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

Land Lease Provisions Regarding Volunteer Crop: The provisions of an agricultural lease provided that defendant would lease the premises during the 1989, 1990, and 1991 crop seasons and deliver to plaintiff one-fourth of all crops produced on the land, except defendant was to receive the entire 1989 crop. A volunteer crop was harvested in 1989. Plaintiff contended that the crop was actually planted in 1987 for harvest in 1988, but due to a hail storm in 1988, the volunteer crop sprouted in 1989. Nevertheless, the agreement was clear on its face that defendant was to receive the 1989 crop, and the District Court properly granted summary judgment to defendant on the issue of ownership of the volunteer crop. Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994).

Collision With Moose Not Itself Evidence of Negligence: Lynds's motor home collided with a moose, leaving the animal on the highway. The moose was then struck by another vehicle driven by Murdock. White, a passenger in the Murdock vehicle, brought a negligence action against Lynds, Murdock, and the state, alleging negligence in Lynds's failure to remove the injured moose from the highway, in Murdock's failure to see the injured moose before striking it, and in the state's failure to sign the area as a moose crossing. The District Court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that according to the trial evidence, there was insufficient time for Lynds to remove the moose from the highway before it was struck by Murdock, that there was nothing in the evidence produced by White in opposition to the motions upon which a jury could conclude that Murdock failed to act reasonably, and that posting of moose crossing signs would not have prevented the accident. Therefore, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not err in ruling that White failed to establish a material question of fact. White v. Murdock, 265 M 386, 877 P2d 474, 51 St. Rep. 547 (1994).

Enforcement of Bond Covering Sale of Horses — Summary Judgment Proper: Parks contracted with Michael to purchase 96 thoroughbred horses, paying $1,000 down, executing a promissory note for the remaining $1,749,000, and securing the note through a bond issued by Glacier General Assurance Company (Glacier). The bond required Michael to assign his security interest in the horses to Glacier in the event that performance on the bond was required. Parks failed to make the first installment payment, so Michael sent notice of default and acceleration to Parks. Michael also notified Glacier of the default, requested performance, and indicated the expectation that Glacier take possession of the horses or reimburse the costs of holding them. Glacier agreed that the horses would be sold at private auction. Michael subsequently received an opinion from a Kentucky court that he was entitled to summary judgment and liquidated damages against Glacier in the amount of $2,220,484.86, of which $1,749,000 represented Glacier's liability on the bond and the remainder reflected Michael's expenses for the maintenance, upkeep, and sale of the horses, less the sale proceeds. While Michael's litigation was proceeding in Kentucky, Glacier filed a petition for liquidation in Montana. The State Auditor was appointed liquidator. Michael filed a proof of claim with the liquidator, but the claim was denied. Michael died, but the estate filed a complaint requesting a Class 3 payment priority and an order that the liquidator proceed with payment. The liquidator appealed, asserting nine affirmative defenses, including allegations that enforcement of the sales agreement was unconscionable, that the claim should be assigned Class 4 priority as a general creditor's claim, and that the amount of the claim on the bond should be offset by the proceeds from the sale of the horses. The District Court granted summary judgment to the estate, holding that the claim was valid in the amount of the bond and assigning the claim Class 3 priority in the distribution of Glacier's assets. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that a disparity between the horses' market value and the purchase price was immaterial to the conscionability of enforcing the sales contract. The liquidator raised no issues of material fact, and the estate was properly entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. In re Estate of Michael v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 264 M 261, 871 P2d 272, 51 St. Rep. 252 (1994), distinguishing Morrow v. FBS Ins., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988).

Complete Absence of Evidence of Sexual Assault — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs alleged that their 4-year-old daughter was sexually assaulted during gym class at preschool by R.B., an aide in another class at the school. There was no clear physical evidence that a sexual assault occurred because the examining physician testified that the child could have been injured by other means, both innocent and accidental. The child's verbal and cognitive skills were insufficiently developed to allow a conscious and knowing identification of R.B. as the perpetrator. There was no testimony from anyone present during the gym class that the child showed any outward signs of injury, pain, or trauma. The direct, uncontradicted testimony of the child's teacher was that R.B. had no contact with the child whatsoever. Because the allegations against R.B. were based on conclusory and speculative statements insufficient to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact, summary dismissal was proper. S.M. v. R.B., 261 M 522, 862 P2d 1166, 50 St. Rep. 1437 (1993).

Speculative and Conclusory Statements Not Basis for Issue of Fact: Nelson sued Montana Power Company for negligence in shutting off a gas valve at the scene of a fire in Nelson's store, which Nelson claimed resulted in more extensive fire damage than would otherwise have been caused. Nelson based his theory upon statements by fire personnel made during discovery that it was "possible" that the fire was being fed by another fuel source other than the building itself. The Supreme Court noted that a suspicion and speculative and conclusory statements are not sufficient evidence to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Nelson v. Mont. Power Co., 256 M 409, 847 P2d 284, 50 St. Rep. 126 (1993).

Employment Termination Agreement Constituting Relinquishment of Potential Claims — Summary Judgment Proper: Employee signed an employment termination agreement that provided in part for termination, compensation, medical insurance for himself and his wife, and a waiver of claims wherein both parties voluntarily waived and relinquished future employment-related claims and released one another from "all actions, suits, debts, agreements, obligations, costs, expenses and other liabilities" related to the employment relationship. Summary judgment on an employment-related claim brought 1 year after the agreement was entered was proper in light of employee's failure to raise any issue of material fact with regard to execution of the valid and enforceable termination agreement. Somersille v. Columbia Falls Aluminum Co., 255 M 101, 841 P2d 483, 49 St. Rep. 904 (1992).

Inference of Age Discrimination — Failure to Present Facts Indicating Dismissal a Pretext — Summary Judgment Proper: In the context of a summary judgment motion in an age discrimination action under 29 U.S.C. 621, et seq., the plaintiff need only adduce facts that, if believed, support a reasonable inference of the denial of an employment opportunity because of discriminatory age criteria. If that burden is met, the employer must rebut the inference of discrimination with evidence of legitimate, nondiscriminatory reasons that the plaintiff was not hired or was terminated. Upon such a showing, the burden shifts back to the employee to demonstrate with specific facts that the employer's explanation is a pretext. In this case, Kenyon was in the protected age class, met the minimum job qualifications, and was discharged and replaced by a younger woman, which was sufficient to support a reasonable inference of age discrimination. The employer then established that there were problems with Kenyon's work performance, number of absences, and time spent on nonprofessional duties over a long period of time and that there was a documented probation for poor work performance. Kenyon admitted by deposition that her employer's dissatisfaction with her work performance was apparent by his yelling at her on an almost daily basis. This evidence was sufficient to rebut the inference of discrimination. Kenyon subsequently failed to present specific facts that indicated that the employer's explanation for her dismissal was a pretext, relying only on conclusory assertions of discrimination raised in her affidavit. Kenyon therefore failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to her age discrimination claim, and summary dismissal in favor of the employer was proper. Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742, 49 St. Rep. 673 (1992), following Foster v. Arcata Assoc., Inc., 772 F2d 1453 (9th Cir. 1985).

Conclusory Statements Not Considered Material Facts: Mere disagreement about the interpretation of a fact does not amount to a genuine issue of material fact. When appellant recited facts with his own interpretations and conclusions that only carried the title of disputed issues of material fact, such conclusory statements, amounting to mischaracterization and selective quotation, were only his rendition of the facts and did not rise to the level of genuine issues of material facts. Sprunk v. First Bank Sys., 252 M 463, 830 P2d 103, 49 St. Rep. 369 (1992), followed in State ex rel. Scanlon v. Nat'l Ass'n of Ins. Comm'rs, 265 M 184, 875 P2d 340, 51 St. Rep. 480 (1994), Koepplin v. Zortman Min., Inc., 267 M 53, 881 P2d 1306, 51 St. Rep. 880 (1994), and Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 975 P2d 1242, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999). See also Knucklehead Land Co., Inc. v. Accutitle, Inc., 2007 MT 301, 340 M 62, 172 P3d 116 (2007).

Fatal Flaw in Amended Complaint — Summary Judgment Affirmed: Summary judgment was proper as a matter of law because plaintiff's amended complaint was fatally flawed by: (1) seeking to retroactively apply a workers' compensation statute that was previously held inapplicable to accidents occurring prior to its enactment; and (2) failing to allege that job-related accidents were proximately caused by negligence of defendant employer. Donahue v. Convenience Disposal, Inc., 250 M 261, 818 P2d 839, 48 St. Rep. 916 (1991).

Conspiracy, Fraud, and Bad Faith — Summary Judgment Proper: The plaintiff sued a medical company and various employees on the basis that they had conspired to complete a medical evaluation of him that would result in his losing his workers' compensation benefits. The Supreme Court held that absolutely no evidence had been introduced to support the plaintiff's claims. Grenz v. Medical Management NW., Inc., 250 M 58, 817 P2d 1151, 48 St. Rep. 855 (1991) (Grenz III). See also Grenz v. Fire & Cas. of Conn., 2001 MT 8, 304 M 83, 18 P3d 994 (2001), in which the court enjoined the claimant from filing further civil appeals until the sanction was paid.

Prior Oral Agreement Extinguished by Doctrine of Merger: The plaintiff, Eiselein, argued that the lower court had erred in granting the bank's motion for summary judgment. The lower court ruled that even if the bank had made an oral promise to lend Eiselein $150,000, that agreement was extinguished by a subsequent written agreement under which the bank lent the plaintiff only $35,000. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision on the basis that even if there had been a prior oral agreement, the subsequent writing between the parties would extinguish the oral agreement pursuant to the doctrine of merger. Eiselein v. Mont. Bank of Roundup, 250 M 71, 818 P2d 365, 48 St. Rep. 826 (1991).

No Retaliation in Discharge of Company President — Summary Judgment Proper: Mannix, terminated as president of Butte Water Company, appealed a District Court order granting summary judgment to defendant. Mannix alleged that facts supported his claim that his discharge was against the best interests of the water company and was in retaliation for refusing to sign a note. However, Mannix failed to present facts supporting his argument that his termination was against the best interests of the company or that defendant acted in retaliation in removing him as president of the water company. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 249 M 372, 816 P2d 441, 48 St. Rep. 782 (1991).

Parked Trailers Unattached to Insured Tractors — No Coverage Under Unambiguous Policy Provisions: The District Court found an insurance policy to be ambiguous regarding coverage for trailers that had been used to haul beer but that were parked and used for storage at the time they were accidentally run into and granted summary judgment for insurer based on that ambiguity. The Supreme Court found no ambiguity in policy language that clearly covered only trailers that were attached to an insured tractor. Citing its authority in Hereford v. Hereford, 183 M 104, 598 P2d 600 (1979), the Supreme Court reversed and granted summary judgment to the nonmoving party based on the fact that the unambiguous policy language created no genuine issue of material fact. Canal Ins. Co. v. Bunday, 249 M 100, 813 P2d 974, 48 St. Rep. 597 (1991).

Allegations of Constructive Fraud and Visitation Interference Unsubstantiated by Fact — Summary Judgment Proper: Appellant alleged that a counselor's testimony at a dissolution hearing was a misrepresentation constituting constructive fraud and that her observations and professional opinions affected the outcome of the visitation order to the point of visitation interference. However, the allegations were based on appellant's own speculation and opinion rather than substantial objective evidence contained in the record. Absent any genuine issue of material fact, summary judgment on both questions was proper. Thomas v. Hale, 246 M 64, 802 P2d 1255, 47 St. Rep. 2261 (1990), followed in Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Creation of Issue of Fact by Contradiction of Previous Testimony Not Allowed: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the plaintiff's contradiction between his deposition testimony and his subsequent affidavit did not create a genuine issue of material fact. The Supreme Court stated that to allow such a practice would permit any party to head off a summary judgment by supplementing previous depositions with a new affidavit. Stott v. Fox, 246 M 301, 805 P2d 1305, 47 St. Rep. 2040 (1990), followed in Kaseta v. NW. Agency of Great Falls, 252 M 135, 827 P2d 804, 49 St. Rep. 183 (1992), Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996), and Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Wobbly Fence Not Hidden or Lurking Hazard: The plaintiff argued that the defendant's wooden fence constituted a hidden hazard because it wobbled when he put his hand on the top of it and he injured himself attempting to jump over it. The Supreme Court held that it was not persuaded by the plaintiff's erroneous if not completely arcane reasoning that a wooden fence is a hidden or lurking hazard merely because it wobbles when one jumps over it. Berens v. Wilson, 246 M 269, 806 P2d 14, 47 St. Rep. 2009 (1990).

General Liability Umbrella Policies Precluding Coverage for Sexual Molestation: Defendant sexually molested his daughter over a period of 10 years. His daughter brought a civil action seeking damages for economic loss, medical treatment, and emotional distress. Defendant tendered the suit to his insurer to defend and indemnify in the event the daughter recovered damages. Policies in effect were: (1) a farm-ranch comprehensive general liability umbrella policy, limited to accidental injury; and (2) a commercial umbrella policy, limited to damages for personal injury caused by an occurrence that was neither expected nor intended from the standpoint of the insured. Based on these clear and unambiguous policy exclusions, the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the insurer because both policies were clearly intended to deny coverage for intentional misconduct, such as that resulting from intentional and ongoing sexual molestation. N. H. Ins. Group v. Strecker, 244 M 478, 798 P2d 130, 47 St. Rep. 1736 (1990). The two-pronged Strecker test was applied in Am. States Ins. Co. v. Willoughby, 254 M 218, 836 P2d 37, 49 St. Rep. 708 (1992), in which case it was held that when the insured's acts were intentional and evinced an intent to injure by their very nature, an insurance policy exclusion clause precluded coverage for intentional bodily injury.

Slip and Fall — No Breach of Duty by Landowner: The plaintiff did not dispute the facts as presented by the defendant in its summary judgment motion. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the undisputed facts indicated that as a matter of law, the defendant did not breach its reasonable duty of care in maintaining its parking lot and was not liable for the injuries suffered when the plaintiff slipped on ice in the lot. Blaskovich v. Noreast Dev. Corp., 242 M 326, 790 P2d 977, 47 St. Rep. 740 (1990), overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

No Material Fact to Support Fraud Claims:

When a lender brought suit to foreclose on a promissory note, defendant filed counterclaims, alleging fraud and economic duress. Summary judgment in favor of the lender was proper because the defendant did not make an issue of material fact for fraud. The lender's alleged withdrawal of a promise to add delinquent payments to the end of the contract does not amount to fraud. Avco Financial Serv. v. Foreman-Donovan, 237 M 260, 772 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 785 (1989).

Plaintiff brought action for fraud, both actual and constructive, as well as undue influence, arising out of a promise by his mother to compensate plaintiff, upon sale of the family corporation's assets, for a portion of value attributable to plaintiff's stock and partnership interest conveyed to corporation for cancellation of promissory note executed by plaintiff for a loan from the corporation. The respondent mother was granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that plaintiff failed to establish a fraud claim because of admissions that his mother did not intend to deceive him and that he never relied on his mother's promise to compensate. His claims were also barred by the Statute of Limitations. Fleming v. Fleming Farms, Inc., 221 M 237, 717 P2d 1103, 43 St. Rep. 776 (1986).

Ostensible Agency Not to Be Based on Agent's Statements Alone: A manufacturing company received a federal contract to produce combat helmets. Farmers State Bank supplied a letter to the Department of Defense stating that Farmers Bank and First National Bank of Missoula would provide the necessary financing. Neither bank funded the project, and the company sued under tort and contract law. The Supreme Court affirmed a summary judgment in favor of First National, ruling that Farmers Bank could not be held to be First National's agent based solely on statements made by Farmers Bank in its letter to the Department of Defense. NW. Polymeric, Inc. v. Farmers St. Bank, 236 M 175, 768 P2d 873, 46 St. Rep. 275 (1989).

Promissory Note — Foreclosure of First Trust Indenture: A second lienholder whose lien is extinguished by the foreclosure of a first lien may maintain a direct action on the note. The bank, which held a promissory note secured by a junior trust indenture, was entitled to sue directly on the note after foreclosure by the holder of the senior trust indenture. Summary judgment for the bank was proper when there was no genuine issue of any material fact and when the bank was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. First Interstate Bank of Kalispell v. Wann, 235 M 111, 765 P2d 749, 45 St. Rep. 2232 (1988).

Wrongful Discharge — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff in a wrongful discharge action alleged a public policy violation by employer in not adhering to the employee discipline procedure outlined in its personnel policy. However, plaintiff failed to show that employer had violated its alternative discipline procedure, and summary judgment for employer was proper because there was no genuine issue of material fact indicating a public policy violation by employer. Rupnow v. Polson, 234 M 66, 761 P2d 802, 45 St. Rep. 1734 (1988).

No Duty to Protect Absent Probable Cause to Arrest — No Police Negligence: A car driven by Buffalohorn entered an intersection against a red light and collided with a car occupied by Phillips and Hake, who suffered injuries. Buffalohorn was intoxicated at the time of the accident. About 2 hours prior to the accident, police detained and questioned Buffalohorn in connection with another accident, but at that time it was determined that Buffalohorn was not involved or extremely intoxicated. The Supreme Court rejected Phillips' argument that under Restatement (Second) of Torts, sec. 319 (1965), the officers had a duty to control Buffalohorn's potentially dangerous actions because imposition of a duty under sec. 319 depends on the ability to control the third person. Absent probable cause to arrest, no duty flowed from the officers to Phillips to protect Phillips from later actions of Buffalohorn, and Phillips' claim of police negligence was summarily dismissed. Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1463 (1988), followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996). Phillips was distinguished in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999), clarifying that the imposition of a duty to protect under Restatement (Second) of Torts 319 (1965) depends on whether the officer takes charge of the alleged dangerous person and that the officer's duty to protect is owed to third persons, not to the person with whom the officer has a custodial relationship.

Summary Judgment Proper on Question of Existence of Employment Relationship: A quarrel developed between a store employee and the prospective new store owner over dress policy. The employee walked out and later filed wrongful discharge allegations. The charges were summarily dismissed on the grounds that no employment relationship existed at the time of termination after it was determined that: (1) the prospective owner did not own or control the store on the day of termination; (2) the employee's wages were paid for that day by the former owner; and (3) the employee refused to give the store keys to the prospective owner, claiming they still belonged to the former owner. Janz v. Quenzer, 232 M 439, 756 P2d 1174, 45 St. Rep. 1178 (1988).

Extrinsic Evidence Unnecessary When Devise Clear: The language of a devise bequeathed property, if any, left in a partnership at the time of testator's demise. The District Court found the partnership to be a conduit through which the partners conducted their tenancy-in-common business and reported income for tax purposes; however, absent any partnership interest in real property, the court determined no property should pass and properly granted summary judgment. Because the testator's intention could be ascertained from the plain language of the devise alone, it was not necessary or proper for the court to receive extrinsic evidence in making its determination. In re Estate of Greenfield, 232 M 357, 757 P2d 1297, 45 St. Rep. 1112 (1988).

Summary Judgment Proper on Unsupported Claims of Economic Advantage, Bad Faith, Civil Conspiracy, and Punitive Damages: Plaintiff mining company by amended complaint brought claims of economic advantage, bad faith, civil conspiracy, and punitive damages. Defendant mining company filed a motion for a more definitive statement. In response, plaintiff filed a 35-page brief with 43 attached exhibits but again neglected to address defendant's request for specificity or counter defendant's legal arguments. Summary judgment was proper after a finding that plaintiff: (1) repeatedly failed to provide, with particularity, factual support for its allegations of fraud; (2) repeatedly failed to provide the District Court with a simple, concise, and direct pleading; and (3) failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact, relying instead on lengthy but unsupported allegations. Monte Vista Co. v. The Anaconda Co., 231 M 522, 755 P2d 1358, 45 St. Rep. 809 (1988).

Conclusory or Speculative Statements Concerning Mental Intricacies Insufficient to Raise Material Fact: Conclusory or speculative statements concerning the psychological intricacies of the mind in general were not sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988).

Undisputed Facts Surrounding Arrest — Question of Law: Defendant argued that the question of whether probable cause existed for his arrest was a question of fact entitling him to a jury trial and precluding summary judgment. However, where facts were undisputed, the question of whether an arrest was legal or illegal became a question of law for the court. Wright v. St., 231 M 324, 752 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 652 (1988).

Animal on Highway — Failure to Establish Duty of Highway Employee: Summary judgment was properly granted to the state in a wrongful death action where a motorist was killed after striking a horse on the highway. Plaintiffs cited no authority that a highway maintenance employee had a duty to remove live animals from the roadway or to ensure that animals did not come back onto the highway. Whitfield v. Therriault Corp., 229 M 195, 745 P2d 1126, 44 St. Rep. 1896 (1987), followed in Lindey's Inc. v. Goodover, 264 M 449, 872 P2d 764, 51 St. Rep. 317 (1994).

No Fraud in Representation of Debt: Debtor alleged that he signed a release in favor of the bank in total ignorance of his liabilities and defended his ignorance on the grounds that the bank misrepresented his debt to it. However, the record disclosed that the language of the release agreement, debtor's participation in a conference call in which reaffirmation of a loan was discussed, notice to debtor's attorney regarding the nature of indebtedness, and financial statements estimating debtor's liabilities all indicated debtor's knowledge of his debt load. There was no material question of fraudulent misrepresentation, and summary judgment was proper. Sprunk v. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula, 228 M 168, 741 P2d 766, 44 St. Rep. 1429 (1987), affirmed on separate grounds in Sprunk v. First Bank Sys., 252 M 463, 830 P2d 103, 49 St. Rep. 369 (1992), and followed in Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 975 P2d 1242, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999).

Ranch Owner Not "Keeper" of Dog — Summary Judgment Proper: A meter reader bitten by a dog while delivering a company calendar sued both the ranch foreman who owned the dog and the ranch owner, contending the ranch owner was jointly responsible as "keeper" of the dog. The District Court found that the ranch owner was not the "keeper" of the dog, as described in 3A C.J.S. Animals 205(b), since he did not own, have possession of, manage, control, or care for the animal as owners are accustomed to do. Since the ranch owner had provided materials to the foreman to build a fence and dog pen and an agreement was made to keep the dog in the pen unless accompanied by the foreman, the ranch owner clearly met the duty of reasonable and ordinary care required of Montana landowners. There being no factual question whether the ranch owner was the animal's "keeper", summary judgment was proper. Criswell v. Brewer, 228 M 143, 741 P2d 418, 44 St. Rep. 1408 (1987), distinguished in Knapton v. Monk, 2015 MT 111, 379 Mont. 1, 347 P.3d 1257.

Summary Judgment Granted Before Discovery Complete: Summary judgment was granted before plaintiff received answers to two sets of interrogatories, two requests for production, and a request for an admission. The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had sufficient information before it to determine that plaintiff had presented no factual situation that would allow him to pursue a separate claim against a parent company and that nothing in the discovery requests was aimed at bringing forth information regarding the critical question of whether plaintiff was entitled to be provided a safe workplace by the parent company rather than the subsidiary by which he was employed. Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Libel Action — Communications Made in Proper Discharge of Official Duties — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs filed a libel action against the state of Montana, its agencies, and its agents for alleged libelous statements published in various Montana newspapers. The newspaper reports were based on a letter written by a state employee and submitted into evidence in a relicensure hearing. The District Court granted defendants an order for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court held that all statements made by defendants were communications made in the proper discharge of their official duties. Plaintiffs did not sustain their burden of proof that genuine issues of material fact existed to be tried, and therefore defendants were entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Denny Driscoll Boys Home v. St., 227 M 177, 737 P2d 1150, 44 St. Rep. 991 (1987), followed in Wolf v. Williamson, 269 M 397, 889 P2d 1177, 52 St. Rep. 51 (1995).

Wrongful Death Action — No Issue of Material Fact: When a helicopter pilot died in a crash while picking up members of a survey crew on a steep hillside, the District Court did not err in granting defendant's summary judgment motion after plaintiffs failed to show the existence of any material fact that defendants' negligence proximately caused or was a substantial factor in the helicopter crash. Schellinger v. Marschall, 225 M 400, 733 P2d 346, 44 St. Rep. 349 (1987).

Summary Judgment Proper Upon Failure to Show Evidence of Due Care: When a fire, caused by a floating power line, burned plaintiff's house and property, the District Court granted partial summary judgment, ruling that Montana Power Company (MPC) negligently failed to exercise the proper duty of care in the inspection and maintenance of its utility lines. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the grant of summary judgment, ruling that when the defendant has a high standard of care and the plaintiff provides clear evidence of negligence, it becomes incumbent upon the defendant to provide evidence to show due care was exercised. If the defendant fails to provide such evidence, summary judgment is proper. Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 44 St. Rep. 330 (1987); on reconsideration, opinion withdrawn and replaced by Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 229 M 387, 747 P2d 201, 44 St. Rep. 2068 (1987).

Representation of Mentally Ill Person on Criminal Charges — Civil Procedural Rights Inapplicable — Summary Judgment Proper: A $30 million damage suit brought against court-appointed attorneys after defendant was found not guilty of intimidation and criminal mischief by reason of mental disease or defect was properly dismissed by summary judgment after the District Court found the attorneys had not violated defendant's rights under 53-21-115 through 53-21-119, since those statutes involve civil commitments and do not apply to criminal proceedings. Kerr v. Wilcox, 225 M 313, 731 P2d 1326, 44 St. Rep. 260 (1987).

No Property Damages in Changing Golf Handicap or in Letter of Reprimand — Summary Judgment Proper: Summary judgment was proper absent any showing of property damages resulting from lowering of a golfer's handicap or from the sending of a letter of reprimand by the board of directors of a private golf corporation. District Court held, and the Supreme Court affirmed, that: (1) a golfer had no right to a specific handicap but rather must earn one in accordance with standards and procedures of the U.S. Golf Association; and (2) in the absence of a clear allegation and convincing proof of fraud or bad faith, the actions of a duly delegated board of a private social club shall not be reviewed by the courts. Johnson v. Green Meadow Country Club, Inc., 222 M 405, 721 P2d 1287, 43 St. Rep. 1368 (1986).

Valid Security Agreement — Subjective Intent Immaterial: A security agreement which was valid and unambiguous, which set forth a description of the collateral, and which clearly covered future indebtedness whether joint or several was held to clearly show the obligations and rights arising from the agreement; therefore, evidence of the subjective intent of the parties was not a material fact issue, and summary judgment was properly granted. Wagner v. Glasgow Livestock Sales Co., 222 M 385, 722 P2d 1165, 43 St. Rep. 1352 (1986).

Issue of Whether Motion Properly Served — Not Appealable: The issue of whether there was a contested issue of fact regarding whether a motion for summary judgment was properly served is a question for the District Court and cannot be raised on appeal. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986), citing In re Marriage of Glass, 215 M 248, 697 P2d 96, 42 St. Rep. 328 (1985).

Summary Judgment — Unlawful Detainer: Appellant who refused to respond to requests for admissions thereby admitted he had no permission or legal right to reside on the property. Respondent followed proper statutory procedure in attempting to have appellant quit the property; therefore, District Court properly granted summary judgment to respondent concerning appellant's unlawful detainer. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986).

Business Pursuits — Steer-Roping Contest: Insured's policy on his ranch excluded business pursuits other than, among other things, farming. For 3 years he held three or four steer-roping contests a year in an arena he built. Nonprofessionals paid a fee and there was prize money, with insured keeping some of the fee money. Insured's own testimony showed he was regularly engaged in the contests for profit and thus was engaged in a business pursuit excluded from policy coverage. A summary judgment for insurer was therefore proper in insured's suit for failure to defend insured and pay an injured steer roper because there was no issue of material fact. Heggen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 220 M 398, 715 P2d 1060, 43 St. Rep. 475 (1986).

Obligation to Refund Payment for Gas Field Option: Plaintiff corporation rescinded a gas field option upon which it had paid $50,000 to defendant. After defendant failed to refund money due, plaintiff filed suit and was granted summary judgment for $71,320.55. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that, based upon the exhibits, affidavits, and briefs before the lower court, there was no evidence of a genuine issue of material fact. The escrow agreement and release based upon plaintiff's rescission were supported by adequate consideration since release from contract obligations and forbearance to sue are both adequate consideration. Ayers Oil and Gas, Inc., was a party to both the option and the release agreements as evidenced by Ayers' signature as president. Devon Oil & Gas Co., Inc. v. Ayers, 218 M 223, 707 P2d 523, 42 St. Rep. 1536 (1985).

Summary Judgment Granting Attorneys Amount Billed Under Retainer Agreement: On appeal from summary judgment granting attorneys amount billed under retainer agreement, the Supreme Court held that when an attorney entered into a contingent fee arrangement based on a percentage of the judgment or award recovered by the client, there was no genuine issue of material fact as to the amount owing. The total amount recovered properly included interest, and the attorney was entitled not only to a percentage of the actual damages recovered but also to a percentage of the prejudgment and postjudgment interest recovered. Although the court agreed to treat appellants' counterclaim as an affirmative defense, it held that the affirmative defense did not foreclose a summary judgment determination of attorney fees. Smith v. Howery, 217 M 23, 701 P2d 1381, 42 St. Rep. 995 (1985).

Contract for Deed — Forfeiture Clause — Failure to Make Timely Payment: The purchasers of real estate assumed a contract for deed containing a forfeiture clause. They failed to make one of the payments under the contract. The sellers complied with the notice provisions required to enforce the forfeiture clause. The purchasers failed to tender the overdue installment within the grace period set forth in the default clause. Under these facts there existed no genuine issue of material fact on whether a forfeiture should be granted. Summary judgment was properly entered. Massar Cattle Co. v. Reese, 216 M 22, 699 P2d 87, 42 St. Rep. 609 (1985).

Implied Warranty of Habitability — Privity of Contract Not Required: Sale of a lot to plaintiffs was contingent upon plaintiffs' agreement to allow seller to contract with Mora Bros., Inc., for the construction of their home. When the land beneath their new home began to slide downhill, plaintiffs sued for damages. District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment against seller and Mora Bros., Inc., as builder-vendors on the theory of breach of implied warranty of habitability, but denied plaintiffs' motion against Mora Bros., Inc., on the issue of negligence. Supreme Court affirmed District Court's finding that Mora Bros., Inc., is liable to plaintiffs under theory of implied warranty of habitability. The warranty does not depend on a contract for its existence, therefore privity of contract is not required. Once plaintiffs showed that house moved, defendant had to provide an explanation to create a genuine issue of fact. Defendant failed to provide an explanation, so summary judgment was proper. Degnan v. Executive Homes, Inc., 215 M 162, 696 P2d 431, 42 St. Rep. 262 (1985).

Certainty as to Terms of Contract Required — Summary Judgment: In suit for breach of alleged oral contract between law partners to find "a place" in the law firm for any of their children who might wish to become lawyers, District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Supreme Court affirmed and held that the contract was unenforceable for lack of certainty as to its terms. Defendant's daughter's work for the firm as a law clerk did not perfect the alleged agreement. Plaintiff failed to raise a genuine issue of material fact to preclude entry of summary judgment. Bishop v. Hendrickson, 215 M 158, 695 P2d 1313, 42 St. Rep. 259 (1985). See also Janz v. Quenzer, 232 M 439, 756 P2d 1174, 45 St. Rep. 1178 (1988).

Summary Judgment Proper — No Substantial Evidence Provided: Following an automobile accident in which Morales was killed when a vehicle went off the road into an irrigation ditch, his parents and personal representatives filed a wrongful death and survivorship action against Sally Tuomi, the alleged operator of the vehicle, and her father, the owner of the vehicle. Plaintiffs alleged that Sally Tuomi had negligently caused the death of Morales through her careless operation of the vehicle at the time of the accident. Defendants moved for summary judgment and filed five affidavits in support of the motion. The affidavits, including an affidavit from Sally Tuomi, supported defendants' claim that Morales, not Tuomi, had been the driver of the vehicle. Plaintiffs subsequently submitted an affidavit of their attorney and supplementary answers to interrogatories that indicated that testimony of a forensic pathologist and two deep-sea divers would support plaintiffs' assertion that Tuomi, not Morales, was the driver. Defendants then filed an affidavit from the pathologist, in which he stated that he was unable to form an opinion as to whether Morales was a driver or a passenger, and an affidavit from a diver, in which he stated that the physical evidence at the scene was not inconsistent with Morales being the driver of the vehicle. The District Court granted defendants' summary judgment motion and the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that with the final two affidavits defendants had discharged their burden under Rule 56(c), M.R.Civ.P., and that plaintiffs had failed to come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985). See also Carl v. Chilcote, 226 M 260, 735 P2d 266, 44 St. Rep. 638 (1987).

Navigability for Title Purposes — Summary Judgment — Dearborn River: The District Court properly granted the coalition for stream access and two state departments summary judgment on the issue of navigability of the Dearborn River in 1889 for title purposes. The affidavits and depositions of plaintiffs' two competent historians were admissible because the historians were qualified experts who provided evidence of the history of the river, their affidavits and depositions disclosed circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and the facts and data they relied on were of a type reasonably relied on by experts in their field; the facts and data did not themselves have to be admissible. The affidavits of defendant landowner's witnesses were worthless, were not admissible, and did not create any genuine issue of material fact concerning the navigability of the river at the time Montana became a state in 1889. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Summary Judgment — Failure to Set Forth Specific Fact Issue: Fourteen months after the case was remanded for trial and after appellants had failed to respond to the District Court's two requests for submission of a triable issue and to respondents' motion for summary judgment on the ground that there was no triable issue of material fact, the District Court found that the underlying issue was moot and ordered summary judgment in favor of respondents. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court, noting that the appellants had failed to set forth specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial, as is required by this rule. Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 204 M 75, 666 P2d 1214, 40 St. Rep. 673 (1983).

Contractor Liability — Speculation Insufficient to Raise Issue of Material Fact: Plaintiff was injured when the car in which he was sleeping crashed into a concrete retaining wall at the end of a dead-end street in Helena. The alleged liability of the defendant was based on the assertion that in working on an SID, defendant's crew had removed a dead-end street sign. Defendant was granted summary judgment based on the holding of Ulmen v. Schweiger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932). On appeal, plaintiff contended that Ulmen no longer represented the modern view of contractor liability. The Supreme Court did not reach this issue, finding that the record indicated no genuine issue of material fact existed upon which defendant's liability could be predicated. No testimony directly connecting defendant with removal of the sign was given except for speculation. Speculation is not a sufficient basis on which to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Fauerso v. Maronick Constr. Co., 203 M 106, 661 P2d 20, 40 St. Rep. 327 (1983), followed in Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995), and distinguished in Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 273 M 408, 903 P2d 1374, 52 St. Rep. 1035 (1995).

Opposing Party — Speculative Statements Insufficient: A party opposing a summary judgment motion must present facts of a substantial nature, and speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

Lack of Actual Malice Toward Public Figure — Summary Judgment Upheld: Where the defendant issued a press release claiming that the plaintiff had been "indicted" for violations of federal securities laws when in fact he had only been "charged" with such violations and the District Court held the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law, the District Court was correct in awarding summary judgment for the defendant, holding that there was no actual malice by the defendant. The difference between the legal words "indicted" and "charged" is relatively minor in the minds of the average Montana citizen, and the defendant stated that he did not know the difference. There was simply no evidence that the defendant's statement was made with actual malice. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

What Constitutes "Public Figure" for Purpose of Libel Defense — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The plaintiff, a commodities broker who had some public notoriety within the state as a result of his membership in and speeches to political organizations and as a result of articles about him appearing in national publications, brought a libel action against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant, holding the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law (and therefore requiring actual malice to be proven by the plaintiff), as there was no absolute prohibition in the Montana Constitution against granting summary judgment in a libel case and because the plaintiff had a general fame or notoriety in the state and exhibited pervasive involvement in the affairs of society. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Waiver of Provision in Collective Bargaining Agreement Not Affirmatively Pleaded: A declaratory judgment action was brought to construe a collective bargaining agreement. The plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment. The defendant opposed the motion and filed an affidavit in support of its opposition. The plaintiff argued that the affidavit submitted by defendant was inadmissible as a violation of the parol evidence rule. The trial court concluded that no material factual issue existed but denied the motion because of waiver by the plaintiff. The waiver issue was addressed in the affidavit but not in any of the other pleadings. The Supreme Court held that the waiver issue was not properly before the trial court and ordered the trial court to reconsider its denial of the motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court also said that the defendant could amend its answer to affirmatively plead waiver. Butte Teachers' Union v. Bd. of Trustees, 201 M 482, 655 P2d 146, 39 St. Rep. 2248 (1982).

Retention of Passport Execution Fees by Clerk of District Court: Because the execution of passport applications is not an official duty imposed upon a Clerk of District Court by state statute and since the Legislature has not enacted a specific statute with regard to the disposition of execution fees, the Clerk has no duty to remit the fees to the county general fund. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the summary judgment granted by the District Court. Platz v. Hamilton, 201 M 184, 653 P2d 144, 39 St. Rep. 2041 (1982).

Conclusory Statements Not Sufficient in Opposition: In opposing a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff merely made conclusory statements in support of its positions that factual issues were still unresolved. The court held that the appellant's conclusions of law would clearly not be admissible into evidence at trial and were not properly before the court. The plaintiff's opposition to the motion was not sufficient to defeat the motion. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982).

Summary Judgment Proper — Improperly Endorsed Check Admittedly Negotiated by Bank: Plaintiff drew a check on her account at defendant bank payable to a building supply store to be used for supplies specifically listed on the face of the check and gave it to a contractor who was working for her. Contractor, unknown to plaintiff, endorsed the check "for exchange only" to the supply store. Based on this endorsement, defendant bank issued a new check payable to the supply store but without restriction on its face. Contractor applied the check to his own account with the supply store, rather than using it to buy materials for plaintiff. Several weeks later, the same thing was done with a check made payable to another building supply store. Plaintiff sued defendant bank for conversion. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's denial of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment because the undisputed evidence showed that the defendant bank accepted and negotiated two checks that were not endorsed by the payees or by anyone clothed with apparent or actual authority to act for them. Eatinger v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 199 M 377, 649 P2d 1253, 39 St. Rep. 1465 (1982).

Requests for Admissions Deemed True for Failure to Answer — Basis for Summary Judgment: Summary judgment was properly granted plaintiff suing for delinquent payments under lease of bar and lounge equipment where all issues of material fact were resolved when a request for admissions relating to those facts was sent defendants by plaintiff and was not answered for 15 months and the trial court deemed the facts in the request for admissions as true for failure to answer the request within the required 30-day period after service of the request and where defendants did not give any evidence to raise an issue of material fact. All-States Leasing Co. v. Top Hat Lounge, 198 M 1, 649 P2d 1250, 39 St. Rep. 425 (1982).

Fire Damage — No Negligence as a Matter of Law: A slag pile started burning prior to 1950. For several years red embers were visible, but in later years the embers disappeared. In 1961, when a highway was built through a portion of the pile, the fire was apparently dead. In 1979, during a windstorm, a fire started near the slag pile and spread onto the plaintiff's land. Plaintiff sued defendant for the negligent use of its land. Based on the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, the court concluded that the defendant's conduct in leaving the slag pile untouched until 1979 was reasonable, prudent, and did not create an unreasonable hazard. The court properly granted summary judgment to the defendant. Belue v. St., 199 M 451, 649 P2d 752, 39 St. Rep. 1516 (1982).

Intention of Deceased Maker of Life Insurance Policy — No Genuine Issue of Fact of Intent: The plaintiffs brought an action against their stepmother to recover the proceeds of their deceased father's life insurance policy which had been paid to the defendant in accordance with the terms of the policy but contrary to a divorce decree. The District Court relied upon attorney Sternhagen's file in the prior divorce proceeding to determine the intent of the deceased with respect to his children. The District Court properly granted summary judgment for the plaintiff children as there was no genuine issue of fact as to the deceased's intention to maintain the children as beneficiaries of the policy until their majority. The divorce file is replete with evidence that the attorneys in the divorce proceeding and the court simply incorporated the deceased's agreement with his former wife into the terms of the divorce decree. Herrig v. Herrig, 199 M 174, 648 P2d 758, 39 St. Rep. 1274 (1982).

Canceled Airline Flight — Summary Judgment Properly Issued: Where defendant airline canceled flight, causing plaintiff to arrive 8 hours late at his destination and allegedly causing loss of earnings, summary judgment in defendant's favor was properly granted as a matter of law where weather prevented landing at destination point and Civil Aeronautics Board regulations clearly permit flight cancellation under such conditions. Johnson v. NW. Orient Airlines, 197 M 318, 642 P2d 1067, 39 St. Rep. 594 (1982).

Consent to Withdraw Funds From Joint Account: A stock brokerage firm obtained consent from the husband to withdraw funds from a joint ready asset account established by the husband and his wife. Because the firm could not be held liable by the wife for failing to obtain her consent to withdraw the funds, summary judgment was properly granted. Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 M 1, 640 P2d 453, 39 St. Rep. 305 (1982).

Specific Performance of Contract for Deed — Summary Judgment Held Proper: Plaintiffs, purchasers under contract for deed, tendered the balance due under the contract. Sellers were unable to provide clear and merchantable title. The Supreme Court held plaintiffs entitled to summary judgment granting specific performance against assignee of original buyer. Pond v. Lindell, 194 M 240, 632 P2d 1107, 38 St. Rep. 1276 (1981).

Real Estate Sale Including Subordination Agreement — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact Found: Where the plaintiff sold her house and adjoining lot to the developers of a housing project, agreeing under the terms of the sale to subordinate her interest in the lot to the interest of the bank financing the construction of the project, the District Court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment to force the developers to make the final contract payment to the plaintiff. Summary judgment is to be granted where there is no genuine issue of material fact. The fact that certain questions remained as to payment of advanced construction costs would not bar the issuance of summary judgment, for sufficient money appears from affidavits to be available to pay the plaintiff and other construction creditors. Byrd v. Bennet, 193 M 237, 631 P2d 695, 38 St. Rep. 1083 (1981).

State Easement for Fishing Access — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: A landowner brought an action to prevent the state from opening a fishing access site and from paving a road to the site, based on a claimed fee title to the roadway. The District Court granted the state a summary judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court found the landowner's interest was an ordinary easement. The words "private road" did not clearly indicate intent to create in him an "exclusive" easement. The state's use of the road cannot be declared inconsistent with the landowner's on the basis of speculation. Furthermore, under various statutory provisions, the state obtained the land lawfully. The plaintiff had not yet been deprived of his property interest. Any damages remained speculative at the time of the decision. The summary judgment was, accordingly, affirmed. Titeca v. St., 194 M 209, 634 P2d 1156, 38 St. Rep. 1533 (1981).

Illegal Receipt of Fee by Official — Factual Issue Not Material: In a case in which a Sheriff was charged with receiving a fee in violation of law, the State urged on appeal that a summary judgment was precluded by the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. The Supreme Court agreed there were factual issues involved in the case, but because the reward money received by the Sheriff was not a fee under the statute with which the Sheriff was charged, the factual issues were not material to the case since their resolution could not affect the result of the case. The Sheriff was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. St. v. DeMers, 192 M 367, 628 P2d 676, 38 St. Rep. 877 (1981).

Summary Judgment Granted on Basis of a Signed Release: The District Court acted properly in granting defendant's motion for summary judgment based on defendant's contention that a release entered into between plaintiff and defendant bank bars any action by plaintiff in attempting to recover trust fund money from defendant. Krusemark v. Hansen, 186 M 174, 627 P2d 1202, 38 St. Rep. 594 (1981).

Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien) — Sufficient Property Description in Affidavits — Summary Judgments: In this case on a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), the issue on appeal was whether the description of the subject property in the notice of the lien filed with the County Clerk and Recorder was legally sufficient to identify the property for purposes of enforcing the lien. The appeal was taken on cross-motions for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found error in granting summary judgment to the property owners and held that the supplier seeking the lien was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Noting that the procedural requirements of 71-3-511 (since repealed) have been held strictly enforceable, the court held that the statutes are to be construed liberally so as to give effect to their remedial character once the procedure has been fulfilled. Although the land on which the structure stood was covered by the lien on the structure, the land did not need to be described. When, as here, the land was described, the erroneous part of the description was to be rejected. If a sufficient description remained to identify the particular property sought to be charged, the lien would be upheld. Other documents filed with the notice of lien could be used to identify the building. In this case, those documents and photographs of the property in question sufficed to form a proper basis for summary judgment against the property owners. Gen. Elec. Supply v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981), followed in Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999).

Summary Judgment for Prescriptive Public Easement — Estoppel From Denying County Ownership: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnity against the previous owner, the trial court did not err in denying the county's motion for summary judgment and granting the motions of the plaintiffs and sellers for summary judgment. On a motion for summary judgment the movant has the burden of establishing prima facie the absence of any genuine issue of material fact, and when the movant does so, the party opposing the motion must come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. The sellers presented evidence in support of their motion showing a prescriptive public easement and estoppel against the county and former owner. The county failed to present evidence to meet its burden. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

No Error Where Claim of When Action Accrued Not Before Court: In an action for compensatory and exemplary damages for wrongful conversion of plaintiff's merchandise stored in defendant's warehouse, the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the basis that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff's claims for recovery accrued 4 years previously, when the defendant warehouse sold plaintiff's merchandise, not, as plaintiff claimed, when plaintiff discovered upon demand that defendant sold the merchandise. In this instance the allegation of knowledge, demand, and then refusal to return the goods was not raised in the complaint, the answer, the interrogatories, or in any affidavit properly before the District Court at the time summary judgment was granted, and thus plaintiff's allegations as to when the action accrued will not be considered on appeal. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc. v. Hardee Foods, 190 M 508, 621 P2d 1097, 38 St. Rep. 60 (1981).

Motion Granted — Preclusion of Child Custody Challenge by Estoppel and Laches: The mother of the child over whom a custody dispute arose was precluded from having set aside the child custody provision in the default marriage dissolution decree awarding custody to the respondent. The mother was barred by estoppel, laches, and res judicata from asserting that the respondent was not the child's natural parent. Morrell v. Giesick, 188 M 89, 610 P2d 1189 (1980).

Construction of Instruments — Not a Factual Issue: When a summary judgment was granted plaintiff in an action for conversion based upon corporate documents, bank loan contracts, and security agreements, defendants could not prevail an appeal on the theory that questions regarding the content of these documents were questions of material fact because under 1-4-101 the construction of instruments is a matter of law. Therefore, the granting of the summary judgment under this rule was correct. Farmers St. Bank v. Johnson, 188 M 55, 610 P2d 1172 (1980).

Employment Contract Controls — No Genuine Issue of Material Fact: There was no need for further interpretation or parol evidence of an employment contract which expressly exempted appellant from recovering overtime compensation. There was no need for construction of any implied contract since there can be no express and implied contract for the same thing existing at the same time. Thus, summary judgment was appropriate. Weston v. Mont. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150 (1980).

Interpretation of Contract — Motion Properly Granted: Where appellant and respondent entered into an agreement in which the contract provided that in consideration for making the downpayment on certain property, respondent would receive a 50% interest in the property, the court properly granted respondent's motion for summary judgment since the language of the contract itself shows that there was no genuine issue of fact and because appellant failed to come forward with substantial evidence showing the existence of such a genuine issue. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 604 P2d 307 (1979).

Plumbing Regulation — No Genuine Issue: Plaintiff's claim that since the Board of Plumbers allegedly could not have inspected every plumbing installation during a set period of time, there remained a genuine issue of material fact that precluded entry of judgment on the pleadings. The claim was unfounded since inspections were not mandatory and were intended to be selective. Billings Associated Plumbing, Heating, & Cooling Contractors v. Bd. of Plumbers, 184 M 249, 602 P2d 597 (1979).

Insufficient Showing of Fact Issue — Existence of Joint Venture: Plaintiff's allegation that the defendant was liable for money owed to plaintiff by a corporation because the defendant and the corporation were engaged in a joint venture, was not sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff's allegations were supported only by the fact that the defendant and the corporation had been issued a joint venture license from the State of California and that the plaintiff would rely on the testimony of certain contractors. The mere issuance of such a license is insufficient to indicate that it was actually used or that a joint venture existed, and the statement that certain contractors would testify is an unsupported conclusion. Nat'l Gypsum Co. v. Johnson, 182 M 209, 595 P2d 1188 (1979).

Prior Knowledge of Condition: Plaintiff rented a residence from the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The BIA replaced the front steps of the residence with steps that were not as long horizontally. Plaintiff caught her foot in the depression remaining from the old steps and fractured her ankle. Her knowledge of the condition prior to the injury precludes her recovery, and summary judgment must be rendered in favor of the defendant. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Issue of Fact — Real Estate Transaction: In view of the record indicating that a real estate transaction did not close until between July 28 and July 30, appellant's simple assertion that the transaction closed on July 20 will not serve to create an issue of fact merely to avoid summary judgment. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Issue of a Substantial Nature: The trial court properly granted plaintiff's motion for summary judgment since defendants failed to present a genuine issue of material fact and of a substantial nature, not fanciful, frivolous, gauzy, or merely suspicious. Cheyenne W. Bank v. Young v. Zastrow, 179 M 492, 587 P2d 401 (1978). See also Kimble Properties, Inc. v. St., 231 M 54, 750 P2d 1095, 45 St. Rep. 425 (1988).

Injury by Coemployee Covered by Workers' Compensation: In an action for damages for personal injuries in which defendants were coemployees of plaintiff and plaintiff's injury arose out of an industrial accident for which he received workers' compensation, the defendants carried the burden of showing a complete absence of any genuine issue as to material facts. Forrester v. Kuck, 177 M 44, 579 P2d 756 (1978).

Modification of Listing Agreement and Failure to Provide Copy: A seller's alleged verbal consent to a broker's unsubscribed and unexecuted modification of a listing agreement was not a factual issue precluding summary judgment in light of the statutory and decisional law which is uniformly suspicious of such modifications. As a matter of law, the broker's failure to provide the seller with a copy of the listing agreement also supported the granting of summary judgment. Carnell v. Watson, 176 M 344, 578 P2d 308 (1978).

Withdrawal From Hospital District: Because uncontradicted testimony before the Board of County Commissioners showed a petitioning area would not be benefited by remaining in the county's hospital district, the District Court properly ruled the Board had abused its discretion in denying the withdrawal petition and summary judgment was proper. Sorenson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 176 M 232, 577 P2d 394 (1978).

Claim Against Estate — Statutory Period: In action to recover from an estate for services performed for decedent, the court did not err in denying plaintiffs' motion to amend and supplement a complaint based on contract to include gift theory because the services were performed without expectation of payment and the claim sued upon (gift theory) was not filed within the statutory period. Summary judgment was proper. Zeigler v. Kramer, 175 M 236, 573 P2d 644 (1978).

Lack of Consideration or Setoff: There was no issue of material fact precluding summary judgment, either of lack of consideration or of setoff, because the express language of the note sued on stated that consideration existed, and the second action was a personal claim unrelated to the note. Keller v. Llewellyn, 175 M 164, 573 P2d 166 (1977).

Easement by Prescription — Not Triable Issue: The evidence established existence of an easement by prescription and defendant failed to meet his burden of showing that a triable issue of fact remained. Yecny v. Day, 174 M 442, 571 P2d 386 (1977).

Laches and Statute of Limitations Adequately Plead: Plaintiffs' suit for rescission was barred by laches and their action for damages for breach of contract was barred by the 4-year Statute of Limitations. Since defendant's affirmative defenses revealed that plaintiffs had adequate notice of the defenses of laches and Statute of Limitations, although not specifically denominated as such, summary judgment was properly granted to defendants. Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 M 63, 568 P2d 547 (1977).

Group Libel Rule: The court did not err in granting defendants' motions for summary judgment in a libel action because the allegedly defamatory statements could not reasonably be interpreted as applying specifically to plaintiffs. The common-law group libel rule precluded their recovering in a defamation action. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Specific Performance of Lease Option — Laches: As a result of plaintiff's negligence in asserting his rights and the change in defendant's circumstances, the ends of justice were served by granting defendant's motion for summary judgment. Seifert v. Seifert, 173 M 501, 568 P2d 155 (1977).

Misrepresentation Action in Real Estate Sale: The court properly awarded summary judgment to defendants in a misrepresentation action under 37-51-321 when the record indicated that no fraudulent representations were made by defendants and the Statute of Limitations had expired, notwithstanding the "discovery" exception. Anderson v. Applebury, 173 M 411, 567 P2d 951 (1977).

Products Liability Action: Summary judgment was properly granted defendants in a products liability action when plaintiff failed to demonstrate that the alleged defect existed when the product left the hands of the manufacturer. Duncan v. Rockwell Mfg. Co., 173 M 382, 567 P2d 936 (1977).

Statute of Limitations Bars Tort Claims: A review of the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions show there was no genuine issue of material fact and defendants were entitled to summary judgment on claims sounding in tort because the Statute of Limitations was a bar. Kearns v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 173 M 239, 567 P2d 433 (1977).

Laches: Summary judgment was proper when laches was established as a defense to the enforcement of a trust. Johnson v. Johnson, 172 M 150, 561 P2d 917 (1977).

Intent Irrelevant if Agreement Clear and Specific — Subordination: Summary judgment is correct when subordination agreement does not present an issue of fact. The plain and clear meaning of the instrument controls and the intent of the parties is ascertained from the instrument. Batey Land & Livestock Co. v. Nixon, 172 M 94, 560 P2d 1334 (1977).

Summary Judgment for Defendant in Malpractice Action: Summary judgment for dental malpractice was affirmed. Llera v. Wisner, 171 M 254, 557 P2d 805 (1976).

Products Liability — Burden of Proof: Summary judgment for defendant was proper when plaintiff failed to prove that product was defective at the time it left manufacturer's hands. Barich v. Ottenstror, 170 M 38, 550 P2d 395 (1976).

Burden — Motion for Summary Judgment: Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment because plaintiff presented no evidence of a material and substantial nature raising a genuine issue of fact. Taylor v. Anaconda Fed. Credit Union, 170 M 51, 550 P2d 151 (1976), followed in Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Presence of Gates — Presumption of Permissive Use: Summary judgment for defendant was proper because plaintiff failed to establish an easement by prescription to a road crossed at several points by fences with closed gates owned and controlled by defendant. The presence of gates that must be opened by the user was strong evidence of permissive rather than adverse use since it tended to establish "total dominion" over the roadway by defendant. Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976).

Purpose of Rule: The general purpose of this rule is to dispose promptly of actions in which there is no genuine issue of fact, thereby eliminating unnecessary trial, delay, and expense. Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), followed in Westmont Tractor Co. v. Continental I, Inc., 224 M 516, 731 P2d 327, 43 St. Rep. 2380 (1986).

Medical Malpractice Case — Standard of Care: The defendants, hospital and doctors, are entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law because plaintiff failed to carry burden of initial evidentiary obligation of establishing standard of care against which the acts or omissions of defendants can be measured to establish negligence on their part. Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976), followed in Estate of Nielson v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994), and Seal v. Woodrows Pharmacy, 1999 MT 247, 296 M 197, 988 P2d 1230, 56 St. Rep. 959 (1999). See also Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 M 452, 15 P3d 1189, 57 St. Rep. 1320 (2000).

Finding of Permissive Use — Summary Judgment Properly Granted in Easement by Prescription Action: Where plaintiff's use of trail was a matter of neighborly cooperation between friendly ranchers, trial court's granting of defendant's motion for summary judgment was proper as the accrual of a right-of-way easement by prescription requires that the usage made of the claimed right-of-way be adverse and hostile, not permissive. Ewan v. Stenberg, 168 M 63, 541 P2d 60 (1975).

Conduct Amounting to Contributory Negligence as a Matter of Law: Trial court erred in not granting defendant's motion for summary judgment where plaintiff testified he was looking straight ahead, rather than where he was walking, when he slipped and fractured an ankle and twisted his back on oil spot approximately 6 feet long. State ex rel. NW. Airlines v. District Court, 167 M 464, 539 P2d 714 (1975).

Negligent Wounding of Bystander: It was proper for trial court to grant summary judgment to defendant where plaintiff, a bystander, was wounded while observing a disturbance and claimed defendant, a police officer, negligently and carelessly shot him, as the ballistics report established that the plaintiff was wounded by a bullet fired from a Colt revolver and defendant was carrying a .357 Smith & Wesson pistol. Plaintiff failed to present any evidence of a material and substantial nature raising a genuine issue of fact that defendant wounded him. Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975).

Summary Judgment — Depositions — Exhibits: The depositions of witnesses as well as exhibits introduced for the purposes of deposition were a sufficient basis for the court to conclude that there was no genuine issue of material fact regarding the lack of control of the city over an intersection. The court should have granted the city's motion for summary judgment. State ex rel. Helena v. District Court, 167 M 157, 536 P2d 1182 (1975).

No Violation of Safety Code — No Issue of Negligence: Defendant, whose electrical powerlines were installed in compliance with the minimum safety requirements of the national safety code, was entitled to summary judgment in negligence action brought by plaintiff who, although aware of overhead powerlines, was severely shocked when he hoisted a long metal pole into contact with the lines while drilling a well. Sprankle v. DeCock, 165 M 274, 530 P2d 457 (1974).

Oral Contract for Broker's Commission: Where it was agreed that there was no written agreement to pay the broker's commission, but only an oral promise by the administrator of estate to petition court for allowance of commission, summary judgment was proper; nor did the plaintiff's presentation of various legal theories on which relief might be granted raise any genuine issue of fact. Meech v. Cure, 165 M 49, 525 P2d 546 (1974).

Action to Rescind Contract: No genuine issue of fact was raised in action for rescission of contract to purchase motel, where seller had represented that motel was "capable" of producing a certain income; and although seller had failed to deliver bill of sale for motel furnishings, there was no resulting damage upon which rescission could be based. Beierle v. Taylor, 164 M 436, 524 P2d 783 (1974), followed in Norwood v. Serv. Distrib., Inc., 2000 MT 4, 297 M 473, 994 P2d 25, 57 St. Rep. 8 (2000).

Statute of Frauds — Listing Agreement: Potential buyer was properly granted summary judgment for return of earnest money when defendant realtor could produce no written documents to support his claims relative to listing property for sale and acting as real estate agent for property owners. Pack River Co. v. Young, 162 M 271, 511 P2d 12 (1973).

Contract Prohibiting Competing Businesses: Summary judgment for defendant was proper where contract clearly prohibited competing activities only on specific premises, and plaintiff admitted in his answers to interrogatories that the activities he sought to prevent were outside the premises. Matteucci's Super Save Drug v. Hustad Corp., 158 M 311, 491 P2d 705 (1971).

Summary Judgment Upheld — Bank Charter — Use of Affidavits: Summary judgment was proper for proponents of new bank charter and superintendent of banks against bank seeking to prevent proponents from receiving charter. Motion to strike affidavit of superintendent contained in appellate record was granted because it was not before lower court and this rule specifically prohibits the use of affidavits. Miners & Merchants Bank v. Dowdall, 158 M 142, 489 P2d 1274 (1971).

Negligence — Causation — Summary Judgment Proper: In an action for injuries allegedly caused by negligence of contractor and his agents, trial court properly granted summary judgment pursuant to this section where record revealed total absence of negligence on part of defendant or its employees, and record revealed that nothing defendant did or failed to do was proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Flansberg v. Mont. Power Co., 154 M 53, 460 P2d 263 (1969).

Summary Judgment for Defendants — Mechanics' Liens (Now Construction Liens): Because lien was not filed within 90 days after last item in open account was delivered, summary judgment for defendant was proper. Am. Homes v. Broadmoor Corp., 153 M 184, 455 P2d 334 (1969).

Insurance Agreements: When an insurer is obligated to defend, refuses to do so after notice, makes no protest to a settlement agreement, and fails to show that the settlement was unreasonable, the insured is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Wash. Water Power Co. v. Morgan Elec. Co., 152 M 126, 448 P2d 683 (1968).

Summary Judgment for Defendant — Failure to Pay Corporate License Taxes — Effect on Contract's Enforcement: Summary judgment for defendant was proper when assignee of accounts receivable and assignor/corporation which failed to pay corporate license taxes were barred from claiming rights under contractual provisions which were unenforceable due to failure to pay taxes notwithstanding subsequent payment. Mfr. Acceptance Corp. v. Krsul, 151 M 28, 438 P2d 667 (1968).

Negligence — Principal and Agent: Purported agent and principal were entitled to summary judgment where plaintiff wholly failed to establish prima facie case of negligence on the part of either, even though evidence raised question of fact as to existence of agency, since it would be impossible to impute negligence to principal where negligence had not been established against supposed agent. Knowlton v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968).

Appellate Review — Proof of Issue of Fact Required at Trial: Motion for summary judgment was properly granted where it was apparent from record that there was no genuine issue as to any material fact, notwithstanding aggrieved party's argument on appeal that had he been allowed to go to trial he would have presented proofs establishing genuine issue of fact, since aggrieved party presented no such proofs at hearing on original motion nor at hearing on motion to vacate judgment. Brown v. Thornton, 150 M 150, 432 P2d 386 (1967).

Support Proceedings: Defendant was properly granted motion for summary judgment in action to enforce amount agreed upon for support in separation agreement which had been reduced by subsequent court modifications. Gessell v. Jones, 149 M 418, 427 P2d 295 (1967).

Summary Judgment Upheld for Taxpayer: Summary judgment for taxpayer based upon statutory assessment scheme for motor vehicle taxation was upheld. Swartz v. Berg, 147 M 178, 411 P2d 736 (1966).

Summary Judgment for Plaintiff Upheld — Unlawful Trespass: Defendants committed a naked and unlawful trespass on property belonging to plaintiffs, and summary judgment for plaintiff was correct. Schell v. Peters, 147 M 21, 410 P2d 152 (1966).

Purpose — Proof — Deed's Validity Upheld: The purpose of this rule is to promptly dispose of actions in which there is no genuine issue of fact. The court has no duty to anticipate possible proof that might be offered under the pleadings. Judgment against party seeking cancellation of deed and reconveyance of property was upheld. Silloway v. Jorgenson, 146 M 307, 406 P2d 167 (1965).

Summary Judgment Reversed — Taxation: Summary judgment for county and others was reversed, and summary judgment for taxpayer was ordered. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R., v. Bennett, 145 M 191, 399 P2d 986 (1965).

BURDEN OF PROOF

Expert Needed to Establish Standard of Care in Road Closure Case — Summary Judgment Proper in Absence of Expert — District Court Affirmed: The plaintiff's husband was killed when, as he was waiting for road crews to clear fallen debris from high winds, a tree fell on his parked car. The road was closed shortly after the incident. The plaintiff sued the Department of Transportation (Department) for negligence, claiming that it should have closed the road earlier pursuant to its own policies and procedures. After the deadline for expert disclosure had passed and the plaintiff had not named an expert on the standard of care, the Department filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that the understanding of the multiple interrelated factors a Department employee must consider in determining whether to close a road is outside the experience of the common juror. The plaintiff argued that an expert on the standard of care was not necessary because the Department's own policies and procedures were evidence of the standard of care. The District Court agreed with the Department and granted it summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, citing Dayberry v. City of East Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 Mont. 301, 80 P.3d 1218, and the proposition that a lay jury of ordinary training and intelligence would not understand the complexities of what must be considered in determining whether to close a road. Dubiel v. Dept. of Transportation, 2012 MT 35, 364 Mont. 175, 272 P.3d 66.

Horse Biting Person Considered Unusual, Not Abnormal Behavior — Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Affirmed: Peterson was bitten by Eichhorn's horse, which was pastured on property adjoining Peterson's. Peterson sued Eichhorn on grounds that Eichhorn kept a domestic animal with an abnormally dangerous tendency to bite people and was strictly liable for Peterson's injuries. The District Court granted summary judgment for Eichhorn, and Peterson appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Peterson relied on Restatement (Second) of Torts 509 (1977) for the proposition that the possessor of a domestic animal with dangerous propensities abnormal to its class is liable for harm done by the animal to another, even though the owner has exercised the utmost care to prevent it from doing harm. The court declined to apply the Restatement in this case because the record was void of any evidence that: (1) the horse's tendency to bite, if there was one, amounted to a dangerous propensity; (2) if the horse had a dangerous propensity for biting, that propensity was abnormal to its class; and (3) Eichhorn knew that the horse had a dangerous propensity abnormal to its class. Peterson admitted that, based on personal experience, horses are unpredictable and are capable of biting, but contended that it is unusual for a mare to bite. However, unusual does not equate with abnormal, and Peterson presented no substantial evidence that the horse's behavior was anything other than the behavior of a typical horse as described by Peterson. Summary judgment for Eichhorn was not erroneous. Peterson v. Eichhorn, 2008 MT 250, 344 M 540, 189 P3d 615 (2008).

Federal Regulations Applicable to Wire Transfer — Summary Judgment on Wire Transfer Negligence Claim Proper: Hughes was the victim of a "Nigerian scam". Hughes was promised millions of dollars if he transferred money to a bank in Amman, Jordan. Hughes requested the plaintiff bank to wire $800,000 to the Jordan bank. Upon discovering that checks sent to Hughes to cover the transfer were bogus, Hughes sought to cancel the transfer, but the transfer had been completed, and the money subsequently disappeared. Hughes filed a negligence claim against plaintiff regarding the wire transfer, but the District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The parties agreed that the federal Electronic Fund Transfer Act did not apply, but Hughes failed to offer authority that Article 4A of the Uniform Commercial Code did not apply. The District Court correctly held that nothing in federal regulations or in Article 4A requires a bank to agree to a cancellation, so there was no liability that could be alleged, and summary judgment for plaintiff on the negligence claim regarding the wire transfer was proper. Valley Bank of Ronan v. Hughes, 2006 MT 285, 334 M 335, 147 P3d 185 (2006).

Preclusion of Evidence of Duty of Care to Supervise Ranch Help — Summary Judgment Proper: Elizabeth sued her husband, Robert, for damages that she received while helping perform chores on Robert's ranch, including being accidentally injected with sheep serum by Robert's father. However, Elizabeth failed to produce any evidence that Robert had any duty to supervise his father, so the trial court granted Robert's motion in limine, precluding any evidence or testimony regarding the accidental injection, including evidence by Elizabeth's expert regarding the cause of her injuries, and ultimately granted summary judgment to Robert. Elizabeth appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In order to recover for personal injuries, Elizabeth was required to establish a legal duty, a breach of that duty, and damages proximately caused by the breach. Elizabeth did not establish a legal duty, so partial summary judgment for Robert was proper. Absent a legal duty, the evidence regarding the accidental injection and the expert's opinion concerning Elizabeth's injury was irrelevant and properly excluded. Without expert testimony, Elizabeth was unable to present evidence regarding causation and could not prevail on the negligence claim, so summary judgment for Robert was proper. Nelson v. Nelson, 2005 MT 263, 329 M 85, 122 P3d 1196 (2005).

No Showing That Defendants' Actions in School Bus Incident More Than Likely Caused Student's Physical and Mental Injuries — Factors in Judicial Determination of Duty of Care — Summary Dismissal of School District Liability Proper: A student returning home on a school bus from a performance with the school pep band asked the director to stop the bus so that the student could use the restroom, but the director refused. The student was subsequently disciplined by the school for various actions related to the incident and soon after became seriously ill. The student and his parents filed an action against the school district, the director, and the bus driver, alleging that various breaches of the duty of care triggered or accelerated the student's development of diabetes and caused his posttraumatic stress disorder. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The existence of a duty of care depends on the foreseeability of the risk and on a weighing of the policy considerations for and against the imposition of liability, including: (1) moral blame attributable to defendant's conduct; (2) prevention of future harm; (3) extent of the burden placed on defendant; (4) consequences to the public of imposing a duty; and (5) availability of insurance for the risk involved. Further, the law of torts holds a defendant liable only for injuries to others that were to the defendant at the time reasonably foreseeable. A defendant owes a duty with respect to risks and hazards whose likelihood made the conduct unreasonably dangerous and hence negligent in the first instance. The specific injury need not be foreseeable, rather the question is whether defendant could have foreseen that the conduct would result in injury to plaintiff. The District Court here concluded that defendants owed no duty of care because the student's injuries were not foreseeable, which was an erroneous focus on the particular injury rather than on the foreseeability that defendants' conduct could result in the injury. However, if a plaintiff fails to offer proof of any one of the elements of negligence—duty, breach, causation, and damages—then summary judgment in favor of defendant is proper. The question remained whether plaintiffs' experts adequately established causation, and the Supreme Court held that they did not. The experts testified that defendants' conduct could have caused or accelerated the student's injuries, but under Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 M 452, 15 P3d 1189 (2000), the testimony did not meet the threshold of establishing that defendants' actions more than likely caused the injuries. Absent a causal connection between defendants' actions and the student's injuries, summary judgment for defendants was proper. Hinkle v. Shepherd School District No. 37, 2004 MT 175, 322 M 80, 93 P3d 1239 (2004), distinguishing Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867 (1996).

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Adequacy of Swimming Pool Depth for Diving — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff was injured diving into a municipal swimming pool and sued the city for negligence and strict liability. Administrative rules adopted in 1985 set standards articulating board lengths for various pool depths, but the rules apply only to pools constructed or remodeled after June 28, 1985, and the pool in question was constructed in 1972, so the rules did not apply. Further, 50-53-107 does not define a particular standard of conduct to which public pool operators must conform, but rather imposes a general duty on a city to keep a pool safe. Absent an applicable standard, plaintiff was required to present expert testimony to assist jurors in determining whether the pool depth was unreasonably dangerous for the diving board length. Plaintiff offered no expert testimony on the subject, thus failing to establish a prima facie case of liability, so the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the city. Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 M 301, 80 P3d 1218 (2003), followed in Dubiel v. Dept. of Transportation, 2012 MT 35, 364 Mont. 175, 272 P.3d 66.

No Common-Law Duty of County to Notify Tenant of Release of Detainee: Leanne Miller obtained a protective order prohibiting her husband, Tommy, from contacting Leanne, her property, or her children. When Tommy was arrested following multiple violations of the restraining order, Leanne requested that the Gallatin County detention center notify her upon Tommy's release. However, the center did not contact Leanne when Tommy was released. Tommy then went to Leanne's rental home, killed her, and set fire to the home. The landlord filed a negligence action against the county for damages to the property resulting from the county's failure to notify Leanne, asserting that the county had a common-law duty to the landlord. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, and the landlord appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The complaint was couched in terms of the county's duty to Leanne, but cited no independent common-law duty extending to the landlord. Without a prevailing common-law theory, the cause of action derived solely from 46-24-104 and 46-24-203, regardless of whether those sections were cited or not. Therefore, under 46-24-105, the landlord was precluded from recovering against the county based on the failure to notify Leanne of Tommy's release, and summary judgment was proper. Bos v. Gallatin County, 2003 MT 162, 316 M 292, 71 P3d 1209 (2003).

Voluntary Dismissal of Injunction Not Per Se Equivalent to Wrongful Issue of Injunction: The Osmolaks were granted a temporary restraining order against the Olsons in connection with a land deal, but before the show cause hearing, the Osmolaks were assured that the Olsons intended to perform as agreed in the buy-sell agreement, so the Osmolaks, convinced that there was no need to continue litigation, dismissed the action. The Olsons then sought attorney fees and costs for wrongful injunction, arguing that the voluntary dismissal had the same effect as a court decision finding that the Osmolaks were not entitled to the injunction. In defense, the Osmolaks sought to introduce into evidence the reasons why they had voluntarily dismissed the suit, but the District Court disallowed the evidence, holding that dismissal prior to an adjudication on the propriety of the injunction was an admission that the restraining order was without merit, entitling the Olsons to summary judgment and damages. The Osmolaks appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. An order of dissolution in such cases is not per se equivalent to a court determination of wrongful injunction, but is only prima facie evidence that the injunction was improperly issued and may be rebutted by the party against whom damages are sought. The District Court erred in resolving the case on summary judgment because the Osmolaks should have been allowed to introduce evidence that their voluntary dismissal was justified, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Olson v. Osmolak, 2003 MT 151, 316 M 216, 70 P3d 1242 (2003), following Stewart v. Miller, 1 M 301 (1871), and distinguishing Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937), and Sheridan County Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Absence of Evidence Cannot Establish Existence of Material Fact: An absence of evidence cannot, under law or common sense, establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003), followed in Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

Payment for Attorney Who Voluntarily Withdraws From Contingent Fee Case Before Occurrence of Contingency Based on Good Cause for Withdrawal — Modern Majority Rule: Sullivan retained plaintiff Bell & Marra, pllc, to represent him in an employment termination case, entering a contingent fee agreement for payment. Plaintiff represented Sullivan through two trials and settlement negotiations, after which it sent Sullivan a letter stating that it could not continue under the written 40% contingent arrangement and demanding that, in order to continue representation, Sullivan deposit $2,000 to cover costs of appeal transcripts and agree to pay plaintiff a percentage of all settlement proceeds, judgment damages, and other consideration recovered from the employer in the amount of 50% for appeal and subsequent trial for discrimination or wrongful discharge and an additional 5% for each appeal thereafter. Sullivan declined the ultimatum and hired new counsel. Upon settlement of Sullivan's employment claim, plaintiff filed: (1) a lien foreclosure action for payment of fees involving the employment claim, including advanced costs plus 40% of the recovery or the quantum meruit value of the legal services performed computed on an hourly basis; (2) a contract action related to fees incurred during representation of Sullivan's dissolution proceedings; and (3) a claim against Sullivan's employer requesting that settlement proceeds be held or paid to plaintiff according to the lien against Sullivan. Sullivan asserted affirmative defenses, including fraud, unavailability of quantum meruit damages because of plaintiff's repudiation of the fee agreement, and breach of fiduciary duty, as well as counterclaims for breach of contract, conversion, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of fiduciary duty. The District Court concluded that whether plaintiff withdrew or was fired was irrelevant and that the parties simply terminated the attorney-client relationship. The court then denied Sullivan's motions and counterclaims and granted summary judgment to plaintiff on all issues, awarding plaintiff attorney fees for the employment-related litigation at the contract rate of 40% minus the amount in the fee arrangement with Sullivan's subsequent attorney; fees and costs incurred during Sullivan's dissolution action; outstanding costs for the employment litigation; prejudgment interest on the damage awards; and plaintiff's attorney fees and costs incurred in pursuing the foreclosure action. Sullivan appealed the summary judgment.

In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the modern majority rule, which holds that an attorney who voluntarily withdraws from a contingency fee case without good cause forfeits recovery of compensation for services performed, but if withdrawal was for good cause or was justified, the attorney may recover based on quantum meruit. Whether good cause exists depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. Good cause exists when a client has engaged in culpable conduct, when continued representation would violate an attorney's ethical obligations, or when an attorney lacks the resources to pursue litigation. However, a client's refusal to accept a settlement offer does not constitute good cause, nor is it justifiable for an attorney to withdraw if the attorney does not believe that the negotiated contract is sufficiently compensatory. In the present case, plaintiff withdrew because continued representation had become a financial burden, which is a good cause for withdrawal under the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct, but not necessarily one entitling an attorney to compensation. Faced with being forced to enter into a new and unacceptable fee agreement when the time for pursuing an appeal was running, Sullivan's decision to reject plaintiff's ultimatum resulted in plaintiff's voluntary withdrawal. In light of the modern majority rule, plaintiff did not have good cause to withdraw that would justify compensation, so the District Court's summary judgment was reversed. Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2000 MT 206, 300 M 530, 6 P3d 965, 57 St. Rep. 810 (2000), following Ausler v. Ramsey, 868 P2d 877 (Wash. Ct. App. 1994). See also Augustson v. Linea Aerea Nacional-Chile S.A., 76 F3d 658 (5th Cir. 1996).

Failure to Disclose Experts by Scheduled Date — Inadequate Testimony to Establish Prima Facie Case: Romans was required by the original and amended scheduling orders to disclose experts by certain dates. Romans failed to do so, and the District Court twice ordered him to disclose. Expert disclosure was ultimately filed after the final date set by the court and was of record but not noticed when the District Court summarily dismissed the case for failure to produce the expert testimony needed to establish a prima facie case. Even though filing was not timely, the Supreme Court considered whether the filing was sufficient to avoid summary judgment, agreeing that because the testimony failed to address the standard of care applicable to the administration of a functional capacities evaluation, which was the basis of the suit, a prima facie case was not established by the expert testimony and summary judgment was proper. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000).

Plaintiff's Burden to Establish Prima Facie Case Not Relieved by Res Ipsa Loquitur: In order for the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to apply, permitting an inference of negligence on the part of one in control of an instrumentality that causes injury, not only must the elements of the doctrine be met, but plaintiff also has the burden of making a prima facie case that defendant breached a duty of care. Here, plaintiff did not establish the standard of care applicable to administration of a functional capacities evaluation through expert testimony, nor did plaintiff establish a breach of the standard by the person who administered the test. Absent a prima facie case, res ipsa loquitur did not apply and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000). See also Clark v. Norris, 226 M 43, 734 P2d 182, 44 St. Rep. 444 (1987).

Burden on County to Show Material Fact Regarding Height of Hedge — Nonconforming Use Not Proved — Summary Judgment Improper: A municipal code provision, passed in 1978, regulated, for traffic safety purposes, the height of hedges that could be grown on corners of intersections at 3 feet, but also permitted the existence of nonconforming uses prior to 1978. Ramirez was injured in a vehicle accident at an intersection where the hedge was taller than 5 feet and sought to hold the county accountable for failing its duty to enforce the ordinance. In granting summary judgment to the county, the District Court held the hedge to be a prior nonconforming use, noting that the hedge had been there since at least 1959. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that the county had offered no proof that the hedge was either taller than 3 feet in 1978 or had not been trimmed since 1978. The county did not meet its burden of showing the absence of this genuine issue of material fact; thus, summary judgment was improper. Ramirez v. Hatch, 1999 MT 107, 294 M 316, 979 P2d 1281, 56 St. Rep. 441 (1999).

Deliberate Indifference Element Not Met in Section 1983 Liability Claim Against Government Entity — Summary Judgment Proper: Police officers searched Dorwart's home pursuant to writs of execution and seized his personal property, but without Dorwart's permission or a search warrant. Dorwart brought a claim, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983, against the county and the Sheriff. Generally, claims under that section are brought against public officials in their individual capacities for their actions taken under color of state law, but municipalities and local government entities may also be sued as persons under the section. As set out in Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994), a local government entity may be held liable under section 1983 only when it is shown that the entity itself caused the constitutional violation through implementation of a policy or custom of that entity that amounts to deliberate indifference to plaintiff's constitutional rights. A supervisor cannot be held liable unless the supervisor approved of or authorized the policy. Deliberate indifference occurs only when the need for different action is so obvious and when the inadequacy of the procedure used is so likely to result in violations of constitutional rights that it is reasonable to say that the policymakers were deliberately indifferent to the need to change the policy. In this case, the constitutional inadequacy of the county's customary procedures for executing a writ of execution was not obvious, so the county and the Sheriff could not be held to be deliberately indifferent to the need to remedy the policy inadequacies. Summary judgment was proper in light of Dorwart's failure to establish deliberate indifference. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

Direct Evidence of Discriminatory Intent — Standard of Proof — Heiat Criteria Applicable to Cases Involving Circumstantial Evidence: The summary judgment burdens of proof discussed in Heiat v. E. Mont. College, 275 M 322, 912 P2d 787 (1996), are not limited only to cases of sex discrimination brought under federal law, but rather apply in all types of discrimination cases whether based on federal or state law. However, the Heiat test is confined to use in cases in which discriminatory intent can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. In a direct evidence case, one in which the parties do not dispute the reason for the employer's action but only whether that action is illegal discrimination, the standard is that the employer must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that an unlawful motive played no role in the challenged action or that the direct evidence of discrimination is not credible and is unworthy of belief. That method of proof, as set out in ARM 24.9.610(5), is the proper test in cases in which the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination. Traditional summary judgment principles apply to direct evidence discrimination cases, requiring the moving party to establish that no material issues of fact exist and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. If the employer is the moving party, the employer has the burden of showing that no issues of material fact remain and that plaintiff cannot prove a prima facie case of discrimination as a matter of law. Reeves v. Dairy Queen, Inc., 1998 MT 13, 287 M 196, 953 P2d 703, 55 St. Rep. 44 (1998), clarified and followed in Hafner v. Conoco, Inc., 1999 MT 68, 293 M 542, 977 P2d 330, 56 St. Rep. 277 (1999). See also Stuart v. First Sec. Bank, Havre, 2000 MT 309, 302 M 431, 15 P3d 1198, 57 St. Rep. 1309 (2000) (the Heiat test was applied in determining that the bank's reasons for denying an agricultural loan to Native Americans were not a pretext for discrimination).

Failure to Prove Illegal Voting — Summary Judgment Proper: Walker claimed that illegal votes were cast by five voters who were not residents of the town of Darby. Higgins established that they were each registered to vote in Darby and that their names appeared on the precinct voting register, which constitutes prima facie evidence of the right to vote. Despite residency questions, Walker failed to produce material and substantial evidence that votes were illegally cast, and summary judgment for Higgins was proper. Walker v. Higgins, 277 M 443, 922 P2d 1154, 53 St. Rep. 719 (1996).

Speculative, Conclusory Allegations of Fraud — Summary Judgment Proper: Berglee claimed that fraud in the making of Lien's will resulted in Berglee's exclusion from the will's provisions. However, the fraud allegations were speculative, conclusory, and in the nature of suspicious statements supported only by the allegations in the complaint repeated in Berglee's deposition. Absent affirmative evidence to defeat the testator's motion for summary judgment, the motion was properly granted. In re Estate of Lien, 270 M 295, 892 P2d 530, 52 St. Rep. 190 (1995), followed in Carelli v. Hall, 279 M 202, 926 P2d 756, 53 St. Rep. 1116 (1996).

Burden of Producing Evidence on Opposing Party: When record discloses no genuine issue as to any material fact, burden is upon party opposing entry of summary judgment to present evidence of a material and substantial nature raising a genuine issue of material fact. Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994); State ex rel. Scanlon v. Nat'l Ass'n of Ins. Comm'rs, 265 M 184, 875 P2d 340, 51 St. Rep. 480 (1994); Sprunk v. First Bank Sys., 252 M 463, 830 P2d 103, 49 St. Rep. 369 (1992); Mayer Bros. v. Daniel Richard Jewelers, Inc., 223 M 397, 726 P2d 815, 43 St. Rep. 1821 (1986), cited in Wangen v. Kecskes, 256 M 165, 845 P2d 721, 50 St. Rep. 6 (1993); Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986); Barich v. Ottenstror, 170 M 38, 550 P2d 395 (1976); Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976); Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976); Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975); Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972).

Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Burden of Proof:

Conclusory or speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

The party moving for summary judgment has the burden of establishing the absence of any genuine issue of fact, and the party opposing the motion must supply evidence supporting the existence of a genuine fact issue. Eitel v. Ryan, 231 M 174, 751 P2d 682, 45 St. Rep. 521 (1988); Pretty on Top v. Hardin, 182 M 311, 597 P2d 58 (1979); Mustang Beverage Co. v. Schlitz Brewing Co., 162 M 243, 511 P2d 1 (1973). See also Singleton v. L.P. Anderson Supply Co., Inc., 284 M 40, 943 P2d 968, 54 St. Rep. 738 (1997).

Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted because the record before the District Court did not show a breach of duty owed to the plaintiff. Plaintiff had the burden of coming forward with evidence that would place a genuine issue of fact before the court. Kronen v. Richter, 211 M 208, 683 P2d 1315, 41 St. Rep. 1312 (1984), followed in Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St. Rep. 484 (1994), and Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310, 52 St. Rep. 714 (1995).

Motion Supported by Unanswered Request for Admissions and Failure to Oppose Motion: Grant of plaintiff's summary judgment motion was affirmed because facts that sufficiently supported the motion were considered admitted and true when defendant failed to make a timely reply to plaintiff's request for admissions. At the hearing on the motion, defendant did not appear but merely filed a pro se brief opposing the motion. Defendant's brief was not accompanied by affidavits or controverting evidence in any admissible form. Defendant received notice of the motion 15 days before the scheduled hearing, although only 10 days' notice is required. Defendant's claim that the motion was granted without adequate opportunity for him to be heard was denied. Wight v. Gonzales, 249 M 268, 815 P2d 598, 48 St. Rep. 745 (1991).

Mere Denial or Speculation Insufficient: A person who moves for summary judgment must demonstrate that there is no genuine issue as to all facts considered material in light of the substantive principles entitling the movant to judgment as a matter of law. If that burden is met, the other party must demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact. Mere denial or speculation by the other party does not suffice. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

Contested Trust — Summary Judgment Appropriate: Summary judgment in a case contesting a trust agreement was proper when Taylor failed to demonstrate a material fact issue regarding the naturalness of the disposition. Mere allegation that because her brother was acting as the decedent's fiduciary and that because of alleged animosity between her and her brother, he exercised undue influence over the decedent to have her left out of the will was insufficient to meet her burden of showing disputed material facts regarding whether the disposition was unnatural. Taylor v. Koslosky, 249 M 215, 814 P2d 985, 48 St. Rep. 649 (1991), overruled, to the extent that a court is not required to but may consider the criteria in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978), in determining the existence of undue influence, but the five criteria need not all be proved to show undue influence in any given case, in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

Substantial Showing by Defendants of No Material Issue of Fact — Burden of Proof Shifts to Plaintiff: The defendants brought a summary judgment motion for dismissal on the grounds that no material fact issues existed. The motion was supported by briefs, exhibits, and affidavits. The plaintiffs merely reiterated the factual allegations in their complaint, arguing that the burden was on the defendants to disprove the plaintiffs' case. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision in favor of the defendants, holding that once the defendants make a sufficient showing of no material fact issues, then the burden shifts to the plaintiffs to show that the summary judgment is not warranted. Thelen v. Billings, 238 M 82, 776 P2d 520, 46 St. Rep. 1108 (1989), followed in Lachenmaier v. First Bank Sys., Inc., 246 M 26, 803 P2d 614, 47 St. Rep. 2244 (1990), and in Alexander v. McCauley, 250 M 216, 819 P2d 176, 48 St. Rep. 798 (1991). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Burden of Proof on Moving Party: The moving party for a summary judgment has the burden of showing the absence of any genuine factual issue. Mogan v. Harlem, 238 M 1, 775 P2d 686, 46 St. Rep. 1043 (1989); Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986); Baylor v. Jacobson, 170 M 234, 552 P2d 55 (1976); Storrusten v. Harrison, 169 M 525, 549 P2d 464 (1976); Rickard v. Paradis, 167 M 450, 539 P2d 718 (1975); Uhl v. Abrahams, 160 M 426, 503 P2d 26 (1972); Kober v. Stewart, 148 M 117, 417 P2d 476 (1966). Uhl was overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Implied Warranty of Habitability — Privity of Contract Not Required: Sale of a lot to plaintiffs was contingent upon plaintiffs' agreement to allow seller to contract with Mora Bros., Inc., for the construction of their home. When the land beneath their new home began to slide downhill, plaintiffs sued for damages. District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment against seller and Mora Bros., Inc., as builder-vendors on the theory of breach of implied warranty of habitability, but denied plaintiffs' motion against Mora Bros., Inc., on the issue of negligence. Supreme Court affirmed District Court's finding that Mora Bros., Inc., is liable to plaintiffs under theory of implied warranty of habitability. The warranty does not depend on a contract for its existence, therefore privity of contract is not required. Once plaintiffs showed that house moved, defendant had to provide an explanation to create a genuine issue of fact. Defendant failed to provide an explanation, so summary judgment was proper. Degnan v. Executive Homes, Inc., 215 M 162, 696 P2d 431, 42 St. Rep. 262 (1985).

Test for Grant of Summary Judgment: The purpose of summary judgment is to encourage judicial economy by eliminating unnecessary trials, and it is proper only when there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Movant has the burden of showing a complete absence of any genuine issue as to all facts considered material in light of the substantive principles that entitle the movant to a judgment as a matter of law, and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the offered proof are to be drawn in favor of the opposing party. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981).

Genuine Issue of Fact — No Duty of Court to Anticipate: The failure of the party opposing the motion for summary judgment to either raise or demonstrate the existence of a genuine issue of material fact or to demonstrate that the legal issue should not be determined in favor of the movant is evidence that the party's burden was not carried. Summary judgment is then proper, the court being under no duty to anticipate proof to establish a material and substantial issue of fact. Larry C. Iverson, Inc., v. Bouma, 195 M 351, 639 P2d 47, 38 St. Rep. 1911 (1981); State ex rel. Burlington N. v. District Court, 159 M 295, 496 P2d 1152 (1972).

Summary Judgment for Prescriptive Public Easement — Estoppel From Denying County Ownership: Where the purchasers of real property brought an action for breach of contract, misrepresentation, and breach of a statutory and equitable obligation to maintain a county road against the sellers of the property and the county, the previous property owner, and the sellers in turn filed a cross-complaint for indemnity against the previous owner, the trial court did not err in denying the county's motion for summary judgment and granting the motions of the plaintiffs and sellers for summary judgment. On a motion for summary judgment the movant has the burden of establishing prima facie the absence of any genuine issue of material fact, and when the movant does so, the party opposing the motion must come forward with substantial evidence raising a genuine issue of material fact. The sellers presented evidence in support of their motion showing a prescriptive public easement and estoppel against the county and former owner. The county failed to present evidence to meet its burden. Riley v. Carl, 191 M 128, 622 P2d 228, 38 St. Rep. 83 (1981).

Burden of Proving Nonexistence of Genuine Issue: It is clear in this case that because plaintiff did not initially demonstrate with appropriate proof an absence of a genuine issue of material fact with regard to the defendant's affirmative defense, the latter was not compelled to produce counterproof to avoid a grant of summary judgment. Mathews v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 184 M 368, 603 P2d 232 (1979), followed in Minnie v. Roundup, 257 M 429, 849 P2d 212, 50 St. Rep. 342 (1993).

Burden Shifts to Opposing Party: Summary judgment is appropriate when the moving party shows a complete absence of any genuine issue of fact. The initial burden attaches to the moving party, but the burden shifts where the record discloses no genuine issue of fact. Once the burden has shifted, the party opposing the motion is held to a standard of proof which is as substantial as that initially imposed on the moving party. Rumph v. Dale Edwards, Inc., 183 M 359, 600 P2d 163 (1979).

Material and Substantial Facts: An order granting summary judgment will be upheld in those cases in which the complaining party fails to demonstrate the existence of material and substantial facts that would alter the decision made below. W. Sign, Inc. v. St., 180 M 278, 590 P2d 141 (1979), following Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976).

Burden of Plaintiff: Where defendant satisfied burden by placing sufficient facts before the court which vitiated plaintiffs' contentions, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to come forward with proof of contentions to show that a genuine material fact issue existed. Roberts v. Burlington N. R.R., 171 M 143, 556 P2d 1243 (1976).

Defendant's Burden of Proof — Shift of Burden: Defendant, in seeking summary judgment, had initial burden of showing absence of any issue of material fact remaining, but burden then passed to carpenter to raise such material issue of fact. DeWinter v. Capp Homes, Inc., 162 M 19, 507 P2d 1061 (1973).

PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Preclusion of Evidence of Duty of Care to Supervise Ranch Help — Summary Judgment Proper: Elizabeth sued her husband, Robert, for damages that she received while helping perform chores on Robert's ranch, including being accidentally injected with sheep serum by Robert's father. However, Elizabeth failed to produce any evidence that Robert had any duty to supervise his father, so the trial court granted Robert's motion in limine, precluding any evidence or testimony regarding the accidental injection, including evidence by Elizabeth's expert regarding the cause of her injuries, and ultimately granted summary judgment to Robert. Elizabeth appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In order to recover for personal injuries, Elizabeth was required to establish a legal duty, a breach of that duty, and damages proximately caused by the breach. Elizabeth did not establish a legal duty, so partial summary judgment for Robert was proper. Absent a legal duty, the evidence regarding the accidental injection and the expert's opinion concerning Elizabeth's injury was irrelevant and properly excluded. Without expert testimony, Elizabeth was unable to present evidence regarding causation and could not prevail on the negligence claim, so summary judgment for Robert was proper. Nelson v. Nelson, 2005 MT 263, 329 M 85, 122 P3d 1196 (2005).

Landlord Who Fails to Provide Safe Rental Property Negligent Per Se — Summary Judgment on Liability Proper: Plaintiff was injured in a fall in the staircase of a rental home because the stairwell light was not functional. Plaintiff claimed that the defendant landlord was negligent for failing to provide a safe and habitable premises and moved for partial summary judgment on the liability issue. The trial court denied the motion, and the jury found for defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Under 70-24-303, a landlord is required to keep rental premises in a fit and habitable condition and to maintain electrical facilities in good and safe working order. Defendant could have avoided liability by entering a separate written agreement signed by all parties in which plaintiff agreed to repair the light, but no such agreement existed, so defendant was negligent per se, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Defendant's attempt to shift responsibility to plaintiff for failing to notify defendant of the inoperative light was misplaced because the duty of repair is on the landlord and there is no duty of the tenant to notify. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005).

Discretion of District Court Whether to Void School Board Decision: Motta filed a pro se lawsuit against a school district board, contending that the district did not have an appropriate procedure in place for public participation in the decisionmaking process and that because the school board did not adequately publicize a series of negotiation sessions and a special meeting to approve a negotiated agreement between the board and the teachers' union, results of the meeting should be void. The District Court found that the board violated state open meeting laws, granted partial summary judgment for Motta, and ordered that the district submit copies of its public participation procedures and maintain minutes consistent with applicable statutes, but the court did not void the agreement. On appeal, Motta argues that the District Court erred and moved the Supreme Court to void the agreement. The Supreme Court declined. Under 2-3-213, the decision whether to void any decisions reached at a meeting held in violation of state open meeting laws is clearly within the discretion of the District Court, and because that discretion was not abused, the partial summary judgment was affirmed. Motta v. Philipsburg School Bd. Trustees, District No. 1, 2004 MT 256, 323 M 72, 98 P3d 673 (2004).

No Award of Attorney Fees on Partial Summary Judgment in Pro Se Case Proper — Remand for Determination of Costs: The District Court awarded Motta partial summary judgment in an action to determine whether a school board violated state open meeting laws. Even though he was the prevailing party, Motta was not entitled to attorney fees because Motta acted pro se throughout the proceeding. However, the District Court failed to address whether Motta was entitled to costs. Although it is within the District Court's discretion whether costs are awarded, an outright denial of costs without a sufficient rationale is an abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court remanded so that the District Court could consider costs and set forth a rationale if costs were denied. Motta v. Philipsburg School Bd. Trustees, District No. 1, 2004 MT 256, 323 M 72, 98 P3d 673 (2004). See also Gaustad v. Columbus, 265 M 379, 877 P2d 470 (1994).

Duty of State to Maintain University Library in Safe Condition: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Just weeks before, another child fell thorough the same stairway. In determining negligence, the District Court granted plaintiff partial summary judgment on the issue of duty of care and breach of the duty. The state appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the state had a duty of ordinary care to prevent children from falling through the railing at the public building and that the state breached that duty because the state had notice from the previous accident that there was a defect, yet the state did not cure, remove, or warn of the defect. Foreseeability was established at the time of the previous accident, so the state was liable despite a relatively accident-free history at the library and the fact that the building was grandfathered in under an older version of the building code in effect when the building was constructed. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), following Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995).

Question of Validity of Offset Moot — Dismissal of Counterclaim and Motion for Partial Summary Judgment Proper: A promissory note related to a stock sale provided for acceleration upon notice of default. Following defendants' default, plaintiff paid an escrow agent an amount that satisfied plaintiff's obligation under the sale agreement, and the agent then deducted from that payment the amount owed by defendants under the promissory note, transferred the balance back to plaintiff in satisfaction of the note, and forwarded the balance of plaintiff's payment to defendants. Defendants filed a counterclaim and moved for partial summary judgment based on the validity of the offset. The District Court dismissed both, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Because both parties received the money owed to them, and because the acceleration and offset were appropriate, the issues raised by defendants lost any practical purpose. The issue of the validity of the offset was moot, and the Supreme Court declined to address the issue further. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002).

Improper Grant of Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Whether Train Crew Gave Adequate Auditory Warning at Railroad Crossing: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. In its order granting partial summary judgment to MRL, the District Court ruled, as a matter of law, that the MRL train crew had properly sounded the train whistle and bell, in accordance with 69-14-562 (now repealed), and that because Mickelson had no memory of the accident, he could not produce any specific facts that presented a genuine issue worthy of trial. In the brief opposing summary judgment, Mickelson pointed out several inconsistencies in the testimony of the train crew that raised factual and credibility issues concerning the crew's story about how the accident occurred, particularly with regard to Mickelson's prior common practice of loading the fire truck in a particular manner, which conflicted with the crew's story. The Supreme Court held that the trial court committed reversible error by preventing the jury from deciding crucial factual and credibility issues regarding adequate auditory warnings, citing several cases that precluded summary judgment on whistle issues because of disputed facts. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000). See also Easterwood v. CSX Transp., Inc., 933 F2d 1548 (11th Cir. 1991), Bowman v. Norfolk S. Ry. Co., 832 F. Supp. 1014 (D. S.C. 1993), and Borden v. CSX Transp., Inc., 843 F. Supp. 1410 (M.D. Ala. 1993).

Element of Identity of Issues Not Present on Question of Collateral Estoppel — Partial Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Anderson sought judicial review of the seizure and suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403, which limits review to three underlying issues. The District Court's findings on these issues served as the bases for making the ultimate determination of whether Anderson was entitled to a license or whether his license was subject to suspension. After the District Court found that Anderson was entitled to a license, Anderson moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of the state's civil liability based on the doctrine of collateral estoppel. However, the question of liability was never considered as part of the judicial review proceeding, so denial of the partial summary judgment motion was proper on the grounds that the crucial estoppel element of identity of issues did not exist. Anderson v. St., 250 M 18, 817 P2d 699, 48 St. Rep. 871 (1991), distinguished in Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Summary Judgment Motion Taken Under Advisement — Constitutes Hearing: Defendant in a mechanics' lien foreclosure moved for partial summary judgment that the lien was invalid because it was not verified by affidavit. Through a series of delays and transfer of the case to a new judge, no hearing was held on the motion. At the beginning of trial, plaintiff moved to set aside summary judgment, contending that no proper motion was before the court and that a hearing on the motion was necessary. The trial court heard arguments, took the issue under advisement, and in its findings and conclusions reaffirmed the partial summary judgment. The Supreme Court found no reversible error in this procedure since the trial court's reconsideration prior to trial constituted a hearing on the motion. A.A. Quality Constr. v. Thomas, 224 M 108, 728 P2d 416, 43 St. Rep. 2055 (1986).

Construction of Insurance Contract: In construction of an automobile insurance contract, an ambiguity regarding nonowned vehicles was construed in favor of the insured. Thus, partial summary judgment for the insured was proper. Fitzgerald v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 186, 577 P2d 370 (1978).

Appealability and Appropriateness of Partial Summary Judgment: Although a partial summary judgment granting specific performance of an option contract was designated as interlocutory, it was a final and appealable transfer of property. Furthermore, the summary judgment was improperly granted when based upon a determination in a hearing on motion to dismiss that there were no issues of material fact, depriving defendant the opportunity to effectively resist the summary judgment motion. Graveley v. MacLeod, 175 M 338, 573 P2d 1166 (1978).

Partial Summary Judgment Order Nonappealable: An order granting partial summary judgment on the issue of liability alone, being interlocutory in nature, will not become final and appealable until damages are assessed. Link v. Dept. of Fish & Game, 173 M 127, 566 P2d 806 (1977).

Genuine Issues as to Damages: Where plaintiff sought damages against railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act, it was error for District Court to deny railroad's introduction of evidence to establish plaintiff's possible contributory negligence in diminution of damages where court granted partial summary judgment as to railroad's liability so that the only triable issue was damages. Dissent by Justices Daly and John C. Harrison asserting summary judgment is not appealable. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 167 M 485, 540 P2d 298 (1975).

Appeal of Judgment on Liability: Summary judgment on issue of liability only was "interlocutory in character" and not appealable until damage issue had been resolved. Time for taking appeal did not run from entry of summary judgment on liability, but would commence upon entry of final order. Schultz v. Adams, 161 M 463, 507 P2d 530 (1973).

Former Rule 56(d). Case not fully adjudicated on motion

Element of Identity of Issues Not Present on Question of Collateral Estoppel — Partial Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Anderson sought judicial review of the seizure and suspension of his driver's license pursuant to 61-8-403, which limits review to three underlying issues. The District Court's findings on these issues served as the bases for making the ultimate determination of whether Anderson was entitled to a license or whether his license was subject to suspension. After the District Court found that Anderson was entitled to a license, Anderson moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of the state's civil liability based on the doctrine of collateral estoppel. However, the question of liability was never considered as part of the judicial review proceeding, so denial of the partial summary judgment motion was proper on the grounds that the crucial estoppel element of identity of issues did not exist. Anderson v. St., 250 M 18, 817 P2d 699, 48 St. Rep. 871 (1991), distinguished in Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Differing Considerations for Summary Judgment and Final Judgment: The considerations which result in a grant of summary judgment are not the same considerations relevant to an order of final certification under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P. Under summary judgment procedure, the essential inquiry is whether material facts are disputed. Under Rule 54(b) procedure, the inquiry is whether, after balancing the competing factors, finality of judgment should be ordered to advance the interests of sound judicial administration and public policy. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Summary Judgment Improper Where Rights of All Parties Have Not Been Adjudicated: An order granting summary judgment is not final where the rights and liabilities of all parties have not been adjudicated. Knight & Co. v. Ft. Belknap Indian Agency Housing Authority, 188 M 218, 612 P2d 1290 (1980).

Partial Summary Judgment Order Nonappealable: An order granting partial summary judgment on the issue of liability alone, being interlocutory in nature, will not become final and appealable until damages are assessed. Link v. Dept. of Fish & Game, 173 M 127, 566 P2d 806 (1977).

Declaratory Judgment — All Issues Not Considered: In declaratory judgment action in which notice of reclassification was found not to comply with statutory requirements, District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff-landowners' motion for summary judgment without considering further issues on the power to reclassify since plaintiffs lacked standing as to those issues. Mittelstadt v. Buckingham, 156 M 407, 480 P2d 831 (1971).

Retrial of Summary Judgment: Propriety of motion for a new trial in a summary judgment proceeding was not questioned on appeal. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Former Rule 56(e). Form of affidavits — further testimony — defense required

Unauthenticated E-Mail Insufficient to Defeat Summary Judgment: The plaintiff claimed that the city of Billings violated his constitutional and statutory right to know based on a 4-month delay in providing public documents and an allegation that the city ultimately provided incomplete documents. The District Court determined the claim was moot since the documents were provided during the discovery process. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court on evidentiary grounds instead of mootness, reasoning that an unauthenticated e-mail in support of the plaintiff's contention could not be used to defeat summary judgment. Albert v. Billings, 2012 MT 159, 365 Mont. 454, 282 P.3d 704, citing Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 Mont. 391, 15 P.3d 864, and PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, reversed on other grounds, PPL Mont., LLC v. Montana, 565 US __, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Summary Judgment Affidavits Disregarded — Hearsay: Statements in affidavits in a summary judgment context must be made on personal knowledge and must state facts admissible in evidence. Thus, statements made based on hearsay that are not admissible under a hearsay exception under Rules 801 through 804, M.R.Ev., must be disregarded by the District Court. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Affidavits Containing Hearsay Allowed When Affidavits Likely Admissible at Trial: In an action to collect many years of rent for hyrdoelectric dams located on publicly owned river beds, the District Court admitted and refused to strike two affidavits submitted by the state on a motion for summary judgment, reasoning that the state could likely lay a sufficient foundation at trial for the affidavits to make them admissible under any of several exceptions to the hearsay rule. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that under former Rule 56(e) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure (Title 25, ch. 20) and its prior holding in Smith v. Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 Mont. 278, 187 P.3d 639, the affidavits and their historical attachments were properly admitted because they fell into any of several exceptions contained in Montana Rules of Evidence Rules 901 and 902 (Title 26, ch. 10) to the hearsay rule. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421.

Failure to Satisfy Evidentiary and Foundational Requirements for Admission of Documents — Summary Judgment Reversed: After Phillip Smith was killed at a railroad crossing, his daughter filed a wrongful death and survival action against the railroad. The District Court accepted affidavits and records from railroad and state officials indicating that federal funds had been used to install double reflectorized crossbucks at the crossing and held that pursuant to Norfolk S. Ry. Co. v. Shanklin, 529 US 344 (2000), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that state law tort claims are preempted when federal funds are used to install warning devices at railroad crossings, the preemption clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (FRSA), 49 U.S.C. 20106 (1994), preempted the wrongful death claim in this case. Therefore, summary judgment was granted for the railroad, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed on grounds that the affiants did not have personal knowledge that federal funds were used to install safety measures at the crossing and could not testify as to the authenticity of some of the documents, and because the railroad did not establish a foundation for the documents under the public and business records exception to the hearsay rule, the unauthenticated documents could not be used to support a summary judgment motion. Thus, the railroad did not meet the evidentiary requirements for summary judgment, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Smith v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 M 278, 187 P3d 639 (2008), followed with regard to introduction of hearsay evidence in Apple Park, L.L.C. v. Apple Park Condominiums, L.L.C., 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P3d 232 (2008). See also Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P3d 864 (2000), and Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002).

Breach of Subordination Agreement — Failure to Respond — Summary Judgment Proper: After submitting evidence in support of its motion, defendant moved for summary judgment because plaintiff breached a subordination agreement. The burden shifted to plaintiff to respond, but instead of filing a response brief, plaintiff filed two depositions and a set of discovery answers at the hearing and relied on oral argument. After consideration, the District Court granted summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, contending that summary judgment was improper because the depositions and discovery answers proved the existence of an intercreditor agreement between defendant and a codefendant, establishing a question of fact whether defendant received all funds to which it was entitled and thus whether defendant had any claim against plaintiff. The Supreme Court disagreed. Breach of the subordination agreement occurred before the intercreditor agreement existed, so the facts presented by plaintiff did not establish a material fact regarding the subordination agreement, and summary judgment was appropriate. Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003).

Exhibits Properly Excluded as Inadmissible Hearsay in Summary Judgment Proceeding: During summary judgment proceedings, parties must limit affidavits to evidence that would be otherwise admissible pursuant to evidentiary rules. The first admissibility requirement in this rule is that affidavits must be based on personal knowledge, and the personal knowledge requirement has been extended to attached exhibits as well. In this case, the District Court properly struck six challenged exhibits because they did not set forth facts within the affiants' personal knowledge and because a foundation was not laid for their consideration based on any exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence. Further, the court did not err in failing to take judicial notice of one of the exhibits—a motion to dismiss in a prior criminal proceeding—because the exhibit was not a form of law cognizable under Rule 202, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The exhibits were properly dismissed as inadmissible hearsay. Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002).

Premises Liability — Conflict Between Deposition and Affidavit of Same Witness — Affidavit Not Based Upon Personal Knowledge: Herron sued Columbus Hospital, alleging that he had been injured by a malfunctioning automatic door in the hospital's professional building and that the hospital had knowledge of the defective condition of the door. The hospital moved for summary judgment, and Herron opposed the motion. In support of his opposition to the hospital's motion, Herron filed an affidavit of Lyle Skinner, a maintenance employee, alleging that the hospital knew of the defective condition of the doors. The hospital then deposed Skinner and filed parts of his deposition in further support of its motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court pointed out that Skinner's affidavit and his deposition conflicted as to what doors in which building Skinner had performed maintenance on and also conflicted as to which doors Skinner had discussed with his superiors. Skinner's affidavit also stated that the doors would frequently malfunction, but his deposition showed that Skinner had not worked on the doors in question. Citing In re Estate of Michael v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 264 M 261, 871 P2d 272 (1994), the Supreme Court held that when there is a conflict between an affidavit and the same witness's deposition, the affidavit statements do not raise a genuine issue of material fact for the purposes of summary judgment proceedings. Regarding those portions of the affidavit that did not conflict with the deposition, the Supreme Court, relying upon Cooper v. Sisters of Charity, 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352 (1994), held that an affidavit submitted for the purpose of summary judgment must be based upon personal knowledge of the affiant and that if the affidavit does not meet that requirement, it does not raise a genuine issue of material fact. Because Herron provided no evidence to resist the hospital's motion for summary judgment other than Skinner's affidavit, the Supreme Court held that Herron had not met his burden in the summary judgment proceeding and held that the District Court had properly granted the hospital's motion. Herron v. Columbus Hosp., 284 M 190, 943 P2d 1272, 54 St. Rep. 840 (1997).

Failure of Insufficient Affidavit to Raise Issue of Material Fact: Cooper, in support of her contention that an issue of material fact existed, submitted a compound affidavit signed by herself and her ex-husband. The Supreme Court found the affidavit did not contain the elements necessary to conform to this rule, noting: (1) the affidavit was signed by both Cooper and her ex-husband; (2) the affidavit did not specify which statements were based on her personal knowledge and which were based on the ex-husband's knowledge; (3) most of the alleged facts set out in the affidavit were only opinions; and (4) neither Cooper nor her ex-husband could offer testimony on the issue in question because neither was an expert in the field, rendering the testimony inadmissible. As a matter of law, the affidavit failed to raise an issue of material fact. Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St. Rep. 484 (1994), followed in Herron v. Columbus Hosp., 284 M 190, 943 P2d 1272, 54 St. Rep. 840 (1997).

Failure to Lay Foundation for Hearsay Affidavit — Failure to Carry Burden Proving Material Facts: Thornton offered to purchase certain real property by executing a buy/sell agreement. The evidence showed that Thornton knew that half of the property was held in trust by Norwest and half was owned by Songstad and her sisters. Thornton obtained the signature of Songstad (representing her sisters) on the buy/sell agreement, but not that of Norwest. In response to Norwest's motion for summary judgment, Thornton submitted an affidavit containing his own hearsay statements that an unidentified trust manager at Norwest had agreed to be bound by the desire of Songstad to sell her half of the property. Citing Eberl v. Scofield, 244 M 515, 798 P2d 536 (1990), and Passovoy v. Nordstrom, Inc., 758 P2d 524 (Wash. 1988), the Supreme Court held that because Thornton's affidavit failed to lay a foundation for the use of the trust manager's statements, the affidavit did not qualify as a statement of a party opponent, an exception from the hearsay rule, and therefore did not meet the requirements of this rule by putting into dispute issues of material fact. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was therefore correct in granting Norwest's motion for summary judgment. Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Affidavit Containing Only Hearsay Stricken: The District Court did not err in striking an affidavit that contained only hearsay statements relating to an issue on which summary judgment was granted. Eberl v. Scofield, 244 M 515, 798 P2d 536, 47 St. Rep. 1780 (1990).

Speculative Statements Insufficient to Raise Genuine Issue of Fact: The petitioner was a nephew of the decedent who left his entire estate to two children's homes. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had properly dismissed the petitioner's case by summary judgment because the affidavits presented by the petitioner on the question of the decedent's competency were from people who had little contact with the decedent and were therefore speculative in nature. In re Estate of Luger, 244 M 301, 797 P2d 229, 47 St. Rep. 1642 (1990).

Allowing Supplemental Affidavits Not Improper: In a slip and fall case, the plaintiffs argued that the lower court erred in dismissing their case when the court relied on supplemental affidavits that the plaintiffs had moved to have stricken. The Supreme Court ruled that it was in the lower court's discretion to allow the additional affidavits. Blaskovich v. Noreast Dev. Corp., 242 M 326, 790 P2d 977, 47 St. Rep. 740 (1990).

Easement by Prescription — Burden of Proof: In a quiet title action, once defendant filed affidavits reciting facts that would fulfill the requirements for a prescriptive easement, it became the duty of the plaintiff not to rest upon mere allegations or denials but to respond by affidavit or otherwise, setting forth specific facts showing there was a genuine issue of material fact for trial. It was the plaintiff's burden to show that defendant's use was permissive. Summary judgment for the defendant was proper due to the plaintiff's failure to establish a genuine issue of material fact. Woods v. Houle, 235 M 158, 766 P2d 250, 45 St. Rep. 2273 (1988).

No Response From Opposing Party: Summary judgment was proper in this case as plaintiff failed to respond to defendant's motion. Plaintiff's contention that affidavits in opposition were not available is untenable because he could have, but failed to, file a responsive brief, attorney affidavit, or affidavits pursuant to Rule 30(e), M.R.Civ.P. If a party moves for summary judgment and the opposing party fails to respond, summary judgment is proper. Payne v. Stratman, 229 M 377, 747 P2d 210, 44 St. Rep. 2059 (1987), followed in Joyner v. Onstad, 240 M 362, 783 P2d 1383, 46 St. Rep. 2195 (1989).

Adverse Party May Not Rely on Mere Allegations of His Pleadings: The initial burden of establishing absence of any issue of material fact is on the party seeking summary judgment, but when the record discloses no genuine issue as to any material fact, then the burden shifts to the party opposing the motion to present evidence of a material and substantial nature to raise a genuine issue of fact. Conclusory or speculative statements are insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Here, plaintiff repeated the initial allegations contained in the complaint. She may not rest upon the mere allegations of her pleadings but has an affirmative duty to respond by affidavits or reference to sworn testimony with specific facts that show there is a genuine issue for trial. When plaintiff presents evidence of damages which are purely speculative, summary judgment is appropriate. Martin v. St., 698 P2d 399, 42 St. Rep. 272 (1985) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports). See also Mayer Bros. v. Daniel Richard Jewelers, Inc., 223 M 397, 726 P2d 815, 43 St. Rep. 1821 (1986).

Allegations Insufficient: Plaintiff served in the capacity of deputy clerk of the Supreme Court for 20 years. He ran for the Clerk of Court position but was defeated. The newly elected Clerk terminated plaintiff and appointed a new deputy. Plaintiff contended that he was terminated because of his political beliefs, age, or sex. The only indications the Supreme Court found in the record that any discrimination might have occurred were the allegations in plaintiff's complaint. No evidence of discrimination was put forth in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment. The court relied on State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 159 M 295, 496 P2d 1152 (1972), to find that in the absence of a factual showing summary judgment was proper. Conboy v. St., 214 M 492, 693 P2d 547, 42 St. Rep. 120 (1985), followed in Pipinich v. Battershell, 232 M 507, 759 P2d 148, 45 St. Rep. 1237 (1988).

Failure to Oppose or Defend: Summary judgment for plaintiff on one count of the complaint was proper where court had before it the complaint, answer, 20 requests for admissions and defendants' answers thereto, and plaintiff's supporting affidavit and defendants failed to conduct any discovery or file any opposing affidavits. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

Opposing Party to Present Material Facts of Substantial Nature: Facts presented by a party in opposition to a motion for summary judgment must be material and of a substantial nature, not fanciful, frivolous, gauzy, or merely suspicious. Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180, 38 St. Rep. 1606 (1981).

Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien) — Sufficient Property Description in Affidavits — Summary Judgment: In this case on a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), the issue on appeal was whether the description of the subject property in the notice of the lien filed with the County Clerk and Recorder was legally sufficient to identify the property for purposes of enforcing the lien. The appeal was taken on cross-motions for summary judgment. The Supreme Court found error in granting summary judgment to the property owners and held that the supplier seeking the lien was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Noting that the procedural requirements of 71-3-511 (since repealed) have been held strictly enforceable, the court held that the statutes are to be construed liberally so as to give effect to their remedial character once the procedure has been fulfilled. Although the land on which the structure stood was covered by the lien on the structure, the land did not need to be described. When, as here, the land was described the erroneous part of the description was to be rejected. If a sufficient description remained to identify the particular property sought to be charged, the lien would be upheld. Other documents filed with the notice of lien could be used to identify the building. In this case, those documents and photographs of the property in question sufficed to form a proper basis for summary judgment against the property owners. Gen. Elec. Supply v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981).

Refusal to Consider Untimely Filed Affidavits — No Error Found: A seller of real property sought summary judgment in an action based on the contract of purchase, and the buyer's attorney failed to file an affidavit and brief opposing the seller's motion for summary judgment until the day of the hearing. The seller's counsel pointed out the untimeliness of the filing, and the trial court refused to consider the affidavit. On appeal no abuse of discretion was found. The Supreme Court noted, too, the unwarranted delays previously caused by the buyer in the case and the lack of any compelling excuse for the untimely filing. Marcus Daly Mem. Hosp. v. Borkoski, 191 M 366, 624 P2d 997, 38 St. Rep. 322 (1981).

Burden of Proving Nonexistence of Genuine Issue: The moving party must first support his contentions with an appropriate evidentiary basis before the opposing party must do more than simply rest upon the allegations contained in his pleadings. It is only when the moving party has properly supported its motion that the burden is shifted to the opposing party to provide counterproof rather than being permitted to rest solely on the allegations contained in its pleadings. Mathews v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 184 M 368, 603 P2d 232 (1979), followed in Minnie v. Roundup, 257 M 429, 849 P2d 212, 50 St. Rep. 342 (1993).

Evidence Submitted to Be Timely and in Proper Form: Plaintiff submitted a letter from the State Compensation Insurance Fund in support of a motion to set aside the judgment. The letter was included improperly in appellant's brief for the following reasons: (1) it was not presented in the proper affidavit form as required by Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P.; (2) the opinion set forth in the letter could easily have been presented in timely fashion in opposition to respondent's motion for summary judgment rather than subsequently in support of a motion to set aside the verdict which had been granted on the merits; and (3) the letter sets forth a generalized opinion offered without either foundation or regard to the facts of the case. Since the letter was not in proper form it cannot be considered under Rule 803(a), Montana Rules of Evidence. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150 (1979).

Insufficient Showing of Fact Issue — Existence of Joint Venture: Plaintiff's allegation that the defendant was liable for money owed to plaintiff by a corporation because the defendant and the corporation were engaged in a joint venture was not sufficient to defeat a motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff's allegations were supported only by the fact that the defendant and the corporation had been issued a joint venture license by the State of California and that the plaintiff would rely on the testimony of certain contractors. The mere issuance of such a license is insufficient to indicate that it was actually used or that a joint venture existed, and the statement that certain contractors would testify is an unsupported conclusion. Nat'l Gypsum Co. v. Johnson, 182 M 209, 595 P2d 1188 (1979).

Summary Judgment — Depositions — Exhibits: The depositions of witnesses as well as exhibits introduced for the purposes of deposition were a sufficient basis for the court to conclude that there was no genuine issue of material fact regarding the lack of control of the city over an intersection. The court should have granted the city's motion for summary judgment. State ex rel. Helena v. District Court, 167 M 157, 536 P2d 1182 (1975).

Genuine Issue of Fact Found: Summary judgment was reversed because cognizance was not taken of amended allegation raising a genuine issue of fact. Eisemann v. Hagel, 157 M 295, 485 P2d 703 (1971).

Oral Testimony Properly Considered: Where trial judge was present during taking of depositions, facts heard by judge were properly considered on motion for summary judgment pursuant to this section since oral testimony is properly within matters which court may consider under such motion. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969).

Failure to Deny Allegation of Pretrial Pleading — Summary Judgment: Court was correct in adopting uncontested statement of fact in pretrial pleading in making its findings of fact for summary judgment. Glacier St. Elec. Supply v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Pleadings Not Controlling: On a motion for summary judgment the formal issues presented by the pleadings are not controlling, and the court must consider the depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions on file, oral testimony, and exhibits presented. Hagar v. Tandy, 146 M 531, 410 P2d 447 (1965).

Summary Judgment Not Res Judicata: Where parties went beyond pleadings and introduced other material in support of their motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, there was justification for treating the court's order as a judgment upon the merits. However, since summary judgment procedure was not followed in this case the principle of res judicata should not apply. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 144 M 84, 394 P2d 745 (1964).

Former Rule 56(f). When affidavits are unavailable

Burden on Moving Party to Establish How Additional Discovery Will Prevent Summary Judgment: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for additional discovery when the moving party failed to establish how the proposed additional discovery would prevent summary judgment. Hinderman v. Krivor, 2010 MT 230, 358 Mont. 111, 244 P.3d 306, following Rosenthal v. Madison County, 2007 MT 277, 339 Mont. 419, 170 P.3d 493. See also Bridgman v. Union Pac. RR Co., 2013 MT 289, 372 Mont. 124, 311 P.3d 416.

Failure to Establish How Proposed Discovery Could Preclude Summary Judgment — Motion for Additional Discovery Properly Denied: Rosenthal contended that the District Court erred in denying a motion for additional discovery and granting summary judgment for defendants instead. However, Rosenthal's statements in support of additional discovery were speculative and based on belief rather than personal knowledge and failed to establish how the proposed discovery could preclude summary judgment. In addition, Rosenthal's attorney filed an affidavit in support of additional discovery, but the affidavit was inadequate because the attorney lacked personal knowledge of the underlying issues and merely restated Rosenthal's version of the story. Therefore, denial of the motion for additional discovery was within the District Court's discretion and was not error. Rosenthal v. Madison County, 2007 MT 277, 339 M 419, 170 P3d 493 (2007), followed in In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821. See also Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002).

County Immunity From Judicial Acts and Omissions Affirmed: Silvestrone was arrested for misdemeanor assault, pleaded guilty in Justice's Court, and was fined $350 then subsequently sought counsel and moved the District Court to withdraw the guilty plea. The motion was granted, and the case was remanded to Justice's Court for trial. On the same day that the motion was granted, the Justice's Court issued a bench warrant for Silvestrone for failure to pay the fine in the underlying misdemeanor case, and 2 years later, Silvestrone was arrested and taken to jail. When the county discovered that the District Court had remanded the case for trial, the county moved to dismiss the original charge in the interests of justice, and the motion was granted. Silvestrone then filed a tort action in District Court for damages and emotional duress stemming from the Justice's Court's wrongfully issued arrest warrant. The District Court held that the county was immune from suit and granted summary judgment for the county despite Silvestrone's plea for additional time for discovery. On appeal, Silvestrone contended that summary judgment was premature and also sought to challenge the constitutionality of 2-9-112. The Supreme Court noted that because Silvestrone failed to provide meaningful submissions raising genuine issues of material fact, the District Court was entitled to rule on the county's summary judgment motion without providing additional discovery time. Additionally, Silvestrone failed to raise the constitutionality of the judicial immunity statute in District Court, so the Supreme Court declined to address it. The District Court's remand and the Justice's Court's issuance of the warrant were judicial acts, and the county's failure to remand the matter to the Justice's Court for trial was a judicial omission. The government is immune from liability for both judicial acts and omissions under 2-9-112, so the county was entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court was affirmed. Silvestrone v. Park County, 2007 MT 261, 339 M 299, 170 P3d 950 (2007).

Failure to File Affidavit for Further Discovery — No Entitlement to Additional Discovery: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendant, and Fabich appealed on grounds that summary judgment was premature because discovery had not been completed. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although Fabich had moved to extend the discovery deadline, he did not move to extend the scheduled summary judgment hearing or meet the requirements for filing an affidavit under this rule for continuing a summary judgment proceeding on grounds that further discovery was necessary. Without establishing an entitlement to additional discovery, summary judgment was not premature. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

Adoption of "Cause" Interpretation of "Occurrence" Provision In Action Regarding Unfair Trade Practices Statutes — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The parents of a 13-month-old child who died as a result of a toxic dose of medication administered by a day-care facility, filed an action claiming that the insurer's offer of $300,000 misrepresented the insurance policy liability limit in violation of Montana's unfair trade practices statutes. The parents alleged that their actions against the day-care center and the individual administering the drug entitled them under their third-party rights to twice the policy limit under an aggregate limits provision in the policy for "all occurrences". Relying on the policy language and the analysis in Greaves v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 984 F. Supp. 12 (D.D.C. 1997), affirmed in 172 F3d 919 (C.A.D.C. 1998), and Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 788 NE 2d 279 (App. Ct. Ill. 2003), the District Court granted summary judgment for the insurer, concluding that the parents' claims were based on one occurrence during a single policy period and determining that the insurer's liability could not exceed $300,000. On appeal, the Montana Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision and adopted the "cause" theory used by a majority of courts for interpreting the term "occurrence" in an insurance policy that limits the insurer's liability to a specified amount for each "occurrence" instead of the number of injuries or claims. Heggem v. Capitol Indem. Corp., 2007 MT 74, 336 M 429, 154 P3d 1189 (2007).

Failure to Disclose How Further Discovery Could Preclude Summary Judgment — Request for Further Discovery Properly Denied: The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff. Defendant Moon contended that summary judgment was premature because of an inadequate opportunity for Moon to conduct further discovery and depose various persons or to obtain documents that might demonstrate whether the promissory notes in question were paid and in what manner. Moon had the burden of showing what new facts could have been obtained through further discovery that could defeat the summary judgment motion, but neither his briefs nor his counsel's supporting affidavit established how the proposed discovery could do so. Therefore, the District Court did not err in conducting the summary judgment hearing and ruling on the summary judgment motion without allowing Moon the opportunity for further discovery. Envtl. Contractors, LLC v. Moon, 1999 MT 178, 295 M 268, 983 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 696 (1999).

Cutting Off Discovery Appropriate: The plaintiffs had diligently sought to take depositions but were unable to do so because of scheduling problems. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in granting the defendants' summary judgment motion because the plaintiffs did not sufficiently establish how the proposed discovery would preclude summary judgment. Howell v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 240 M 383, 785 P2d 1018, 46 St. Rep. 2216 (1989), followed in J.L. v. Kienenberger, 257 M 113, 848 P2d 472, 50 St. Rep. 182 (1993), and Stanley v. Holms, 1999 MT 41, 293 M 343, 970 P2d 1044, 56 St. Rep. 178 (1999). See also Richards v. Missoula County, 2009 MT 453, 354 M 334, 223 P3d 878 (2009).

Discovery Not "Cut Off" Prematurely by Summary Judgment: Plaintiffs contended defendants resisted taking of depositions of witnesses favorable to plaintiffs' cause and thus the court's granting defendants' motion for summary judgment "cut off" discovery prematurely. The court held that plaintiffs failed to present an affidavit as required by Rule 56(f), M.R.Civ.P., stating why depositions could not be taken; nor did plaintiffs exercise their prerogative under Rules 30, 31, or 37, M.R.Civ.P., at any time during the year or more after the complaint was filed. Morales v. Tuomi, 214 M 419, 693 P2d 532, 42 St. Rep. 60 (1985).

Former Rule 56(g). Affidavits made in bad faith

Fees and Costs Denied Absent Showing of Unreasonable Conduct by Counsel: Plaintiff asserted that defense counsel engaged in numerous acts of unreasonable conduct, including submission of false affidavits. Although the affidavits were not introduced at trial, plaintiff contended that counsel's actions needlessly multiplied court proceedings, justifying an award of costs and fees to plaintiff. The District Court denied the award, and on appeal the Supreme Court found no abuse of District Court discretion. The District Court determined that the proceedings were well within the bounds of normal and usual adversarial proceedings. Absent a showing by plaintiff that the alleged unreasonable conduct multiplied proceedings in a vexatious or unreasonable manner or that the affidavits were presented in bad faith or for purposes of delay, denial of fees and costs was affirmed. Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009).

Issue of Fact: In view of the record indicating that a real estate transaction did not close until between July 28 and July 30, appellant's simple assertion that the transaction closed on July 20 will not serve to create an issue of fact merely to avoid summary judgment. Van Ettinger v. Pappin, 180 M 1, 588 P2d 988 (1978).

Former Rule 57. Declaratory judgments

Mootness — No Appeal Absent District Court Ruling on Declaratory Judgment: The high school sports association decided that Grabow was ineligible to play basketball because his eligibility pursuant to the semester rule had elapsed while Grabow was an exchange student in Germany. Grabow filed a complaint in District Court asking for a declaratory ruling that the association lacked rulemaking and adjudicatory authority and requested a hearing on whether a preliminary injunction should be issued precluding enforcement of the association rule until the case could be adjudicated on its merits. After deciding that it was unlikely that Grabow would ultimately prevail, the District Court denied the injunction. Grabow appealed. The Supreme Court granted the injunction pending final disposition of the appeal, and Grabow played basketball during his senior year. The Supreme Court found that the 1999-2000 season was the only one in which Grabow claimed that he had a right to participate and that because the season was completed, the initial grounds for application of the mootness doctrine to the preliminary injunction issue were met. The declaratory judgment issue was not one capable of repetition, but was one that would evade review, so the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of Grabow's complaint for declaratory judgment, which would then be subject to appeal following final judgment by the District Court. Grabow v. Mont. High School Assn., 2000 MT 159, 300 M 227, 3 P3d 650, 57 St. Rep. 654 (2000). See also Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150 (1999).

Declaratory Judgment — Interpretation of Land Exchange Agreement: Shortly after entering into a land purchase agreement, the parties changed the agreement into a tax-free land exchange agreement. The new agreement gave buyer 3 ½ years to acquire like-kind property to be exchanged for seller's ranch. The like-kind property was to be purchased with funds placed periodically by buyer in an escrow account. Several years later a dispute arose concerning the nature and timing of the payments. Buyer submitted the questions to the District Court in a declaratory judgment action. The District Court interpreted the contract in a manner generally favorable to seller, and buyer appealed, claiming that the District Court's decision was unreasonable, contrary to the parties' intentions, and improper under the rules of construction of contracts. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the District Court's interpretation had not been unreasonable since: (1) its decision on the timing of the rental payments was reflective of the parties' intentions as shown by their past performance; (2) its decision on the timing of the amortization payments was consistent with the rule of construction requiring that a contract be construed in such a way as to give effect to all of its provisions; and (3) its ruling on the intention of the parties was supported by the evidence. Finally, 28-3-206 did not entitle buyer to have ambiguities construed in his favor; even though buyer claimed that the nature of the agreement was changed solely for seller's benefit, the agreement was prepared by an attorney for both parties, not by one party alone. Lewis v. Murphy, 199 M 368, 649 P2d 740, 39 St. Rep. 1459 (1982).

Issue of Fact as to Applicability of Insurance Coverage Exclusion: In this case the District Court failed to determine the factual issue of whether the insured, Phalen, expected or intended Thu Duc Vo's injuries. The applicability of coverage provision of the insurance policy excluded those cases where the insured's deliberate acts or assaults resulted in injuries that would be expected or intended by him to result from his deliberate acts. The applicability of Northwestern National's coverage could not be determined until the factual issues concerning the intention and expectation of Phalen as to Vo's injuries was decided in the tort action. Therefore, summary judgment in favor of Northwestern in the declaratory judgment case at bar was improper. NW. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Phalen, 182 M 448, 597 P2d 720 (1979), distinguished under the rationale of USF&G v. Rae Volunteer Fire Co., 212 M 450, 688 P2d 1246, 41 St. Rep. 1857 (1984), in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988).

Rules Not Designed to Promote Litigation: When defendant in a personal injury accident attempted to compel a potential litigant to appear and bring suit by naming her as a defendant in a third-party declaratory judgment action, the trial court properly dismissed the complaint since the third-party defendant was not an indispensable party or compelled to litigate a claim which she had no intention of pursuing. If equity was to be done in a situation such as this, attorney fees were properly awarded the third-party defendant. Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978).

Justiciable Controversy: Under this rule there must be a justiciable controversy which: is existing and genuine; the judgment of the court may effectively operate upon; and is a judicial determination having effect upon the rights, status, or legal relationships of a real party in interest. Or, if lacking these qualities, the case must be of overriding public import. In re Grand Jury, 170 M 354, 553 P2d 987 (1976).

Landowners — Taxpayers: Supreme Court accepted original jurisdiction of proceeding by owners of timberlands for a declaratory judgment and ancillary relief to, among other things, compel valuation and assessment of timberlands for taxation as directed by the Board of Equalization (functions transferred to Director of Department of Revenue and State Tax Appeals Board). State ex rel. Conrad v. Managhan, 157 M 335, 485 P2d 948 (1971).

Review of Declaratory Judgments: In a declaratory judgment action, the court determines issue of facts in the same manner as any other civil action and the Supreme Court will review the judgment in the same manner as any other case. Highway Comm'n v. Flood Control & Drainage District, 155 M 157, 468 P2d 753 (1970).

Exercise of Jurisdiction — Discretion — Procedure: Although the necessary elements for jurisdiction over a declaratory judgment exist, a court is not compelled to exercise it. Dismissal of an action for declaratory judgment lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge. The procedure to be used in determining whether to grant a motion for declaratory judgment is the same as for a motion for summary judgment. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 147 M 396, 412 P2d 569 (1966).

Declaratory Injunction Upheld — Water Rights: Declaratory judgment in favor of landowner maintaining that railroad had affirmative duty to maintain a ditch, although land had been sold, was affirmed. Harrer v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 130, 410 P2d 713 (1966).

Former Rule 58. Entry of judgment

GENERAL

Filing Notice of Appeal — District Court Deprived of Jurisdiction: A judgment entered after filing of a notice of appeal was invalid because the notice of appeal deprived the District Court of further jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

Motion Objecting to Costs — No Suspension of Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Order Not Appealable When Judgment Never Docketed in Record: The District Court made an express order that the Clerk of Court enter final judgment in a case certified for appeal under Rule 54(b), M.R.Civ.P., but a final judgment was never docketed in the record. Under these circumstances the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide an appeal. Jackson v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 123, 652 P2d 223, 39 St. Rep. 1998 (1982).

Disqualification of Judge After Entry of Findings and Conclusions: Defendants filed affidavits of disqualification of the District Judge in a property dispute case after the entry of the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Defendants contended that the filing precluded the judge from entering judgment in accordance with his findings and conclusions. The disqualification was attempted under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (since superseded), which was in effect at the time. The findings and conclusions entered by the judge prior to the filing of the affidavit of disqualification expressly directed that a judgment be prepared "in accordance with" the findings and conclusions. Under these circumstances, the judgment was a part of the findings and conclusions. Accordingly, although the disqualification prevented the District Judge from ruling on posttrial motions under Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., and from withdrawing the findings and conclusions previously entered, it was not effective to prevent entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with findings and conclusions entered prior to the filing of the affidavit for disqualification. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Final Judgment at Time of Entry: Judgment became final on April 20, 1959, when entered by the Clerk of the District Court, although appellant's counsel moved to modify the judgment on May 21, 1959, and the trial court overruled the motion on August 14, 1959. Hursh v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 139 M 302, 363 P2d 485 (1961).

Jury Award as Final: Where, in an action to recover a money judgment for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident, the evidence was conflicting and the plaintiff's damages unliquidated, and the jury's verdict assessed the plaintiff's damages and judgment was entered in conformity to the verdict, neither the trial court nor the Supreme Court possessed the power to delete from the jury's verdict the words and figures denoting the assessed damages. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Attack on Verdict by Motion for New Trial: After a case has been submitted to the jury and a verdict returned, accepted, and filed at the direction of the court and the jury discharged from the case, the only way to reach the verdict, if insufficient or against the law, is by a timely and proper motion for a new trial. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Law Case — Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Not Allowed: It is not permissible in this state to move for a judgment non obstante veredicto in a law case. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Special Verdict: The ministerial act of the clerk in recording a general verdict constitutes the rendition of judgment, to the entry of which the signature of the judge is not essential, but when the court directs the jury to return special findings, the announcement of his decision in open court and the entry of it in the minutes constitute the rendition of the judgment. McIntyre v. N. Pac. Ry., 58 M 256, 191 P 1065 (1920), distinguished in Lynch v. Butte, 99 M 287, 43 P2d 652 (1935).

Clerk Without Power to Make Additions to Judgment: While the Clerk of the District Court may enter a decree, he had no power to sign it, thus virtually rendering a judgment in a suit to foreclose mortgages on real and personal property, adjudging, among other things, that plaintiff recover principal, interest, and attorneys' fees, holding defendants personally liable therefor, etc., where the trial judge had done no more than transmit to him his findings of fact and conclusions of law, without any further directions in the matter. State ex rel. Reser v. District Court, 53 M 235, 163 P 1149 (1917).

Stay of Judgment Improper: There cannot be a stay of judgment in aid of a new trial. Such a stay is properly granted only after notice of intention to appeal has been given, and notice of intention cannot be given until judgment has been entered. State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

Judgment as Act of Court: The entry of the judgment is the act of the clerk, but when entered becomes the judgment of the court. Hynes v. Barnes, 30 M 25, 75 P 523 (1904), distinguished in Conway v. Fabian, 108 M 287, 89 P2d 1022 (1939).

DELAY IN ENTRY OF JUDGMENT

Twenty-Day Delay — Effect: Failure to have judgment entered until 20 days after verdict does not affect the validity of the judgment, the only penalty for delay being dismissal of the action if not entered within 6 months after verdict. Coover v. Davis, 112 M 605, 121 P2d 985 (1941).

Impossibility of Judgment: A case tried by a jury may be reserved for argument only when the judgment does not necessarily follow the verdict, as for instance in equity suits, or where after discharge of the jury the verdict is claimed to be unresponsive to the issues, or is so ambiguous or informal that no judgment, proper under the issues, could be entered in conformity with it. State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914).

Delay Not to Cause Substantial Damage: It is not the intention of the law that a judgment will follow so far behind the verdict as to be the cause of substantial damage, this being apparent from the former code provision requiring the entry of judgment within 24 hours after verdict. Chesnut v. Sales, 49 M 318, 141 P 986 (1914).

Former Rule 59. New trials — amendment of judgment

Evidence of Other Verdicts Improper — New Trial Properly Granted: In a trial of a Federal Employers' Liability Act claim in which the District Court granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the court's improper admission of evidence of other verdicts, the plaintiff's questioning of an expert witness regarding previous testimony about whole-body vibration injuries may have opened the door to evidence of other verdicts, but the evidence should have been excluded. The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial in light of the witness's comments and the statements during closing arguments in which defense counsel noted that "24 of your neighbors . . . two jury panels" had found against similar plaintiffs in two other cases against the same company. Bircher v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 121, 356 Mont. 357, 233 P.3d 348.

Federal Employers' Liability Act — Failure to Preserve Objection to Instruction on Mitigation of Damages: Vincent filed a Federal Employers' Liability Act claim against defendant employer. The trial court concluded that defendant met its burden of production with respect to mitigation of damages, and the court proceeded to instruct the jury on mitigation. Vincent objected to the jury instructions on grounds that there was insufficient evidence to support the instruction but failed to offer any proposed instructions concerning mitigation or to object to the instruction on grounds of inadequacy. The Supreme Court agreed that there was sufficient evidence to warrant a mitigation instruction and therefore declined to address Vincent's arguments on appeal regarding adequacy of the instruction. Vincent v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 57, 355 Mont. 348, 228 P.3d 1123.

Previously Unavailable Statement Regarding Facts Surrounding Creation of Promissory Note Precluding Summary Judgment: The District Court ordered partial summary judgment for plaintiff regarding defendant's liability for a promissory note that was unilaterally entered into by one of the owners of defendant business. The owner was subsequently found guilty of fraud for forging the signatures of the other owners to acquire a loan. Following retirement of the District Court judge, defendant moved for relief from the order. The order was overturned by the successor judge, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant's motion for relief presented previously unavailable evidence regarding testimony given in the owner's criminal trial related to circumstances surrounding creation of the promissory note and whether defendant was in fact obligated to pay the note. The testimony created a genuine issue of material fact that precluded summary judgment, so the previous judgment was properly overturned. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2009 MT 448, 354 M 208, 223 P3d 845 (2009).

Failure of District Court to Enforce Order Prohibiting Further References to Undisclosed Textbook — Manifest Abuse of Discretion Warranting New Trial: During discovery for Quebedeaux's medical malpractice trial, the defense failed to disclose a textbook that had been written by one of plaintiff's experts and that appeared to contradict that expert's testimony. During trial, an expert for the defense referenced the textbook during expert testimony. The District Court subsequently ruled that any further reference to the textbook was prohibited, but defense counsel nevertheless referenced the textbook during closing arguments. Plaintiff objected, but the District Court told counsel that the comment could be addressed during rebuttal. After a jury found for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial, asserting that defense counsel had made numerous misrepresentations regarding the textbook. The District Court denied a new trial and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that the defense's reference to the textbook was a significant contradiction of plaintiff's expert testimony by the expert's own writings, allowing the defense to gain an advantage and prejudicing plaintiff, and that plaintiff was therefore denied a fair trial by the surprise use of the textbook, by the defense's violation of the order prohibiting further reference to the textbook, and by the District Court's failure to enforce its order when plaintiff objected during closing arguments. The District Court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial was a manifest abuse of discretion, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a new trial. Willing v. Quebedeaux, 2009 MT 102, 350 M 119, 204 P3d 1248 (2009). See also Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994).

Order Not Final When Time to Appeal Not Expired — Rules of Civil Procedure Applicable to Formal Probate Proceedings: An order becomes final only when the time to appeal has expired. In this case, plaintiff bank asserted that the District Court's order approving a trust accounting was conclusive on all persons pursuant to 72-35-206, so the accounting could not be reopened on defendants' motion for a new trial. However, the time to appeal had not expired when defendants moved for a new trial, so the order was not final and the accounting was subject to a postjudgment motion for a new trial. Further, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure supplied an appropriate mechanism for filing a motion after entry of a trust order because the rules apply to formal probate proceedings. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

De Novo Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion for New Trial Based on Insufficiency of Evidence, Not Abuse of Discretion: Reconciling incompatible standards previously applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence, the Supreme Court held that there either is or is not sufficient evidence to support the verdict and that this determination by a District Court is not a matter of discretion. Thus, the Supreme Court's standard of review will henceforth be de novo, and any previous cases that stated the standard of review as abuse of discretion were overruled to that extent. The Supreme Court, like the District Court, will determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), overruling Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983), Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845 (1988), Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842 (1989), Gass v. Hilson, 240 M 459, 784 P2d 931 (1990), Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64 (1991), Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012 (1993), Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167 (1994), Stroop v. Day, 271 M 314, 896 P2d 439 (1995), Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700 (1996), Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002), St. v. Longhorn, 2002 MT 135, 310 M 172, 49 P3d 48 (2002), Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002), Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002), Moore v. Beye, 2005 MT 266, 329 M 109, 122 P3d 1212 (2005), Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), Williams Feed, Inc. v. Dept. of Transportation, 2007 MT 79, 336 M 493, 155 P3d 1228 (2007), and Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Consider Motion for Reconsideration Following Notice of Appeal: Plaintiff filed a collection action against the Birnels for payment of medical services. The Birnels then filed a third-party action against their health insurer, alleging breach of contract and unfair trade practices. When the insurer failed to answer the complaint, the District Court entered a default judgment against the insurer. The insurer moved to set aside the default on grounds that the complaint was improperly sent to an old address. The District Court agreed and set aside the default judgment and allowed the insurer to answer the complaint. The Birnels filed a motion for reconsideration of the order setting aside the default judgment, and the insurer then moved to strike the reconsideration motion. The Birnels filed a notice of appeal from the order granting the insurer's motion to set aside the default judgment. The following day, the District Court granted the Birnels' motion for reconsideration, and the insurer appealed, arguing that the notice of appeal terminated the District Court's jurisdiction over the case and that granting the motion for reconsideration was thus erroneous. The Supreme Court agreed with the insurer. Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., provides for motions to alter or amend a judgment, but because the Birnels' motion to reconsider did not reference this rule or discuss a manifest error of law, it could not be considered a motion to alter or amend the judgment, but merely regurgitated arguments that the District Court had already considered and rejected. A motion for reconsideration of previously decided issues is not authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court concluded that the Birnels' notice of appeal divested the District Court of jurisdiction to rule on the reconsideration motion, so the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2006 MT 148, 332 M 410, 138 P3d 802 (2006), following Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256 (1997).

On remand, the District Court, sua sponte, reinstated the original default judgment on grounds that the court erred in previously setting aside the default judgment because the insurer had failed to establish good cause to set the default judgment aside. The insurer appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), does not allow a District Court to enter a default judgment sua sponte without application by a party and without written notice to the party against whom judgment is sought. The District Court abused its discretion by doing so. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2008 MT 35, 341 M 310, 176 P3d 1067 (2008).

Conflicting Evidence of Plaintiff's Damages From Battery — Motion for New Trial Properly Denied Absent Evidence of Damages: The trial court instructed the jury that Beye committed battery on Moore, but the jury concluded that Moore was not injured and was not entitled to damages. Moore moved to vacate the verdict and for a new trial, arguing that the evidence indicated that some injury occurred, so a zero damage award was inadequate. However, the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although evidence regarding injuries was conflicting, Beye presented sufficient credible evidence to uphold the verdict, and the evidence was not trifling or frivolous when viewed in the light most favorable to Beye, so the Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict. Moore v. Beye, 2005 MT 266, 329 M 109, 122 P3d 1212 (2005), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

No Loss of District Court Jurisdiction Upon Filing of Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: About 2 weeks after defendant filed a notice of entry of judgment, plaintiff filed a motion to amend the original complaint, and the District Court granted the motion. About 3 weeks after the amended complaint was filed, the court entered an order nunc pro tunc stating that it no longer had discretionary authority to grant leave to amend because it lost jurisdiction when defendant filed the notice of entry of judgment. The court held that the order allowing plaintiff's motion to amend was void and should be stricken. Plaintiff appealed the nunc pro tunc order, and the Supreme Court reversed. The filing of a notice of entry of judgment starts the clock running for the time to appeal, but does not divest the District Court of jurisdiction. Rather, the District Court loses jurisdiction when a notice of appeal is filed. Thus, the order issued nunc pro tunc was based on a mistaken interpretation of law because when the motion to amend was granted, the District Court still had jurisdiction. Kruckenberg v. Kalispell, 2004 MT 185, 322 M 177, 94 P3d 748 (2004). See also McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975), Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242 (1988), and Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001).

Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P.: (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Cumulative Errors Inapplicable in Civil Cases — New Trial Not Warranted: In a wrongful termination action, the District Court erroneously granted a motion for a new trial to the employer based on the cumulative effect of six alleged errors. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the doctrine of cumulative error, while applied in criminal cases, is not extended to civil cases. Because none of the errors considered individually warranted a new trial, the lower court erred in ordering a new trial on the cumulative effect of six errors. Baxter v. Archie Cochrane Motors, Inc., 271 M 286, 895 P2d 631, 52 St. Rep. 444 (1995).

Jury Finding of Lack of Negligence Not Overturned on Grounds of Passion or Prejudice: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others, alleging negligence. The jury found that there was no negligence. Buhr argued that despite the jury's interpretation of the evidence, the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice. The Supreme Court noted that it must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that its role was not to retry a case based upon one party's view of the evidence and that it was within the jury's province to adopt testimony presented by one party to the exclusion of testimony presented by another. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

New Trial Granted Because of Intervenor's Failure to Serve All Parties: In a dissolution action, Keaster and his ex-wife stipulated that he was not the natural parent of her child. The ex-wife subsequently named Fleming as the natural father, and the Child Support Enforcement Division initiated proceedings to collect support payments from Fleming. Fleming intervened in the dissolution proceedings without giving notice to Keaster. The lower court reinstated Keaster's support payments and denied Keaster's motion for a new trial on the basis that it had not been timely made. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's decision and held that by rule, Fleming had to serve all parties to the action in which he was intervening. In re Marriage of Keaster, 259 M 48, 853 P2d 1191, 50 St. Rep. 669 (1993).

Motion for Modification of Child Custody Decree: Wife filed for modification of a child custody order, and the subsequent order issued by the court affected only the terms of the original custody decree that relate to the notice required prior to visitation and to allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that wife's motion for modification should be denied because it was not properly filed under the time limitations established in this rule or Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., the court held that the motion was filed under 40-4-217, which contains no time limitations. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Failure to File Notice of Entry of Judgment — Amended Complaint Allowed: Unless posttrial motions are made by the losing party under Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the losing party is not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing a notice of appeal until proper service of notice of entry of judgment is made. This rule applies to orders that may become final as well as to judgments. In this case, notice of entry of judgment was not served and no posttrial motions were made. The time for appeal did not begin to run, the order of dismissal of the original complaint did not become final, and the District Court had jurisdiction to grant leave to file an amended complaint. The District Court had not lost subject matter jurisdiction. Hankinson v. Picotte, 235 M 143, 766 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 2259 (1988).

Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict — New Trial Inappropriate: When a jury verdict is appealed, the appellate court's function is to determine whether there is substantial credible evidence to support the verdict. The lower court's discretion to grant a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence is exhausted when it finds substantial evidence to support the verdict. The court may not grant a new trial only on the basis that it chose to believe one line of testimony different from that which the jury believed. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Disqualification of Judge After Entry of Findings and Conclusions — Ruling on Motions Prohibited: Defendants filed affidavits of disqualification of the District Judge in a property dispute case after the entry of the judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law. Defendants contended that this precluded the judge from entering judgment in accordance with his findings and conclusions. The disqualification was attempted under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (since superseded), which was in effect at the time. The findings and conclusions entered by the judge prior to the filing of the affidavit of disqualification expressly directed that a judgment be prepared "in accordance with" the findings and conclusions. Under these circumstances, the judgment was a part of the findings and conclusions. Accordingly, although the disqualification prevented the District Judge from ruling on posttrial motions under Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., and from withdrawing the findings and conclusions previously entered, it was not effective to prevent entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with findings and conclusions entered prior to the filing of the affidavit for disqualification. Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

GENERAL

Juror Misconduct Using Internet Definition Not Sufficient for New Trial: A juror looked up on the Internet a legal term used in a jury instruction. Although the definition was the same as given in the instruction, this constituted juror misconduct that originated from an external influence. Not every act of juror misconduct mandates a new trial; the misconduct must be prejudicial enough to render the verdict unjust. Considering this misconduct, together with circumstances surrounding the jury decision, the District Court was correct in determining that a new trial was not warranted. Stebner v. Associated Materials, Inc., 2010 MT 138, 356 Mont. 520, 234 P.3d 94.

Substantial Evidence That Damage Award Included Some Amount for Pain and Suffering — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff contended that a new trial was warranted because a jury award of only $7,358.56 in damages for plaintiff's injuries sustained in a car accident was not supported by the evidence, given uncontroverted evidence that plaintiff also experienced pain and suffering. The amount awarded was the exact amount claimed by plaintiff for past medical expenses. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court declined to second-guess the jury or speculate on whether damages for pain and suffering were left out of the award. Substantial credible evidence supported the verdict, which could have included some amount for pain and suffering, and the award was affirmed. Neal v. Nelson, 2008 MT 426, 347 M 431, 198 P3d 819 (2008).

De Novo Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion for New Trial Based on Insufficiency of Evidence, Not Abuse of Discretion: Reconciling incompatible standards previously applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence, the Supreme Court held that there either is or is not sufficient evidence to support the verdict and that this determination by a District Court is not a matter of discretion. Thus, the Supreme Court's standard of review will henceforth be de novo, and any previous cases that stated the standard of review as abuse of discretion were overruled to that extent. The Supreme Court, like the District Court, will determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), overruling Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983), Tope v. Evidence of Existence of Pain and Suffering Uncontroverted by Evidence of Causation and Evidence of Extent of Damages: Thompson's automobile was rear-ended by a Bozeman police car, and Thompson filed suit against the city. The city admitted negligence and causation, and the action went to trial on the issues of whether Thompson suffered damages and the amount of those damages. The jury returned a verdict of $2,800 in damages for medical expenses and lost wages but awarded no damages for pain and suffering, loss of ability to pursue an occupation, loss of future wages, loss of ability to pursue an established course of life, and future medical expenses. Thompson moved for a new trial, arguing that there was insufficient evidence for the jury to award no damages, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court noted that it had addressed the issue of zero damage awards in light of uncontroverted evidence in Gehnert v. Cullinan, 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352 (1984), and Brockie v. Omo Constr., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167 (1994). In those cases, the Supreme Court explained that it had held that the jury did not have any choice but to award some damages when the evidence was uncontroverted that the plaintiff had suffered some damages. It is only when the evidence of the existence of damages is controverted, the Supreme Court said, should a court defer to the judgment of the jury in refusing to award any damages at all. The Supreme Court then reviewed the testimony offered by the city and held that the evidence presented addressed the issue of the extent of damages and not whether any damages at all were caused. The Supreme Court analyzed the case of Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726 (1984), relied on by the city, and noted that the case stood for the proposition that when a jury awards at least some damages based upon its assessment of conflicting evidence, a court may not substitute its judgment for the jury's judgment based upon the court's view of what evidence is most believable. In the case before it, the Supreme Court noted that the city did not controvert Thompson's evidence that at least some pain and suffering occurred and it was therefore correct for the District Court to grant a new trial when the jury awarded no damages other than medical expenses and lost wages. Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of New Trial — Jury or Bailiff Misconduct: In the two most recent cases in which jury or bailiff misconduct was the basis for granting or denying a new trial, the Supreme Court stated that the standard is that the decision is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of manifest abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court reaffirmed this standard and overruled those cases with a different standard. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

No Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Grant Mistrial Because of Testimony Concerning Costs and Attorney Fees: In the course of a lawsuit against his insurer for failure to settle a claim resulting from hail damage to his wheat crop, Dees testified that he had incurred substantial expense for costs and attorney fees in bringing the action against the insurer. The insurer moved for a mistrial, which was denied, and the jury subsequently awarded Dees a large punitive damages judgment. The Supreme Court held that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny the motion for a mistrial. The District Court's findings and conclusions attributed the punitive damages award to the insurance company's dogmatic position that the crop was not damaged by hail and to the haughtiness of its witnesses. Because the District Court observed the trial, it is reasonable to infer that the District Court Judge considered the reference to costs to be comparatively insignificant. The District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a mistrial. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Time Allowed for Filing Motion for New Trial: Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., provides that a motion under this rule for a new trial must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. The day of mailing is excluded under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Because notice of entry of judgment was served by mail, 3 days are added under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. The combined total of days allowed under Rules 59(b) and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., is 13 days. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Use of Juror Affidavits in Attempt to Prove Irregularity or Accident Improper: In moving for a new trial, plaintiffs submitted juror affidavits as evidence that the jury was misled in its duties, asserting that constituted an irregularity or accident preventing plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. However, this tactic was an attempt to use juror affidavits to impeach the jury's own verdict. If a motion for a new trial is to be granted, an irregularity or accident in jury proceedings must exist independent of juror affidavits. Use of juror affidavits to prove irregularity or accident is clearly improper. The alleged misunderstanding of the jurors in this case did not fit any of the exceptions enumerated in Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). Motion for a new trial was properly denied. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

Discretion of Court: The granting of a new trial is within the sound discretion of the court and will be reversed only for manifest abuse of discretion. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990); Jankovich v. Neill, 153 M 337, 457 P2d 475 (1969); Kincheloe v. Rygg, 152 M 187, 448 P2d 140 (1968); Benner v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 150 M 97, 430 P2d 648 (1967); In re Maricich, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965); Herren v. Hawks, 139 M 440, 365 P2d 641 (1961). Note that in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), the Supreme Court held that the standard applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence will henceforth be de novo.

Instructions Based on Out-of-State Supreme Court Decision Rather Than Appellate Court Decision — No Error: Plaintiff complained that the District Court erred in refusing to give three jury instructions based on a Washington appellate court decision and in giving instead an instruction taken from the Washington Supreme Court appeal of the same case, which modified the appellate court decision. The District Court did not err in refusing to give instructions based on a theory of law rejected by the Washington Supreme Court. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990).

Irregularities in Jury Proceedings — Juror Affidavit — New Trial Denied: To support their motion for a new trial in District Court, plaintiffs submitted an affidavit of one juror, alleging that certain statements made by the bailiff during jury deliberations misled the jury and prevented clarification of the issue of proximate cause. Juror affidavits are admissible to show grounds upon which a new trial may be granted when a juror has personal knowledge of an alleged irregularity in the proceedings and the only other individual who has personal knowledge of the facts surrounding the irregularity is the individual who committed the alleged infraction. Only the facts upon which the alleged irregularities are based are admissible. Any allegations regarding the inner workings of the jury deliberations are inadmissible. The Supreme Court will not overrule the District Court's refusal to grant a new trial unless the evidence is clear and convincing that the trial court erred. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988), overruled as to standard of review in Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995), and distinguished in State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Contract Providing Attorney Fees as Part of Record — Fees Mentioned in Pretrial Order: A motion to amend pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., to include attorney fees was denied on the basis that defendants abandoned their claim for attorney fees by neglecting to state a claim in their pretrial order and because no evidence relative to fees was introduced at trial and therefore could not be added as a posttrial issue. The Supreme Court noted that attorney fees were contractually agreed to by the parties, so the issue of whether fees should be awarded was not one that would have been argued at trial. Further, since the contract was before the court as evidence and since the issue of attorney fees was raised twice in the pretrial order, the issue was not outside the court's record. The case was remanded for determination of reasonable attorney fees. Bell v. Richards, 228 M 215, 741 P2d 788, 44 St. Rep. 1467 (1987).

Grant of New Trial Not a New Action: The grant of a new trial by a District Court or the Supreme Court is not the filing of a new action and is limited to the original pleadings. Town Pump, Inc. v. District Court, 180 M 358, 590 P2d 1126 (1979).

Scope of New Trial: Under certain circumstances a District Court may order a new trial limited to the issue of damages. Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117, 35 St. Rep. 1878 (1978).

Motion Inadequate: Defendants' motion for new trial was inadequate and defective in its essential elements because it merely recited the statutory language of 25-11-102 without stating with particularity the precise facts or circumstances being relied upon in support of their motion. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978).

Distinction — Reopening Case: The time for filing motions under this rule applies when a party desires a new trial, not when a case is reopened to take further testimony which is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. Compton v. Alcorn, 171 M 230, 557 P2d 292 (1976).

Recomputation of Hours Not to Include New Evidence: Hearing on a case remanded for recomputation of hours worked by the plaintiff should not include the reception of new evidence, but merely a recalculation of evidence already in the records. Glick v. Dept. of Institutions, 165 M 307, 528 P2d 686 (1974).

Motions — Directed Verdict — New Trial — Relationship: Motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict raise the same question. They both question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict. Appeal will be accepted based upon insufficiency of the evidence notwithstanding failure to move for a new trial if motion was made for directed verdict. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

New Evidence Insufficient: Ex parte affidavit which alleged newly discovered evidence but was only cumulative in nature was insufficient in light of the record to authorize a new trial. Fisher v. Mitzel, 158 M 265, 491 P2d 186 (1971).

Motion Viewed in Light Most Favorable to Party Directed Against: The court must view motions for directed verdict and for new trials in light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is directed. Dieruf v. Gallaher, 156 M 440, 481 P2d 322 (1971).

Loss of Jurisdiction — Divorce Proceeding: The court exceeded its jurisdiction by determining paternity after entry of the original divorce decree. Relief was not sought under Rule 59 or Rule 60 as it could have been. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Effect of District Court Rules: Notwithstanding the fact that court rule considered failure to file a brief in support of a motion for new trial an admission that the motion was without merit, the court has the discretion to proceed with the motion in accordance with its own opinion. Crissey v. Highway Comm'n, 147 M 374, 413 P2d 308 (1966).

No Retroactive Effect of Rule: Defendant was entitled to appeal in spite of time limitation of section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P.), for filing bill of exceptions where motion for new trial was combined with motion to amend findings and request for review of facts, conclusions of law, and judgment since limitation under section 93-5606 did not apply prior to enactment of new Rules of Civil Procedure. Crissey v. Highway Comm'n, 147 M 374, 413 P2d 308 (1966).

Order Denying New Trial — Misstatement in Order: When motion for new trial would have been correct because it was not served within 10 days, but court's order stated that motion was dismissed because not "filed" within 10 days, order was correct because court understood grounds for dismissal. Clark v. Worrall, 146 M 374, 406 P2d 822 (1965).

Rules 59 and 62 Distinguished: The denial of a motion for new trial is not in effect a denial of a stay of proceedings to enforce a judgment. State ex rel. Dawson v. Butte, 145 M 316, 400 P2d 629 (1965).

Retrial of Summary Judgment: Propriety of motion for a new trial in a summary judgment proceeding was not questioned on appeal. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Disqualification — New Judge to Consider Motion: Where District Court did not grant a new trial on its own initiative but relators filed affidavits of disqualification against District Judge under section 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Supreme Court Rule No. 34), the District Judge was in error in not calling another judge to consider motions for new trial filed by defendants. State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963).

Erroneous Order — Corrected Nunc Pro Tunc: Court's nunc pro tunc order correcting erroneous contempt judgment was not in violation of Supreme Court's writ because the order was made before the writ was issued. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Time for Disqualification of Judge: Neither Rule 59 nor Rule 50(b) deals with the disqualification of a trial judge. A trial judge may be disqualified after the return of a verdict and before the motion for a new trial has been made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962).

NEW TRIAL GRANTED — PARTICULAR CASES

Incorrect Statutory Citation for New Trial — Grant of New Trial Affirmed When Other Statutory Criteria Met: The District Court granted defendants' motion for a new bench trial pursuant to 25-11-102(6), but noted that possibly other subsections might also apply. Plaintiff asserted that granting a new trial was reversible error because 25-11-103 states that a new bench trial may be granted only pursuant to 25-11-102(1), (3), and (4). The Supreme Court acknowledged the District Court's incorrect citation to 25-11-102(6), but nevertheless affirmed because sufficient grounds for a new trial also existed under 25-11-102(4). Although the District Court relied on the wrong subsection in support of its holding, it reached a proper result. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Service of Notice of Entry of Order of Judgment on Trust Beneficiaries Required: Trust beneficiaries are indispensable parties to formal statutory proceedings who are considered to have "appeared" as a matter of law and are entitled to receive notice of the proceedings and notice of entry of the order of judgment. In this case, defendant trust beneficiaries did not move for a new trial until 11 years after entry of the order of judgment, but because defendants never received notice of the entry of the judgment as required by 72-35-306, the statute of limitations on filing postjudgment motions had not expired when their motion for a new trial was filed with the District Court and therefore was properly granted. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Limiting Damages to Past Medical Expenses but Not Pain and Suffering: Renville was injured as a passenger in an automobile accident in 1995, and liability was not contested. Evidence was uncontroverted that Renville had subsequently experienced pain and suffering as a result of the accident. The jury was instructed to award damages for past and future medical expenses, loss of earnings and earning capacity, pain and suffering, and loss of the ability to pursue an occupation and an established course of life. However, the jury limited its verdict to only past medical expenses, so Renville sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the award and irregularities in the proceedings. On review, the Supreme Court noted that a jury may not disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion evidence. The court applied Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), in holding that if a jury fails to award damages when the only evidence of record supports an award, that verdict is not supported by substantial evidence and may be set aside. Renville was entitled to some award for damages for proved pain and suffering, and the Supreme Court remanded for new trial limited to the issue of damages. Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400, 57 St. Rep. 864 (2000). On remand, the District Court concluded that factual issues still existed as to the amount of Renville's past medical expanses and that the issues must be determined by a jury on retrial. The court found that the effect of the decision in Renville I, id., was to remand the entire issue of damages for a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. The decision in Renville I clearly stated that the award was limited to Renville's past medical expenses, which had been proved and awarded. Therefore, the law of the case precluded the District Court from revisiting the issue of Renville's past medical expenses on remand. It was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny Renville's motion for summary judgment and request for declaratory judgment on the issue of past medical expenses. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003). See also St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), and Carestia v. Robey, 2013 MT 335, 372 Mont. 438, 313 P.3d 169.

Irrelevant and Prejudicial Evidence of Consumption of Alcohol by Plaintiff: Violette pulled out of a store's parking lot in front of Havens, and the two collided. Havens sued the state, claiming negligent failure to place a stoplight at the parking lot entrance. It was not error to deny Havens' motion to exclude evidence of his alcohol consumption before the accident when the state opposed the motion by stating that it would show that the consumption was a cause of the accident. However, this forced Havens to introduce evidence of, and to address, his alcohol consumption. In addition, the state offered no evidence that Havens' alcohol consumption helped cause the accident and the state's medical expert and a law enforcement officer both testified that Havens was not negligent. Evidence of the alcohol consumption prejudiced the whole trial. It was reversible error to deny a motion for a new trial. Havens v. St., 285 M 195, 945 P2d 941, 54 St. Rep. 1108 (1997), followed in St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998), and distinguished in St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Jury's Use of Dictionary Definitions Conflicting With Instructions: The jury used an ordinary dictionary and a legal dictionary, improperly given to the jury by the bailiff at the jury's request, to look up the terms "proximate cause" and "prudent". The definitions relating to causation did not contain the foreseeability element that was contained in an instruction given to the jury. The jury's conduct constituted improper independent research on extraneous material that redefined the critical element of causation by effectively eliminating from the instruction any reference to foreseeability. This was sufficient to demonstrate probable prejudice and potential injury to defendant, against whom the jury returned a verdict in this action. At the very least, there was a reasonable probability that the jury's misconduct influenced its decision, and as a consequence, defendant's substantial rights were compromised, along with his right to a fair trial. The trial judge's denial of a new trial was reversed, and the case was remanded. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Motion for New Trial Not Denied When Opposing Party's Argument Based on Semantics: Riverview Lounge argued that Peck's motion for a new trial should have been denied because Peck's attorney listed the alleged particular grounds for a new trial under a section of his motion designated "Brief" rather than under the section designated "Motion". The Supreme Court held that such a technical flaw was not fatal to Peck's motion and that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion. Peck v. Riverview Lounge, Inc., 272 M 152, 900 P2d 270, 52 St. Rep. 678 (1995).

Newly Disclosed Evidence Wrongfully Withheld by Employer and Showing Wrongful Discharge: The trial court, in which a wrongful discharge plaintiff was granted a $70,000 jury verdict for damages, properly granted a new trial on the issue of damages on the basis that documents in the employer's files, requested by the plaintiff and not produced by the employer, but anonymously mailed to the plaintiff after the trial, showing that the employer had planned for some time to terminate the plaintiff, would have affected the damages award had they been available for the trial. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Agreement by Lower Court That Its Instructions Constituted Error: In a personal injury suit, the lower court granted the plaintiffs' motion to exclude all references to the findings of the OSHA administrative law judge so long as the plaintiffs did not question their experts on possible OSHA violations by the defendant. The judge allowed the defendant to cross-examine the plaintiffs' experts about possible conformance with OSHA standards by the defendant, and the judge submitted instructions to the jury presented by the defendant pertaining to those standards. After a verdict in favor of the defendant, the lower court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the basis that the instructions on OSHA standards were in error. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in granting a new trial. Griffith v. Mont. Power Co., 243 M 246, 794 P2d 692, 47 St. Rep. 1213 (1990). See also Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004), in which the District Court erred by not granting plaintiffs a new trial when defendant took unfair advantage of a motion in limine to preclude plaintiffs' line of questioning after defendant opened the door to the issue addressed in the motion. Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004).

Inconsistent Jury Findings — New Trial Granted: The District Court did not err in granting a new trial after finding that the jury was confused, that jury findings were inconsistent or in disregard of the court's instructions, and that it was too difficult to speculate as to how the jury arrived at its conclusions. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Motion for New Trial Erroneously Granted: A statement by defense counsel to jury in closing argument suggesting that "a fair verdict would be $30,000" was not a statement against interest setting lower limits of a verdict at $30,000. The District Court erred in granting a new trial on grounds that the $25,000 jury award to the plaintiff constituted inadequate damages when there was substantial credible evidence to support the verdict of the jury. Brown v. Markve, 216 M 145, 700 P2d 602, 42 St. Rep. 708 (1985). See also White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Jury Verdict Internally Inconsistent: The Supreme Court will not disturb a trial court's ruling regarding a motion for a new trial in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. In a nuisance action filed by home owners residing near a city dump, it was proper to order a new trial; the jury found that the city dump was the proximate cause of the nuisance but then found the home owners 90% comparatively negligent. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 211 M 430, 685 P2d 350, 41 St. Rep. 1471 (1984). A later appeal of a District Court ruling that the City of Great Falls was not negligent was affirmed in Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987).

Accident or Surprise — Change of Key Witness' Testimony: The ultimate issue in motor vehicle accident case was what caused tractor-trailer combination to overturn and slide into the other lane. Plaintiff introduced an accident scene diagram drawn by a state engineer from figures obtained by the investigating highway patrolmen. It placed the tractor-trailer's skid marks in the early part of the curve in which the overturn occurred, where the curve's radius was less than it was later in the curve, thus buttressing plaintiff's theory of the case. At trial, defendants recalled a highway patrolman, who testified that the patrolmen had incorrectly placed the skid marks on the diagram and that they should be placed farther into the curve, where the radius of the curve was sharper. The placement of the skid marks and the sharpness of the curve at the point of the skid were essential to resolution of the ultimate issue. Plaintiff was properly granted a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against because: (1) it was clearly shown that he was actually surprised; (2) the facts causing the surprise had a material bearing on the case; (3) the verdict or decision resulted mainly from those facts; (4) the surprise did not result from plaintiff's inattention or negligence; (5) plaintiff acted promptly and claimed relief at the earliest opportunity; (6) plaintiff used every means reasonably available at the time of the surprise to remedy it; and (7) the result of a new trial without the surprise would probably be different. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984), followed in In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988).

References to Matters Not Within Record Included in Closing Argument — New Trial Ordered: The Supreme Court ordered a new trial in a wrongful death action on the grounds that the final argument of a defense counsel to the jury was improper because reference was made to: (1) matters withdrawn from the record by instruction to the jury; (2) matters withdrawn from the record by order in limine; (3) facts never entered into the record; and (4) facts irrelevant to the legal issues involved in the case. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984). Despite repeated attorney misconduct warranting sanction on retrial, the District Court ruled that the misconduct was not of the magnitude of that found in Kuhnke I, supra, and that viewed in the context of the entire trial, the improper conduct did not impact the jury to such an extent as to require a new trial. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the verdict reached by two juries on two separate occasions hearing the same facts and noted that it was unlikely a third trial before a third jury would produce a different result. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 227 M 62, 740 P2d 625, 44 St. Rep. 895 (1987).

Trailer Swinging Into Wrong Lane When Driver Swerves to Avoid Collision — No Negligence — No New Trial: Undisputed evidence showed plaintiff was partly in defendant's lane on two-lane road while driving through a curve and that the approaching defendant responded by swerving to the right to avoid a head-on collision. The swerve caused a trailer that defendant was hauling behind his tractor-trailer truck to swing into plaintiff's lane and collide with plaintiff. There was no evidence that defendant was driving unsafely prior to that or that he was in any way negligent. Defendant acted reasonably and prudently, and plaintiff's actions supported a finding that he was the proximate cause of his injuries. The jury verdict found defendant was not negligent. It was an abuse of discretion and reversible error for the court to grant plaintiff a new trial, for there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 668 P2d 228, 40 St. Rep. 1349 (1983).

Motion for New Trial Erroneously Granted: Although the testimony of witnesses conflicted, substantial credible testimony elicited from on-the-scene witnesses corroborated defendant's version of a collision with the deceased pedestrian. The lower court erred when it granted plaintiffs' motion for new trial and to set aside the verdict of the jury because the judge relied on a line of conflicting testimony different than the testimony relied on by the jury. Yerkich v. Opsta, 176 M 272, 577 P2d 857 (1978).

Mistake or Inadvertence: Grant of new trial to permit plaintiff to give additional testimony on issue of damages only was not improper, notwithstanding that ground for relief was mistake or inadvertence and should have been given pursuant to Rule 60(b), where no intervening rights had attached in reliance upon judgment and no actual injustice would ensue. John J. Ming, Inc. v. District Court, 155 M 84, 466 P2d 907 (1970).

Erroneous Instructions — New Trial Based Upon: Court was correct in granting new trial because instructions on assumption of risk had been erroneously given. Jankovich v. Neill, 153 M 337, 457 P2d 475 (1969).

Inadequacy of Award — Abuse of Discretion: Court abused discretion in granting new trial "upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict in that the verdict awarded by the jury to the plaintiff is wholly inadequate" where there was conflict in evidence and where it was question for jury whether injuries suffered by passenger were caused by grossly negligent operation of car or whether passenger assumed risk of going into car driven by man who had several drinks. Heen v. Tiddy, 151 M 265, 442 P2d 434 (1968).

Jury Misconduct: New trial was properly granted when foreman of jury made independent investigation of accident scene after hearing testimony and informed other jury members of the results. Goff v. Kinzle, 148 M 61, 417 P2d 105 (1966), distinguished in Highway Comm'n v. Roth, 159 M 268, 496 P2d 1136 (1972).

Condemnation Proceeding: In condemnation proceeding where State appraised land at $18,000, condemnee appraised it at $95,000 and jury awarded condemnee $21,000, granting of new trial because award was inadequate was not such an abuse of trial judge's discretion as to warrant reversal in spite of the fact there was no rebuttal of State's only expert witness. Highway Comm'n v. Greenfield, 145 M 164, 399 P2d 989 (1965).

NEW TRIAL DENIED — PARTICULAR CASES

Jury Award Based on Contested Expenses — Sufficient Evidence to Support Verdict: Plaintiffs asserted that a new trial was warranted because the jury in a personal injury case returned a verdict of $9,873, which amounted to significantly less than plaintiffs' evidence of past and future medical expenses, loss of past and future wages, and pain and suffering. However, the District Court denied a new trial, and the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that if a jury award is insufficient to cover uncontested expenses, then it is not supported by substantial evidence, but that was not the case here. Evidence presented by both parties revealed a significant dispute in the nature, cause, and severity of the injury, the need for future treatment, the existence and amount of past and future wage loss, and pain and suffering. Based on the record of disputed expenses, there was substantial evidence to support the jury award, and the Supreme Court declined to retry the case or disturb the judgment, especially when the District Court had already upheld the sufficiency of the evidence on motion for a new trial. Jenks v. Bertelsen, 2004 MT 50, 320 M 139, 86 P3d 24 (2004).

Strongly Conflicting Evidence — Within Jury's Province to Determine Credibility: The Satterfields argued that there was not sufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict in a contract dispute over the construction of a house. The Supreme Court held that there was strongly contradictory evidence given by the two sides in the case, that apparently the jury had believed the Satterfields' opponent, and that there was substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict. Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff was injured when a donkey savagely bit her arm. Defendant treated her at the local hospital. Plaintiff endured several surgeries and eventually lost her arm below the elbow. She sued defendant, claiming that defendant's negligence subjected her to an increased risk of harm and lessened her chances for a better result. The jury found that defendant was negligent but that the negligence did not cause injury to plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence in the record to support the jury's verdict. Much of the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness was contradicted by defendant's expert witnesses. An attack upon a jury verdict alleging that it is not supported by the evidence is proper only when there is a complete absence of any credible evidence in support of the verdict. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to alter or amend the judgment or for a new trial. Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 1137 (1998), followed in Upky v. Marshall Mtn., LLC, 2008 MT 90, 342 M 273, 180 P3d 651 (2008), and in Stubblefield v. W. Yellowstone, 2013 MT 78, 369 Mont. 322, 298 P.3d 419.

Statements Regarding Value of Partnership Assets No Barrier to Presentation of Evidence — New Trial Denied: Wife argued for a new trial based on conflicting information compiled after trial regarding the value of the marital estate. With the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence could have been discovered prior to trial. Husband's trial statements concerning partnership assets did not materially thwart wife's ability to present her case, indicating lack of fraud, so a new trial was unwarranted. In re Marriage of Barnes, 251 M 334, 825 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 67 (1992).

Finding of Negligence Not Necessary in Every Accident: Plaintiff was a passenger in a truck involved in a collision in which each driver claimed the other was negligent, but the jury attributed negligence to neither. Plaintiff cited Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925 (1985), in claiming he was entitled to a new trial because that kind of accident cannot happen absent negligence and because a violation of basic traffic rules constitutes negligence per se. The Supreme Court distinguished Aemisegger because in that case, there was clear evidence of fault. The Supreme Court noted that simply because there is an accident does not mean someone must be negligent. The trial court did not err in refusing plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis that defendants were negligent as a matter of law. Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64, 48 St. Rep. 418 (1991).

Jury Instructions Not Founded in Evidence or Misstatement of Law — New Trial Denied: Plaintiffs sought a new trial on grounds that the trial court improperly refused to give plaintiffs' proffered instructions on termination of power of attorney, warranty, and fraudulent conveyance. However, the instructions were correctly refused because: (1) there were undefined legal terms in the instructions on termination of power of attorney that rendered the instructions ambiguous or unintelligible; (2) the giving of non-Uniform Commercial Code warranty instructions in a Uniform Commercial Code case was a technical defect and did not constitute a misstatement of law affecting the plaintiffs' rights; and (3) there was no evidence of fraudulent conveyance, rendering that instruction improper. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Personal Injury Award: Plaintiff, who turned down a $20,000 settlement offer and recovered only $7,800 from the jury, moved for a new trial on the basis that the verdict was contrary to the evidence presented at trial. The lower court's finding that substantial evidence existed to support the award (thereby exhausting its discretion to grant a new trial) was affirmed on appeal. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

No Objection to Jury View — New Trial Not Granted: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not granting a new trial when the jury was allowed to view the property prior to the time the plaintiff rested her case and in not giving a cautionary instruction. However, the record showed that plaintiff's counsel made no objection to the jury view and did not request a cautionary instruction. The Supreme Court found no District Court error for a procedure to which plaintiff did not object. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Right to Jury Trial — Equity Claim and Claim for Damages Tried in Single Proceeding: The District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new nonjury trial, ruling that an action under Title 49, ch. 2, is equitable in nature and implies no right to a trial by jury in a federal suit under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Act). Plaintiffs contended that the only damages sought were backpay and reinstatement. The Supreme Court found that the record disclosed that plaintiffs submitted evidence of damages other than backpay and reinstatement and concluded that a claim for relief under the Act and a legal claim for damages as a result of unlawful discharge were tried in a single proceeding, each claim arising out of common fact issues. The court held that the right to a jury trial encompassed both the claims under the Act and the legal claims for damages, and that the trial judge was bound by the jury's determination of facts on all issues. The Supreme Court further held that the District Court erred in granting a new nonjury trial, and the case was remanded with instructions to reinstate the jury verdict and enter judgment accordingly. Breese v. Steele Mtn. Enterprises, Inc., 220 M 454, 716 P2d 214, 43 St. Rep. 522 (1986).

Failure to Produce Evidence of Poor Health — Specious Allegation on Appeal: Husband's contention that the award of maintenance to his wife places a financial burden on him that he is unable to comply with is without merit. The sole basis of his motion for a new trial was his contention that he was not in good health. None of the statutory requirements for a new trial were presented, nor did the husband produce any evidence at trial that would establish his poor health. In re Marriage of Yadon, 216 M 59, 699 P2d 75, 42 St. Rep. 638 (1985).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Award — Error to Grant New Trial: District Court committed error when it granted a new trial based on inadequacy of damages when jury awarded plaintiff $2,000 of which no more than $700 was for pain and suffering caused by injuries received in automobile accident. In reversing the grant of new trial and ordering entry of judgment on the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court stated that the jury is not compelled to believe plaintiff's testimony and that to allow the District Court to simply substitute its judgment for that of the jury when there is substantial evidence to support the jury award would "create a bench supremacy and sap the vitality of jury verdicts". Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726, 41 St. Rep. 1800 (1984), distinguished in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Child Custody Dispute — Allegedly Unsafe Condition of Custodian's Yard Knowable Before Trial: There was no merit to husband's claim that new evidence warranted a new trial of divorce proceeding. Wife was granted custody of the child of the marriage, and the asserted new evidence, that part of the backyard where wife lived was bounded by a ditch, was available at the time of the trial and could have been ascertained by husband. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Divorce Proceeding — Counselor Testimony Available at Trial: Husband argued that a new divorce trial was justified by the fact that a psychiatrist who had counseled both parties prior to the dissolution of their marriage decided to testify. He refused to testify at the original hearing because the parties agreed that the information obtained by him in counseling would not be used in court. However, he was later willing to testify. He was available at the time of trial and could have been subpoenaed. The evidence did not come to the knowledge of husband after the trial, and husband lacked diligence as to the testimony. The materiality of the evidence was not so great as to produce a different result by the District Court. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying a new trial. Cherewick v. Cherewick, 205 M 75, 666 P2d 742, 40 St. Rep. 1106 (1983).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Lack of Diligence: Plaintiff who knew witness was crucial and could have learned the location of the witness by questioning his other witnesses was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of the fact that plaintiff located the witness after the trial. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

"Newly Discovered Evidence" — Prior Knowledge: Buyer looked at horse for sale, suggested it had a navicular disease, called seller later in the day to say he would take the horse, and the sale was concluded 2 days later. Upon discovering that the horse would not perform as advertised by seller, buyer returned the horse and sued for the purchase price. Defendant received a jury verdict, and buyer moved for a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of a veterinarian's finding, after buyer retrieved the horse after the trial, that the horse had a navicular disease and should not be ridden. Denial of a new trial was proper. Buyer initially suspected the disease existed, yet did not have the horse inspected. Fordyce v. Hansen, 198 M 344, 646 P2d 519, 39 St. Rep. 1043 (1982), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993).

Conflicting Though Substantial Evidence of Reason for Collision — New Trial Denied: The plaintiff and the defendant collided on the highway. At trial, the defendant successfully counterclaimed and the plaintiff appealed, claiming that there was insufficient evidence to support the jury verdict. An order denying a new trial will not be reversed when the evidence is conflicting if there is substantial evidence to support the verdict. When the surrounding circumstances make the testimony of a witness highly improbable or incredible, that testimony is not "substantial evidence". Here, the appellant argued that the physical evidence showed the respondent must have seen his turn signal and thus was at fault in running into the appellant's vehicle. The Supreme Court disagreed. It discussed several reasons why the inconsistencies between the testimony and the physical evidence might have occurred. The Supreme Court concluded that there was substantial evidence to support the jury verdict. Burns v. U & R Express, 191 M 343, 624 P2d 487, 38 St. Rep. 302 (1981), followed in Nelson v. Flathead Valley Transit, 251 M 269, 824 P2d 263, 49 St. Rep. 58 (1992).

Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence — No New Trial: A new trial may not be granted by the trial court when it finds substantial evidence in the record to support the verdict. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980). See also Pfau v. Richland County, 227 M 362, 739 P2d 950, 44 St. Rep. 1150 (1987).

"Newly Discovered Evidence" — Motion Properly Denied: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law, and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which at best was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977), followed in In re Marriage of Burner, 246 M 394, 803 P2d 1099, 48 St. Rep. 7 (1991).

Action on Contract to Enforce Payment — Denial of Motion: Substantial evidence to support the jury verdict and no abuse of discretion in denial were found in denying motion for new trial. Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), followed in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

False Testimony: When verdict was based upon false testimony, it was error to deny motion for new trial. Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., Inc., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

New Trial — Properly Denied — Negligence: Court interpreted law correctly and properly denied motion for a new trial. Gunderson v. Brewster, 154 M 405, 466 P2d 589 (1970); Knowlton v. Sandaker, 150 M 438, 436 P2d 98 (1968).

GENERAL

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Violation of Montana Rules of Civil Procedure — Effect on Motion for New Trial: Since counsel for petitioner violated Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., by giving notice of entry of judgment himself rather than having the clerk of court serve notice of entry of judgment, opposing counsel was not required to adhere to the 30-day period for filing of notice of appeal until proper service was made; thus the court committed no error in denying petitioner's motion to strike all posttrial motions as untimely. Pierce Packing Co. v. District Court, 177 M 51, 579 P2d 760 (1978).

Motions — Directed Verdict — New Trial — Relationship: Motions for a new trial and for a directed verdict raise the same question. They both question the sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict. Appeal will be accepted based upon insufficiency of the evidence notwithstanding failure to move for a new trial if motion was made for directed verdict. Davis v. Davis, 159 M 355, 497 P2d 315 (1972).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. And, see State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial. Disqualification, preventing a ruling on posttrial motions, after entry of findings and conclusions, was most recently allowed in Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Motion Ineffective as to Jurisdiction: If notice of intention to move for a new trial is given either after the time has expired or before the time has commenced to run, it is ineffective for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction. Calvert v. Anderson, 78 M 334, 254 P 184 (1927).

Purpose of Notice — Statutory Procedure Exclusive: The procedure to be followed in connection with a motion for new trial prescribed is exclusive, the notice of intention being the step initiating the proceeding, the chief function of which is to bring within the jurisdiction of the court those parties to the original action whose interests would be adversely affected by the granting of the motion. Calvert v. Anderson, 78 M 334, 254 P 184 (1927).

Jurisdiction Lost by Improper Timing — Orders Void: Where notice of intention to move for a new trial was not filed until 11 days after return of the verdict, the court was without jurisdiction to entertain it, and any orders made by it thereafter upon the assumption that the motion for new trial was still pending were void. Hence, an order made thereafter granting movant an extension of time within which to file his bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) was null, rendering the bill subject to a motion to strike from the record. Stabler v. Adamson, 73 M 490, 237 P 483 (1925).

Presumption of Regular Service: The presumption is that the notice of intention to move for new trial was served and filed in time unless the contrary affirmatively appears from the record. Best Mfg. Co. v. Hutton, 49 M 78, 141 P 653 (1914); State ex rel. Cohn v. District Court, 38 M 119, 99 P 139 (1909).

Withdrawal of Motion or Notice: Where a written motion for a new trial has been made, its withdrawal and the substitution of another after the time for filing a notice had expired does not constitute, in effect, a withdrawal of the notice of intention to move so as to operate as an abandonment of the proceeding. Wastl v. Mont. Union Ry., 13 M 500, 34 P 844 (1893).

TIME OF MOTION OR NOTICE

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

Calculating Time for Service of Motion — Days Before Saturday Christmas and New Year's Day Not Holidays: Burlington Northern alleged that it had timely served its motion for a new trial, thereby tolling the 30-day period for appealing the jury verdict in favor of Dunkelberger. The railroad argued that Christmas and New Year's Day had fallen on Saturday and, since the courts were closed on the preceding Fridays, those Fridays were holidays and were not to be counted in determining whether the motion for new trial had been served within the required 10 days. The Supreme Court held that the fact that those Fridays were holidays for state workers did not make them statutory holidays and that those Fridays counted as part of the 10-day period. Dunkelberger v. Burlington N. RR Co., 265 M 243, 876 P2d 218, 51 St. Rep. 499 (1994).

Time Allowed for Filing Motion for New Trial: This rule provides that a Rule 59(a), M.R.Civ.P., motion for a new trial must be filed within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. The day of mailing is excluded under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. Because notice of entry of judgment was served by mail, 3 days are added under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P. The combined total of days allowed under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule is 13 days. In re Marriage of Schmitz, 255 M 159, 841 P2d 496, 49 St. Rep. 919 (1992).

Belated Expert Opinion Constituting Newly Discovered Evidence: When presented with the question of whether an opinion of a trial expert, offered for the first time after final judgment and based on a fact asserted by the plaintiff and within her knowledge prior to judgment, constituted newly discovered evidence, the court declined to distinguish between opinion evidence and other kinds of evidence because the opinion evidence met the tests ordinarily required of newly discovered evidence. The failure to produce the evidence at trial must not have been caused by the moving party's lack of due diligence. The evidence must be admissible, credible, and of such a material and controlling nature as will probably change the outcome. Halse v. Murphy, 237 M 509, 774 P2d 418, 46 St. Rep. 1009 (1989), distinguished, on grounds of failure to exercise due diligence in producing required expert testimony, in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994).

Time for Motion to Amend Motion: Neither a motion to amend findings nor a motion for a new trial may be amended after the time allowed for filing the original motion has passed. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Time for Making — Failure to Serve as Effecting Denial: A motion for new trial may be made before or after entry of judgment subject to the limitation of 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment. If not served within the 10-day period, the motion is considered denied under the provisions of the last paragraph of Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Untimely Motion Equivalent to Motion for Relief From Judgment: A motion for new trial that is not timely may be considered as a motion under Rule 60 when it states grounds for relief under that rule. Nomenclature is unimportant. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

New Trial Motion Untimely: The District Court erred in granting a motion for new trial because the requirements of Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P., were not complied with. The notice of entry of judgment, although prepared and signed by Gilbert, was served on the Gordons by the Clerk of the Court on July 25, 1979. The motion for a new trial, however, was not filed or served on opposing counsel until January 1980, some 6 months later. This court will not disregard the 10-day time limitation. Additionally, there is no requirement that the notice of entry of judgment be signed by the Clerk or be prepared and given to the Clerk by the "prevailing party". In re Gordon, 192 M 499, 628 P2d 1117, 38 St. Rep. 887 (1981).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Suspended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Service After Findings and Before Judgment: Where movant filed a notice of motion to move for new trial 5 days after service of notice of the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law upon him, the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law, though not constituting a judgment, were equivalent to a decision and therefore, the notice of motion was timely. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Intent of Rule: The clear intendment of section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P.), providing that notice of motion of a new trial must be served and filed within 10 days after return of the verdict (referring to a jury trial), or within 10 days after receiving notice of the decision of the court (referring to a trial without a jury), was that the notice be given only after all the issues of fact necessary to a determination of the whole case upon the pleadings have been determined. Calvert v. Anderson, 78 M 334, 254 P 184 (1927).

Notice of Motion May Be Stricken: A party desiring to move for a new trial must, under section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P.), serve his notice of motion upon the adverse party within 10 days after verdict. If not served within that time it may be stricken from the files. La Bonte v. Mut. Fire & Lightning Ins. Co., 75 M 1, 241 P 631 (1925).

Notice on Same Day as Judgment: Though the notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on the same day that judgment was entered, with a fraction of a day intervening, such notice is not abortive because it was served and filed before the judgment was actually spread upon the judgment book. Where no question of priority arises it will be presumed that the clerk did his duty. State ex rel. Brown v. District Court, 55 M 158, 174 P 601 (1918).

Time for Service of Notice: A party intending to move for a new trial may do so by serving his notice within 10 days after notice of the entry of judgment, but not before. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

PARTIES SERVED

Definition of Adverse Parties: With respect to the definition of adverse parties upon whom notice must be served, section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P.), relating to motions for new trial, and section 93-8005, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 4, M.R.App.P., now superseded), relating to appeals, were on the same footing. In re Hardy's Estate, 133 M 536, 326 P2d 692 (1958).

Will Contest — Notice Not Required: Resident heirs summoned in a will contest but who did not appear are not adverse parties upon whom notice of motion for new trial must be served, even though no default was entered against them. In re Hardy's Estate, 133 M 536, 326 P2d 692 (1958).

Service of Defendants by Codefendant: Where one of several defendants served his notice of intention to move for a new trial and his notice of appeal upon the only one of his codefendants who had any interest in opposing the relief sought by the motion and appeal, the service was sufficient as against the objection that not all the adverse parties had been served. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

WAIVER OF SERVICE

Ability to Waive: Service of notice of intention to move for a new trial may be waived. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729; Curn v. Perkins, 40 M 588, 107 P 901 (1910); McAllister v. McDonald, 40 M 575, 106 P 882 (1910); Kenyon-Noble Lumber Co. v. School District, 40 M 123, 105 P 551 (1909); Harrigan v. Lynch, 21 M 36, 52 P 642 (1898); Territory v. Rehberg, 6 M 467, 13 P 132 (1887).

Extension of Time Not Allowed: The time for filing of notice of motion for a new trial cannot be extended either by order or stipulation, and therefore where such a notice was not filed until after the expiration of 10 days it was too late and was properly stricken from the records, the contention that the defect was waived by the actions of opposing counsel being of no avail. Dilts v. Brooks, 66 M 346, 213 P 600 (1923).

Facts Constituting Waiver: Where a notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed before entry of judgment, the opposing party waived the point that the notice was premature, by stipulating with movant that the latter might have additional time in which to file his bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) in support of his motion, by thereafter accepting service thereof without objection, and by raising no objection at the argument, other than that there had been delay in calling it up. Kenyon-Noble Lumber Co. v. School District, 40 M 123, 105 P 551 (1909).

NOTICE OF JUDGMENT

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Suspended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Attempts to Give Notice Insufficient: Where the record on appeal did not affirmatively show that counsel for appellant was present when judgment was entered, or that it was entered before an extension of time in which to file his bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) on motion for new trial and stay of execution were asked for and granted on May 2, and the Clerk of the District Court on May 6 attempted to advise him that the entry had been made 2 days before, and on May 15 counsel for respondent served formal notice upon him to that effect, appellant's notice of intention to move for new trial, served on May 21, was in time. Best Mfg. Co. v. Hutton, 49 M 78, 141 P 653 (1914).

Letter as Insufficient Notice: A letter to the plaintiff's counsel, written by the clerk of the court, informing him that a judgment for the defendant has been signed, is not a sufficient notice of the entry of judgment. Best Mfg. Co. v. Hutton, 49 M 78, 141 P 653 (1914).

Waiver of Notice: Though a party intending to move for a new trial may waive formal notice of the entry of judgment by instituting proceedings in support of his motion without it, such waiver may not be imputed to him where he inadvertently proceeds before he may properly do so. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

Type of Notice Contemplated by Rule: The notice of the entry of judgment contemplated by section 93-5605, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P.), was a legal notice, that is, such as was described in section 93-8501, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 5 and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P.), and served in the manner described in section 93-8502, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 5 and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P.). State ex rel. Cohn v. District Court, 38 M 119, 99 P 139 (1909).

Former Rule 59(c). Time for serving affidavits

Discretion of District Court to Grant or Deny Unanswered Motions: Following the District Court's entry of judgment, plaintiffs filed and served motions to amend the findings, for a new trial, and to alter the judgment. Defendants did not file a response to the motions within the 10 days allowed under this rule. Plaintiffs then moved that the motions be deemed admitted and well-taken as allowed under Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19). The court denied the motions, and plaintiffs argued that defendants' failure to file a response in the time allowed requires the court to grant the unanswered motions. However, Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R., does not remove the discretion of the District Court to grant or deny unanswered motions as it sees fit. Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285, 46 St. Rep. 1287 (1989).

Time of Hearing on Motion: Where notice of intention to move for a new trial was to be based on the minutes of court and affidavits but no affidavits were filed and no additional time for filing was obtained from the court, the moving parties had only 10 additional days after the 10-day period for filing affidavits in which to have the motion heard. State ex rel. Lake v. District Court, 131 M 404, 310 P2d 1055 (1957).

Extension of Time by Stipulation — Cumulative Effect: Where a finding and decision was filed on August 30 and on September 6 the parties stipulated that any party might have 30 days

"additional" time in which to give notice of intention to move for a new trial, and also 90 days "additional" time to file affidavits, and appellant gave notice for a new trial on October 7 and filed affidavits on January 3, the affidavits were filed on time since the effect of the stipulation was to give appellant 30 days in addition to the 4 days of the 10-day period not yet expired when the stipulation was made in which to serve notice and 90 days for filing affidavits, in addition to the 10-day period allowed after the service of notice. Hill v. McKay, 36 M 440, 93 P 345 (1908).

Former Rule 59(d). Time for ruling on motion

Time Limit for Filing for New Trial Constitutional — No Jurisdiction to Grant New Trial After Time Limit Runs: After the 60-day deadline for granting a new trial in this rule, the District Court granted plaintiff a new trial. Defendant appealed, saying that the District Court was without jurisdiction. On appeal, plaintiff argued that the time limit was unconstitutional and arbitrary and deprived plaintiff of procedural due process. Citing In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729, the Supreme Court noted that just because a rule is arbitrary does not mean that it should not be favored and that insisting on a firm time limit advances the cause of justice by bringing predictability to the legal process. The court concluded that the time limit is constitutional and that the District Court did not have jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a new trial after the time limit had run. Forsythe v. Leydon, 2004 MT 327, 324 M 121, 102 P3d 25 (2004), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729. See also Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978).

Improper Grant of New Trial After Time to Move for New Trial Expired: A substitute District Court Judge assumed jurisdiction of a marriage dissolution case 1 day after the husband moved for reconsideration or a new trial. The motion for a new trial was granted 76 days later. The wife contended that the court exceeded its jurisdiction because the motion was granted more that 60 days after being filed, in violation of Rule 52(d), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule. The husband argued that an equitable exception to the rules should be granted because the presiding judge was substituted between the time when the motion was filed and when it was ruled upon. The Supreme Court declined to make an exception, reiterating that the time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment are mandatory and strictly enforced. The District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering a new trial after the time to rule on the motion had expired, so the order was reversed. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Motion to Disqualify Other Party's Attorney Does Not Stay Sixty-Day Requirement for Judge to Rule on Motion to Vacate Default Judgment: Johnson's attorney obtained a default judgment on behalf of his client, and when an attorney appeared for the defendant and moved to have the default judgment set aside, Johnson's attorney moved to have the attorney disqualified because the trial court judge was related to a member of the defense attorney's law firm. The judge recused himself, and the new judge entered an order setting aside the default judgment. The Supreme Court held that the 60-day period for the lower court to rule on the motion to vacate ran from the time that the motion was filed, not from the time that the second judge assumed jurisdiction, and because the time had expired, the motion to vacate was considered denied. The lower court did not have jurisdiction over the issue and could not thereafter set aside the default judgment. Johnson v. Eagles Lodge Aerie 3913, 284 M 474, 945 P2d 62, 54 St. Rep. 984 (1997), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., for additional briefing time and must rule on a Rule 59(g) motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Failure to Follow Uniform Building Code as Negligence Per Se — Denial of Judgment N.O.V. Reversed: Rosauers Supermarket undertook remodeling for which ALSC was the architect. As a change order to the remodeling, Rosauers asked that a walk-in freezer be removed and that the access door to a walkway over the freezer be closed off. Unknown to Rosauers and its employee, Pierce, the door was never closed off even though the freezer was removed. Pierce was injured when he fell through a false ceiling after stepping off the walkway, assuming that the freezer was still in place and that it would support him. After a jury verdict finding no negligence on the part of ALSC, Pierce moved for judgment N.O.V., which was denied by virtue of the fact that the District Court failed to grant the motion within 45 days. The Supreme Court found that ALSC had knowledge of the change order and knew that without the access door being blocked, the door and walkway would leave an unsafe condition after the freezer was removed. Citing Herbst v. Miller, 252 M 503, 830 P2d 1268 (1992), the Supreme Court also found that failure to place a guardrail around the walkway in accordance with the Uniform Building Code caused an unsafe condition in violation of the code, which constituted negligence per se on the part of ALSC. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred when it denied Pierce's motion for judgment N.O.V. by failing to grant the motion with 45 days. Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Denial of Motion for Extension of Time Allowed for Filing Notice of Appeal as Appealable Order — Applicability of Forty-Five-Day Rule: The denial of a motion made pursuant to former Rule 5(a)(5), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), for an extension of the time allowed for filing a notice of appeal is an appealable order. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's extension request because the 45-day limit for filing a motion for relief from summary judgment, as set out in Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., and this rule, had expired. It was the responsibility of plaintiff's counsel to be aware of the 45-day rule, and lack of knowledge of a clear rule of civil procedure is not an excuse for relief from the rules. Sadowsky v. Glendive, 259 M 419, 856 P2d 556, 50 St. Rep. 860 (1993), citing Shields v. Pirkle Refrigerated Freightlines, 181 M 37, 591 P2d 1120 (1979), and distinguishing Zell v. Zell, 172 M 496, 565 P2d 311 (1977).

Untimely Appeal Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal filed after the mandatory time limit imposed under this rule as untimely filed pursuant to Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 1915 (1988). See also Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995).

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987). However, see Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 259 M 379, 856 P2d 969, 50 St. Rep. 842 (1993), ruling that the District Court lost jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a new trial for reasons stated in plaintiff's motion 45 days after filing of the motion despite the fact that judgment had not been entered.

Notice of Denial of Motion Not Required — Appeal Period: Appellant's posttrial motion for a new trial was considered denied upon failure of the District Court to rule on it for 45 days, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. No notice of such denial is required under Rule 5, M.R.Civ.P. The 30-day period for appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), begins to run upon expiration of the 45-day period of Rule 59(d). Mortensen Constr. Co. v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 415, 708 P2d 1006, 42 St. Rep. 1699 (1985).

Failure to Obtain Continuance — No Invalidation of Proceeding: Following service of the notice of entry of judgment, the defendants filed a timely motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, hearing on the motion was not held within 10 days of service as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. However, the hearing was within the total of 40 days which Rule 59(d) allows for the hearing. The notice of hearing was given within the 10-day period. The defendant's technical failure to obtain a continuance from the trial court is not a sufficient reason to invalidate the proceedings when the hearing is held within the period prescribed by the rule. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Jurisdiction Over Appeal of Untimely Motion, Hearing, or Order:

Summary judgment was entered against appellant by the District Court on November 25, 1980. On December 4, 1980, he filed his motion to alter or amend the summary judgment. He noticed the hearing on the motion for December 15, 1980. Under Rule 59(g), the motion was timely filed, but under this subsection, the hearing was set 1 day too late. The time for hearing expired December 14, 1980. Therefore, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running that date and his appeal which was filed on February 4, 1981, was not timely and was dismissed. Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. of Idaho, 203 M 69, 661 P2d 12, 39 St. Rep. 2046 (1982).

Following an adverse ruling in a quiet title action, the plaintiff and defendant submitted a motion on November 17, 1981, to amend the judgment, but the motion was not noticed for hearing and was not ruled on by the District Court until December 24, 1981. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the motion was considered denied if the District Court had not ruled within 15 days of the filing of the motion, the motion was considered denied on December 2, 1981, and the appeal was therefore untimely taken, denying the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982); accord, In re Marriage of Page, 39 St. Rep. 2360 (1982) (apparently not reported in Pacific Reporter or Montana Reports).

On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982).

The lower court order attempted to modify the findings of fact and conclusions of law more than 15 days after submission of appellant's posttrial motions. By exceeding the time period mandated by Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., the District Court divested itself of jurisdiction to determine the motion, and its order was a nullity. The original notice of appeal from the second decree, based on that order, was untimely under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction as to the second decree. However, the jurisdictional defect is cured by the appellants having lodged an appeal to the first decree. Sell v. Sell, 193 M 88, 630 P2d 222, 38 St. Rep. 956 (1981).

Motion to Vacate Default Judgment — Time Limits Jurisdictional: The 10th day after moving to vacate a default judgment under Rule 60 (b)(1), M.R.Civ.P., fell on July 6, and a hearing set for that date was, by stipulation, continued to July 17. On July 17 the District Court vacated and reset the hearing for October 7 because of calendar conflict. The hearing was held on October 7, and the order was dated October 20. The motion to set aside the default was beyond the jurisdiction of the District Court because 30 days after July 6 (August 5) was the last day the District Court had jurisdiction, and no decision being made by that date, the motion was considered denied and the 30 days for appeal began to run. Wallinder v. Lagerquist, 201 M 212, 653 P2d 840, 39 St. Rep. 2063 (1982), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Hearing Continued — Motion Not Considered Denied: A motion is not considered denied 15 days after it was submitted when a hearing was set within 10 days of submission, then, by stipulation of counsel, it was continued for less than 30 days and the subsequent hearing and ruling complied with the provisions of this rule. Lilienthal v. District Court, 200 M 236, 650 P2d 779, 39 St. Rep. 1711 (1982).

Hearing on Motion to Vacate to Be Within Ten Days of Service: The District Court entered judgment on May 22, 1980. On May 22, 1981, the defendant served plaintiff with a motion to vacate the judgment pursuant to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. On June 3, 1981, the District Court set a hearing on the motion for June 30, 1981. Because the District Court failed to hold the hearing within 10 days after the motion was served, the motion was considered denied on June 1, 1981. Lerum v. Logue, 198 M 194, 645 P2d 418, 39 St. Rep. 873 (1982).

Failure to Serve Within Time Limitation as Effecting Denial: A motion for new trial may be made before or after entry of judgment subject to the limitation of 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment contained in Rule 59(b), M.R.Civ.P. If not served within the 10-day period, the motion is considered denied under the provisions of the last paragraph of this rule. Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165, 39 St. Rep. 687 (1982).

Extension of Hearing Date on Motion to Amend — What Suffices for Compliance With Time Requirements: The wife appealed from an amended decree dissolving her marriage, granting child custody, awarding support, and dividing the property of the marriage. The appellant filed and served a motion to amend the judgment. Including 3 days for mailing, the hearing on that motion was either required to be held within 13 days or to be continued by the court within 13 days. The District Court entered an order setting a hearing date on the appellant's and respondent's motions to amend, which order was filed on the last day of the 13-day period. The order constituted a continuation of the hearing date on the motions to alter or amend. That order did set a hearing date within a 30-day period required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The District Court then ruled on the motions to alter or amend within 5 days following the hearing. Therefore, the District Court's actions regarding the petitioner's motions to alter or amend the original decree complied with the time requirements of the rule. The amending order of the District Court was therefore valid. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Time for Appeal Following Motion for New Trial Made Without Hearing — Time Limits of Rules Jurisdictional Regardless of Stipulation: Where, following a judgment against the defendant for damages caused by fraudulent misrepresentation and breach of warranty, the defendant and plaintiff orally agreed to waive the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, filed on April 23 and denied by the court on May 15, the defendant's notice of appeal filed on June 12 was untimely and the plaintiff's motion to dismiss the appeal was granted. Because no hearing was held on the motion for a new trial, the motion was considered denied, under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., 10 days after it was made and the time for appeal expired on June 2. The defendant's argument that the stipulation meant the motion for a new trial would be considered submitted "at the completion of briefing" cannot extend the time for the court's ruling, as the time limits imposed by the rules of procedure are mandatory and the parties may not by stipulation confer jurisdiction on the court beyond the time provided by the rules. Marvel Brute Steel Building, Inc. v. Bass, 189 M 480, 616 P2d 380, 37 St. Rep. 1670 (1980), distinguished in In re Marriage of Bryant, 276 M 317, 916 P2d 115, 53 St. Rep. 412 (1996).

Time Limit for Hearing Motion for New Trial: The District Court had no jurisdiction to grant a new trial where the motion for new trial was made on January 25, but the hearing was not had until March 19. Oster v. Oster, 186 M 160, 606 P2d 1075 (1980), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Motion for a New Trial — Time for Notice of Appeal Suspended: A judgment was entered against the appellant May 31. On June 6, appellant mailed a motion for a new trial and for extension of the time for filing briefs. On June 11 the District Court gave appellant until June 25 to file its brief, which appellant did on that date. On July 20 the District Court denied appellant's motion for a new trial without hearing, and on August 2 the appellant mailed his notice of appeal. Under these circumstances the notice of appeal was timely filed, since the filing of appellant's motion for a new trial suspended the running of the time in which to file a notice of appeal and the District Court's order extending the time for filing supporting briefs must by necessary implication extend the time for ruling on that motion. The 10-day period for ruling on the motion did not begin to run until the appellant's brief was filed within the time period allowed by the court. The motion for a new trial was automatically denied when it was not acted upon within 15 days. Appellant thereafter had 30 days in which to file its notice of appeal, which was done on August 3. Britton v. Burlington N., Inc., 184 M 107, 601 P2d 1192 (1979).

Ruling on Motion — Mandatory Time Limitation: It was error for the court to rule on a motion to alter or amend judgment after expiration of the 15-day time period measured from the date of submission of the motion. Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978).

Disqualification of Judge — Remand by Supreme Court — Time Limits Inapplicable: Where Supreme Court vacated orders of judge who had been disqualified and remanded motion for new trial for hearing before new judge, the time limits of this rule were not applicable since there was no final judgment from which time limits could be computed. Kamp Implement Co. v. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc., 166 M 435, 533 P2d 1072 (1975).

Failure to Comply: Default judgment should not have been set aside when, under rule, the maximum amount of time by which case could have been extended would have been 55 days from the date of service of the motion, and when 245 days elapsed from date of service of the motion until it was ruled upon. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Time Limits Exceeded: Default judgment should not have been set aside when time extension limits of Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., were exceeded. Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973).

Failure to Comply — Reversible Error: Granting of new trial was reversible error where time limits set forth in this rule were disregarded. Cain v. Harrington, 161 M 401, 506 P2d 1375 (1973), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Ruling After Time Limitation Void: Under this rule, once the self-executing denial of a motion becomes effective any subsequent order by the court concerning that motion is outside the court's jurisdiction and consequently void. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Untimely Appeal From Denial of Motion for New Trial: When motion for new trial was filed without notice of hearing, the motion was automatically denied 10 days after service notwithstanding letter from clerk notifying movant of denial on some other date. Appeal filed later than 60 days after denial of the motion was untimely. Leitheiser v. Mont. St. Prison, 161 M 343, 505 P2d 1203 (1973).

Discretion Exhausted When Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict: Although the granting of a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence is a discretionary power of the District Court which will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion, the District Court's discretion is exhausted when it finds substantial evidence to support the verdict. Kincheloe v. Rygg, 152 M 187, 448 P2d 140 (1968).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. And, see State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial. Disqualification, preventing ruling on posttrial motions, after entry of findings and conclusions, was most recently allowed in Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Former Rule 59(e). On initiative of court

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987). However, see Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 259 M 379, 856 P2d 969, 50 St. Rep. 842 (1993), ruling that the District Court lost jurisdiction to grant plaintiff a new trial for reasons stated in plaintiff's motion 45 days after filing of the motion despite the fact that judgment had not been entered.

When Time Limits Inapplicable: The inherent power of the court to enter such orders as are necessary to enforce a judgment is not limited by the time limits in Rules 59 and 60, M.R.Civ.P., because such orders are interlocutory orders, not final ones. Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), followed in In re Marriage of Blair, 271 M 196, 894 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 401 (1995).

Motion Combined With Motion to Alter Judgment — Time Limits: Combined motion for new trial and to alter, amend, and supplement findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment was not subject to time limits of section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P.), requiring prompt hearing on new trial motion and superseded by this rule. State ex rel. Rozan v.

District Court, 147 M 532, 416 P2d 19 (1966). See also Crissey v. Highway Comm'n, 147 M 374, 413 P2d 308 (1966).

Amendment Mandated: Court was required to amend judgment upon remand. Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Judge's Discretion to Prevent Miscarriage of Justice: The jury is delegated the task of finding the facts, but the trial judge has the discretion to prevent a miscarriage of justice by granting a new trial if there is an insufficiency of evidence to support the verdict. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965), explained in Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., Inc., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

Purpose of Rule: The purpose of this rule is to give a trial judge power to prevent what he considers a miscarriage of justice. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965); State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 248, 384 P2d 490 (1963).

Purpose — Scope — Appellate Review: The rule's purpose is to grant the judge discretion to prevent miscarriages of justice. The scope of the rule extends to all interpretations of former statutes preceding the rule. The ruling should not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is proved. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965), explained in Morris v. Corcoran Pulpwood Co., Inc., 154 M 468, 465 P2d 827 (1970).

Scope of Rule: This rule permits the trial judge to order a new trial on his own initiative for the same reasons one could be ordered pursuant to 25-11-102 and is subject to the same interpretations as expressed in previous opinions on motions for new trials before adoption of the rule. Campeau v. Lewis, 144 M 543, 398 P2d 960 (1965).

Disqualification of Judge: No disqualifying affidavit can deprive the court of jurisdiction to grant a new trial on its own initiative under this rule. State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963), modifying State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962).

Filing Motion for Disqualification Before Motion for New Trial: A judge may be disqualified after return of verdict but before new trial motion was made. State ex rel. Bellon v. District Court, 140 M 447, 373 P2d 314 (1962); Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928); Hill v. Nelson Coal Co., 40 M 1, 104 P 876 (1909); State ex rel. Carelton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905). But see State ex rel. Cline v. District Court, 142 M 278, 384 P2d 490 (1963); State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 145 M 287, 400 P2d 648 (1965), where the doctrine was criticized and the statute was considered improperly construed when disqualification is permitted pending a motion for a new trial. And see State ex rel. Wilson v. District Court, 143 M 543, 393 P2d 39 (1964), where the Supreme Court refused to follow the interpretation given the civil statute and declined to permit the disqualification of a judge in a criminal case following verdict and before hearing upon a motion for a new trial. Disqualification, preventing a ruling on posttrial motions after entry of findings and conclusions, was most recently allowed in Macpherson v. Smoyer, 191 M 53, 622 P2d 188, 37 St. Rep. 2079 (1980).

Former Rule 59(f). Order granting new trial

Rationale Set Out in Initial Order Sufficiently Specific to Warrant New Trial: Plaintiff asserted that the District Court erred in granting defendants' motion for a new trial because the court did not set out its rationale with sufficient specificity. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although the District Court incorrectly assumed that its very detailed supplemental findings and conclusions would become part of its order granting a new trial, the court's rationale set out in its initial three-page order was sufficient to apprise the parties and the Supreme Court of the rationale underlying the ruling granting a new trial, and the District Court was affirmed. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Prejudicial Effect of Misconduct of Defense Counsel — New Trial Properly Granted: Even though defendant may have presented sufficient evidence to prevail against plaintiff's motion for judgment as a matter of law, the District Court nevertheless properly granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial after finding that the defense counsel's misconduct prejudiced plaintiff's right to a fair hearing and resolution of the case. The trial judge is in the best position to determine the prejudicial effect of an attorney's conduct. Even when there is substantial evidence supporting a jury's verdict, the trial court has an overriding duty to prevent a miscarriage of justice by granting a new trial if the misconduct of counsel prevents an opposing litigant from having a fair trial on the merits. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

No Error in Failure to Grant Mistrial Motion for "Error" Caused by Movant: Garrison brought a civil action against a real estate broker and others for rescission of a sale of real property on Flathead Lake. Garrison was asked by the District Court to estimate the amount of time required for trial and estimated 4 days, but those days were used almost exclusively for presentation of Garrison's case. Trial was rescheduled for October but was reset for December, with the consent of all counsel. In November, Garrison moved for a mistrial, claiming that the District Court's grasp of the issues was dulled by the intervening delay between the completion of his case in chief and presentation of the defendants' case. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in denying Garrison's motion for a mistrial because the District Court relied upon the judgment of Garrison's counsel to estimate the original number of days needed for trial (which were all taken up by Garrison's case in chief, thus necessitating rescheduling of the defendants' case) and because Garrison agreed to the later rescheduling. Citing Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 272 M 146, 900 P2d 281 (1995), the Supreme Court said that as a general rule, it would not put the trial court in error for a procedure in which the appellant has acquiesced or participated or to which no objection was made. The Supreme Court also noted that Garrison had not demonstrated how he was prejudiced by the delay, beyond his general assumption that the memory of the District Court would be dulled by the delay. Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997).

No Abuse of Discretion in Failure to Grant Mistrial Because of Testimony Concerning Costs and Attorney Fees: In the course of a lawsuit against his insurer for failure to settle a claim resulting from hail damage to his wheat crop, Dees testified that he had incurred substantial expense for costs and attorney fees in bringing the action against the insurer. The insurer moved for a mistrial, which was denied, and the jury subsequently awarded Dees a large punitive damages judgment. The Supreme Court held that it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny the motion for a mistrial. The District Court's findings and conclusions attributed the punitive damages award to the insurance company's dogmatic position that the crop was not damaged by hail and to the haughtiness of its witnesses. Because the District Court observed the trial, it is reasonable to infer that the District Court Judge considered the reference to costs to be comparatively insignificant. The District Court therefore did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a mistrial. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Appeal of Grant of New Trial Made After Second Trial — Moot by Failure to Object or Timely Appeal: Following a trial on the distribution of marital property, wife requested and the District Court ordered a new trial. Husband waited until after the second trial to object to the order, contending that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial because: (1) wife was incorrectly allowed to argue matters additional to those raised in the motion for a new trial; (2) the court did not rule on his motion to reconsider the order granting a new trial; and (3) the court did not state with particularity the reasons for granting a new trial. The Supreme Court held that husband's grounds for appeal must fail because he failed to object or bring an appeal in a timely fashion. The question of the propriety of the trial court's order is one that should have been considered earlier and was rendered moot by the fact that the second trial had already occurred. Husband's attempt to raise the issue for the first time on appeal was barred by the doctrine of laches. In re Marriage of Danelson, 253 M 310, 834 P2d 1382, 49 St. Rep. 597 (1992).

Prejudicial Closing Argument Made by Attorney for One of Several Defendants — Plaintiff Entitled to New Trial Against All Defendants: In a wrongful death action involving several defendants, when a new trial was ordered because of several improper statements made in his closing argument by one defendant's attorney, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial with respect to all of the defendants because it was impossible to separate the defendants in considering the effect of the prejudice created by the argument of the lawyer for one of the defendants. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984), followed in Rieger v. Coldwell, 254 M 507, 839 P2d 1257, 49 St. Rep. 768 (1992), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998), and Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999). Despite repeated attorney misconduct warranting sanction on retrial, the District Court ruled that the misconduct was not of the magnitude of that found in Kuhnke I, supra, and that viewed in the context of the entire trial, the improper conduct did not impact the jury to such an extent as to require a new trial. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the verdict reached by two juries on two separate occasions hearing the same facts and noted that it was unlikely a third trial before a third jury would produce a different result. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 227 M 62, 740 P2d 625, 44 St. Rep. 895 (1987).

Appeal Dismissed — Reasons Not Contained in Order for New Trial: In granting plaintiffs a new trial under this section, the trial court entered an order stating that there had been "good cause shown". No further reason for the new trial was given by the court. Defendants appealed, and 3½ months after entry of the notice of appeal, the trial court filed a document with the Supreme Court entitled "Certification of Issues on Appeal in Granting Motion for New Trial". The Supreme Court declined to consider the certification in place of the original order granting a new trial and dismissed the appeal for failure to comply with this rule. Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 656 P2d 825, 40 St. Rep. 35 (1983), followed in Campbell v. Johnson, 246 M 122, 802 P2d 1262, 47 St. Rep. 2292 (1990).

Order for New Criminal Trial to Include Grounds: This rule is applicable to a motion for a new trial in a criminal case filed under 46-16-702. St. v. Williams, 193 M 432, 632 P2d 328, 38 St. Rep. 1253 (1981), distinguished in St. v. Hall, 203 M 528, 662 P2d 1306, 40 St. Rep. 621 (1983).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the State since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway in the vicinity of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979), overruled, in part, by Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 656 P2d 825, 40 St. Rep. 35 (1983).

New Trial Granted Summarily: This rule makes it clear the time is past when a District Court can summarily grant a new trial and rely on the Supreme Court to provide a legally adequate reason for its order. Ballantyne v. The Anaconda Co., 175 M 406, 574 P2d 582 (1978).

Altering or Amending Commissioners' Award: Court could not use this rule to validate its altering and amending commissioners' award in eminent domain proceeding notwithstanding the fact that the award was not in accordance to the court's instructions. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Former Rule 59(g). Motion to alter or amend a judgment Order Vacating Initial Parental Rights Order — Abuse of Discretion: In an initial order, the District Court refused to grant parental rights to the biological father of a minor child, but in a second order, the District Court, relying upon former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), or, alternatively, 40-6-118, vacated the initial order and granted parental rights to the biological father. The biological mother and her husband appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding the District Court erred in vacating the initial order under former Rule 59(g), as the biological father's argument constituted an improper "second bite at the apple". The District Court lacked jurisdiction to vacate the initial order under 40-6-118 because 40-6-118 does not authorize modifications to 40-6-116(1), which provides that a court's determination regarding the existence of the parent-child relationship is determinative for all purposes. In re Marriage of Johnson, 2011 MT 255, 362 Mont. 236, 262 P.3d 1105.

No Loss of Jurisdiction When Fees Not Ruled Upon — Judgment Not Final Until Inclusion of Postjudgment Order on Fees: Upon entry of final judgment against the defendants, the court expressly reserved jurisdiction to rule on the plaintiff's motion for attorney fees. The plaintiff filed its motion for fees as a motion to alter or amend judgment, which the defendants claim was denied by operation of former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held, citing Harding v. Garcia, 2007 MT 120, 337 Mont. 274, 159 P.3d 1083, that the judgment wasn't final until the District Court addressed the issue of attorney fees and costs in the order, noting that Rule 4(1)(a) of the Rules of Appellate Procedure had been amended to address this issue. Bitterroot River Protective Ass'n v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2011 MT 51, 359 Mont. 393, 251 P.3d 131.

Waiver of Construction Lien Arguments Not Raised at Trial: Defendant argued in a post-trial motion that the property description in a lien notice was insufficient and that plaintiff failed to establish a valid construction lien. The District Court dismissed the arguments, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant failed to raise the issues in the pretrial order or to object to the admissibility of the property description at trial and thus waived the arguments for purposes of appeal. JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912.

No Error in Denial of Untimely Motion to Amend Arbitration Award Containing Mathematical Error in Calculation of Attorney Fees: Defendant filed a motion under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., to modify an arbitrated award of attorney fees that was $110,000 higher than the amount claimed by plaintiff's counsel. The District Court denied the motion and the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the award was time barred. Although a motion to amend an award is proper to modify an arbitration award that contains a mathematical error, the motion must be filed within 90 days of delivery of a copy of the award to the applicant pursuant to 27-5-313, or a correction may be requested of the arbitrator pursuant to 27-5-217. Defendant never requested a change of the award by the arbitrator and failed to challenge the calculation until more than 1 year after the award. Thus, even though the award was significantly inflated because of the mathematical error, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's Rule 59(g) motion to alter or amend the judgment. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009).

Amendment of Final Judgment — Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Costs and Fees When No Entry of Final Judgment Filed: A party may appeal from a final judgment. A final judgment conclusively determines the rights of the parties and settles all claims in controversy in an action or proceeding, including any necessary determination of the amount of costs or attorney fees awarded or sanctions imposed. In this case, neither party served notice of entry of judgment, so the District Court retained jurisdiction to alter or amend the judgment because the 10-day period for filing a motion to amend the judgment had not begun to run. Thus, defendant's motion for an award of attorney fees was timely, even though it was filed almost 7 weeks after summary judgment, and the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were warranted and if so, the amount of the fees. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2008 MT 329, 346 M 162, 194 P3d 650 (2008).

Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment Considered Denied if Not Ruled on Within Sixty Days: Pursuant to Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to alter or amend a judgment is considered to be denied by operation of law if the motion is not ruled upon within 60 days of filing. Meloy v. Speedy Auto Glass, Inc., 2008 MT 122, 342 M 530, 182 P3d 741 (2008).

Motion for Reconsideration Equated to Motion to Alter or Amend — Appeal Deadline Applicable: In a dissolution proceeding, the District Court entered its findings of fact concerning the value of a marital gift. Fifteen days later, the wife filed a motion with the court seeking reconsideration of the factual findings and asking the court to amend its order pursuant to this rule, but the motion was denied. About 6 months later, the wife filed a notice of appeal. The wife asserted that the motion was timely because the husband never filed a notice of entry of judgment, and the time for filing an appeal generally runs from the date of filing of final judgment. However, under former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a notice of entry of judgment is not required to begin the running of the time for filing an appeal when a motion is made under certain rules, including Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court noted that there is no motion for reconsideration under the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, but because the wife's motion was made pursuant to this rule, it was considered to be a motion to alter or amend the judgment. Thus, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running from the time that the motion was denied, and the motion filed 6 months later was filed too late for consideration. Horton v. Horton, 2007 MT 181, 338 M 236, 165 P3d 1076 (2007).

District Court Divested of Jurisdiction to Consider Motion for Reconsideration Following Notice of Appeal: Plaintiff filed a collection action against the Birnels for payment of medical services. The Birnels then filed a third-party action against their health insurer, alleging breach of contract and unfair trade practices. When the insurer failed to answer the complaint, the District Court entered a default judgment against the insurer. The insurer moved to set aside the default on grounds that the complaint was improperly sent to an old address. The District Court agreed and set aside the default judgment and allowed the insurer to answer the complaint. The Birnels filed a motion for reconsideration of the order setting aside the default judgment, and the insurer then moved to strike the reconsideration motion. The Birnels filed a notice of appeal from the order granting the insurer's motion to set aside the default judgment. The following day, the District Court granted the Birnels' motion for reconsideration, and the insurer appealed, arguing that the notice of appeal terminated the District Court's jurisdiction over the case and that granting the motion for reconsideration was thus erroneous. The Supreme Court agreed with the insurer. This rule provides for motions to alter or amend a judgment, but because the Birnels' motion to reconsider did not reference Rule 59 or discuss a manifest error of law, it could not be considered a motion to alter or amend the judgment, but merely regurgitated arguments that the District Court had already considered and rejected. A motion for reconsideration of previously decided issues is not authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court concluded that the Birnels' notice of appeal divested the District Court of jurisdiction to rule on the reconsideration motion, so the Supreme Court reversed and remanded. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2006 MT 148, 332 M 410, 138 P3d 802 (2006), following Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256 (1997).

On remand, the District Court, sua sponte, reinstated the original default judgment on grounds that the court erred in previously setting aside the default judgment because the insurer had failed to establish good cause to set the default judgment aside. The insurer appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Rule 55(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), does not allow a District Court to enter a default judgment sua sponte without application by a party and without written notice to the party against whom judgment is sought. The District Court abused its discretion by doing so. ABC Collectors, Inc. v. Birnel, 2008 MT 35, 341 M 310, 176 P3d 1067 (2008).

Hearing Not Required Before Decision Made to Award Attorney Fees: Plaintiffs contended that because the District Court awarded but did not hold a hearing to set a specific amount for attorney fees within 60 days after granting summary judgment to defendants, the court lost jurisdiction to amend the judgment to award attorney fees. The Supreme Court noted that there is a distinction between a court's decision to award attorney fees and a court's determination of the proper measure of fees. An evidentiary hearing must be held before attorney fees may be awarded in any specific amount, but a hearing need not be held before a court may decide to award attorney fees. Thus, 51 days after defendants filed their motion, the District Court had authority to grant defendant's request for attorney fees. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006), following Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004), and In re Estate of Burrell, 2010 MT 280, 358 Mont. 460, 245 P.3d 1106.

Motion to Amend Judgment Inappropriate When Testimony and Evidence Available in Original Proceedings: Plaintiff moved to alter or amend a summary judgment order based on affidavits and evidence regarding whether a franchise existed between the parties. The District Court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The affidavits and evidence were not considered newly discovered or previously unavailable, and plaintiff failed to establish that the District Court had the evidence available during the original proceeding, so a motion to alter or amend the judgment was inappropriate. Hi-Tech Motors, Inc. v. Bombardier Motor Corp. of Am., 2005 MT 187, 328 M 66, 117 P3d 159 (2005). See also Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

Improper for District Court to Look Beyond Language of Amended Judgment Decree When Judgment Not Ambiguous or Obscure: Following remand of Harland v. Anderson, 169 M 447, 548 P2d 613 (1976), which awarded defendant summary judgment on plaintiff's claims for a prescriptive easement across defendant's property, the District Court took up plaintiff's alternative request to condemn an easement across defendant's land for plaintiff's use. In 1983, the court granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement, and defendant moved to amend the judgment to provide compensation for the taking of the easement, but the motion was denied. The parties then entered a stipulation providing $7,500 for defendant's attorney fees and costs, and the parties agreed not to appeal the amended judgment. The stipulation was approved. Almost 20 years later, plaintiffs commenced litigation seeking declaratory and injunctive relief on grounds that defendant had wrongfully interfered with the 1983 unrestricted easement. Defendant claimed that the 1983 right-of-way was limited to agricultural and grazing purposes and moved for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata, judicial estoppel, laches, and waiver. The District Court concluded that the language of the 1983 amended judgment implied that the findings and conclusions were necessary to the judgment, so the court reviewed the 1983 findings and conclusions, concluded that the easement was restricted to agricultural and grazing purposes, granted defendant summary judgment on res judicata grounds, and dismissed plaintiffs' summary judgment motion and claim with prejudice. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the District Court erred in looking beyond the plain language of the 1983 amended judgment. The Supreme Court cited Quigley v. McIntosh, 110 M 495, 103 P2d 1067 (1940), for the holding that a District Court may refer to the entire record in an original case when construing a decree that is obscure or ambiguous, but that when the language of the decree is plain, there is no need to construe it or to resort to pleadings or evidence. In this case, the 1983 decree clearly and unambiguously granted plaintiff an unrestricted easement across defendant's ranch, and it was error for the District Court to look beyond the face of the decree instead of accepting it at face value and speculating as to the reasoning behind the particular result. Thus, summary judgment for defendant was reversed, and the District Court was ordered to enter summary judgment for plaintiffs. Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Award Attorney Fees Beyond Mandatory Time Limit: Final judgment was entered on January 8, 2003, and the next day plaintiffs filed a motion requesting attorney fees. Defendant objected, and the District Court conducted a hearing on the matter on February 25, 2003. The court finally granted the motion on April 3, 2003. Defendant contended on appeal that the award was untimely, and the Supreme Court agreed. Under this rule, a mandatory jurisdictional time limit requires a ruling on a motion for attorney fees within 60 days after final judgment or the motion is considered denied. The District Court had until March 10, 2003, to rule on the motion, but failed to do so. Thus, the court lacked jurisdiction to enter an order granting attorney fees in April, and the award was reversed. Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under this rule to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Section 27-8-311 provides that in any proceeding under Title 27, ch. 8, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under 27-8-311. However, 27-8-313 draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to 27-8-313 when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action.

Authority of District Court to Retroactively Supersede Temporary Child Support Enforcement Division's Order: While the wife's dissolution petition was pending, she asked the Child Support Enforcement Division to set child support. The Division gathered information regarding the parties' income and set a support amount. Both parties disputed the amount, and a contested hearing was held. After the hearing, the Division issued a temporary support obligation order. The husband petitioned for judicial review of the order, but the Division informed the court that the order was not appealable, so the parties stipulated to dismiss the petition for judicial review, and the court dismissed the petition. The court eventually set a child support amount, and the husband moved to have the court's order applied retroactively, but the court concluded that the order could not be applied retroactively, so the husband appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 40-5-225, the Division may set a temporary support order if one has not been set, but the very nature of the temporary order contemplates that the Division's order will be superseded by order of the District Court. Thus, the District Court erred when it held that it did not have authority to retroactively supersede the Division's temporary order, and it was an abuse of discretion for the court not to do so. In re Marriage of Banka, 2003 MT 84, 315 M 97, 67 P3d 885 (2003).

Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff was injured when a donkey savagely bit her arm. Defendant treated her at the local hospital. Plaintiff endured several surgeries and eventually lost her arm below the elbow. She sued defendant, claiming that defendant's negligence subjected her to an increased risk of harm and lessened her chances for a better result. The jury found that defendant was negligent but that the negligence did not cause injury to plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence in the record to support the jury's verdict. Much of the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness was contradicted by defendant's expert witnesses. An attack upon a jury verdict alleging that it is not supported by the evidence is proper only when there is a complete absence of any credible evidence in support of the verdict. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to alter or amend the judgment or for a new trial. Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 1137 (1998), followed in Upky v. Marshall Mtn., LLC, 2008 MT 90, 342 M 273, 180 P3d 651 (2008).

Adequacy of Compensatory and Punitive Damages Upheld — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: In a civil action for damages against Huggins and the Carpet Barn, stemming from criminal acts damaging plaintiffs David and Susan Black's automobiles, the Blacks' wholly owned corporation was awarded $35,000 in compensatory damages and $51 in punitive damages. The Blacks contended that the award was insufficient because it failed to award damages for emotional distress and property damages and awarded only $51 in punitive damages. The District Court denied Blacks' motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied the motion because there was conflicting evidence as to the cause of Blacks' emotional distress and because the record showed that Susan Black had been reimbursed through criminal restitution and that amount was not deducted from the award to the Blacks' corporation. Concerning the amount of punitive damages awarded, the Supreme Court cited Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217 (1986), and Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141 (1993), and held that the District Court properly instructed the jury, reviewed the award in accordance with 27-1-221, and left the award intact. The Supreme Court therefore held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

"Motion for Reconsideration" — Procedural Trap for Unwary and Grave Risk to Meritorious Appeal — Criteria to Equate With Motion to Alter or Amend: Stephen Nelson filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on a later-decided Third Circuit Court of Appeals case. Stephen contended that the motion was filed to allow the District Court to alter or amend its judgment to correct its mistake of law. The motion for reconsideration was denied, and Stephen filed a notice of appeal more than 60 days after the notice of entry of judgment but within 60 days from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal, contending that it had not been timely filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), on the grounds that a motion for reconsideration is not a motion to alter or amend under this rule. The Supreme Court, warning against the use of motions for reconsideration, established criteria under which to evaluate the motions. When a motion for reconsideration substantively addresses one of the following areas, the court is more likely to conclude that the motion is actually a motion to alter or amend under this rule: (1) to correct manifest errors of law or fact upon which the judgment was based; (2) to raise newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence; (3) to prevent manifest injustice resulting from, among other things, serious misconduct of counsel; or (4) to bring to the court's attention an intervening change in controlling law. The Supreme Court denied the motion to dismiss. Nelson v. Driscoll, 285 M 355, 948 P2d 256, 54 St. Rep. 1190 (1997), distinguished in Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017, 55 St. Rep. 1098 (1998), and followed in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001).

No Abuse of Discretion Found in Refusal to Amend Award of Personal Property — Findings and Conclusions, Decree, and Minute Order Held Consistent — Award Based Upon Stipulation of Current Cash Value of IRA Accounts Upheld: Soon after a decree was issued dissolving her marriage, Janet moved, pursuant to this rule, to amend the judgment because it concerned the distribution of the parties' personal property. Janet claimed that the District Court should have awarded her the personal property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. The District Court denied her motion. Janet argued before the Supreme Court that the decree of dissolution did not conform to the District Court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in that the District Court intended to award her the property listed on Exhibit "A" to her proposed findings and conclusions but that the property awarded was taken from a different exhibit and paragraph of her amended proposed findings and conclusions. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's distribution of the parties' property was clear and definite. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court had made a minute entry 10 days before Janet filed her motion to amend and that the minute order stated that certain items from Janet's Exhibit "A" were to be returned to her. The Supreme Court concluded that by using this language in the minute order, the District Court intended that certain items of Janet's property listed in her exhibit were to be returned to her and that the remainder was to remain with her ex-husband. In all material respects, the Supreme Court said, the findings and conclusions, decree, and minute order all conform with one another, and therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to amend. The Supreme Court also upheld the District Court's division of the parties' two IRA accounts, noting that the parties arrived at the value by adding the two together for a total of $64,445 and then subtracting 30% for taxes and a 10% penalty, leaving a net redemption value of $38,666, and then dividing that remainder in half. The District Court gave Janet's ex-husband the option of transferring ownership of one-half of the IRAs to Janet or paying Janet $19,333, one-half the net value of those accounts. The Supreme Court held that because Janet had stipulated to the present cash value of the IRAs, if her ex-husband chose to pay her one-half the current cash value of the accounts, she is receiving an equitable distribution. In re Marriage of Dorsey, 284 M 392, 945 P2d 430, 54 St. Rep. 934 (1997).

Motion for Reconsideration Held Not to Be Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Former Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (Now Superseded), Held Applicable — Notice of Appeal Filed Before Receipt of Notice of Entry of Judgment Not Premature: In an action to enforce the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), the Shieldses filed a motion for reconsideration shortly after the District Court dismissed their first amended complaint. Before the District Court ruled on the motion for reconsideration, the Shieldses filed a notice of appeal. The defendants claimed that the motion for reconsideration should be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment under this rule and that because former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), specifies that a notice of appeal filed before the disposition of a motion to alter or amend judgment has no effect until the motion to alter or amend judgment is disposed of, the Shieldses' notice of appeal was ineffective. The Supreme Court noted that a motion for reconsideration is not one of the motions provided for or authorized by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. The Supreme Court reviewed the substance of the motion for reconsideration to determine whether, under Haugen v. Blaine Bank of Mont., 279 M 1, 926 P2d 1364 (1996), the motion could be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment and held that the motion could not be so treated. Because the motion could not be treated as a motion to alter or amend judgment, the time for the Shieldses to file a notice of appeal was governed by former Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and not former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Under former Rule 5(a)(1) (now superseded), the Shieldses had 30 days from the time of notice of entry of judgment under Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P., in which to file their notice of appeal. However, the Supreme Court also noted that there was nothing in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure that prevented the Shieldses from filing their notice of appeal earlier than provided under Rule 77(d), and for that reason, the Supreme Court held the filing of the notice of appeal to be effective. Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997).

Time for Appeal Not Tolled During Extra Time Granted to File Brief in Support of Posttrial Motion: A District Court cannot grant extensions under this rule for additional briefing time and must rule on a motion to amend a judgment within the time allotted without regard to the status of the briefing. If the court does not rule on the motion within the allotted time, the motion is considered denied. The court's grant of a 16-day extension of time in which to file a brief in support of the motion did not suspend for 16 days the time allotted for appeal. Failure to file a notice of appeal within the allotted time was an absolute jurisdictional bar to Montana Supreme Court consideration of the appeal. Challinor v. Glacier Nat'l Bank, 283 M 342, 943 P2d 83, 54 St. Rep. 520 (1997).

Equating Motion for Reconsideration to Motion to Alter or Amend: Miller filed a motion for reconsideration of the District Court's grant of the defendant's motion for summary judgment. Miller's motion for reconsideration was denied, and he appealed the summary judgment order, not within 30 days of entry of the summary judgment but within 30 days of the denial of the motion for reconsideration. The defendant moved for dismissal of the appeal on the grounds that it had not been timely filed. Miller argued that the motion for reconsideration stopped the running of the 30-day requirement and that the 30-day requirement started to run again from the time that the motion to reconsider was denied. Miller based his argument on the holding in Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870 (1988), which stated that although a motion for reconsideration is not specifically referred to in this rule, it can be equated to a motion to alter or amend a judgment. The Supreme Court held that it would allow Miller's appeal because of his reliance on Easley but that any future motion to reconsider would not be treated as equivalent to a motion to alter or amend unless the motion contains statements or allegations demonstrating that the motion is equivalent to a motion to alter or amend. Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995), overruling in part Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870 (1988). See also Shields v. Helena School District No. 1, 284 M 138, 943 P2d 999, 54 St. Rep. 815 (1997). However, see Moody v. Northland Royalty Co., 286 M 89, 951 P2d 18, 54 St. Rep. 1317 (1997), which distinguished Miller by holding that defendant's motion to dismiss was not supported by a properly identified brief pursuant to Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19). See also Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017, 55 St. Rep. 1098 (1998), distinguishing Miller by holding that the Supreme Court will not analyze the substance of the motion to determine if the motion fits the definition of a motion to alter or amend.

Claim for Attorney Fees Raised for First Time in Motion to Amend Judgment Premature: It was premature to grant a claim for attorney fees, based on a breach of contract claim, that was raised for the first time in a motion to amend a judgment. The claim was supported only by a postjudgment affidavit attached to a reply brief in support of the motion to amend. The claim was premature in light of the fact that the underlying breach of contract claim had not been raised or argued by the parties in any meaningful or appropriate fashion. Clark v. Dussault, 265 M 479, 878 P2d 239, 51 St. Rep. 642 (1994).

No Basis for Amending Summary Judgment Apart From Motion for Relief From Judgment When Relief Denied: Plaintiff sought to amend judgment, but in neither the trial court nor the Supreme Court was any basis advanced for amending the summary judgment apart from arguments supporting plaintiff's motion for relief from judgment. Because the trial court properly declined to grant relief from judgment under Rule 60(b)(2), M.R.Civ.P., there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion to amend the judgment. Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994). See also Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Failure to Give Notice of Deficient Performance — Summary Judgment Burdens: Plaintiff alleged it had performed and was entitled to payment under a contract. Defendant answered that plaintiff had performed deficiently and that defendant had not breached the contract and owed no money under it. Since the contract required defendant to notify plaintiff of deficient performance, whether notice was given was crucial to each party's case. Defendant's answer raised the genuine issue of material fact as to whether defendant gave notice of deficiency, so that when plaintiff moved for summary judgment, plaintiff had the initial burden of offering evidence establishing the absence of notice. Statements of plaintiff's attorney that no notice had been given did not meet this burden; therefore, the burden to show that notice had been given did not shift to defendant and the court committed reversible error when it: (1) placed that burden on defendant; (2) granted plaintiff summary judgment for failure of defendant to carry the burden; and (3) refused defendant's motion for alteration or amendment of the judgment. However, defendant could have avoided an unnecessary appeal by filing affidavits or other evidence showing that defendant had given notice and that a genuine issue of material fact thus existed. Brinkman & Lenon v. P&D Land Enterprises, 263 M 238, 867 P2d 1112, 51 St. Rep. 36 (1994).

Interplay Between Time for Filing Notice of Appeal and Time for Filing Motion to Amend or Alter Judgment: District Courts retain jurisdiction to consider and resolve timely motions to alter or amend filed pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., or this rule. A notice of appeal filed under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), prior to the expiration of the time allowed for motions to alter or amend but followed by such motions timely filed has no effect. Shull v. First Interstate Bank of Great Falls, 262 M 355, 864 P2d 1268, 50 St. Rep. 1594 (1993).

Ineffective Appeal After Motion to Alter or Amend Judgment — Failure to Cure Results in Dismissal: On April 30, Grounds filed a motion to alter or amend a judgment partially granting her former husband's (Coward's) posttrial motions. On May 17, before Grounds' motion was ruled upon, Coward filed a notice of appeal from the disposition of his pretrial motions. The Supreme Court held that under Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P., the day the order was issued on his motions is not to be counted and that because the time for serving a motion to alter or amend judgment is less than the 11 days referred to in Rule 6(a), intervening Saturdays and Sundays are not counted. Therefore, the District Court could still rule on Grounds' motion. Under former Rule 5(a)(4), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), Coward filed a premature notice of appeal and should have waited until Grounds' motion was disposed of or considered denied. Failure of Coward to file a new notice of appeal after Grounds' motion was considered denied means that his own appeal must be dismissed. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993).

Lack of Supporting Brief and Notice of Motion — Ruling Not Invalidated: Coward made a motion to alter or amend judgment but failed to file a supporting brief within 5 days and failed to give notice to Grounds that the motion would be heard along with the hearing on her motion for contempt. These omissions notwithstanding, the District Court partially granted Coward's motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Citing Maberry v. Gueths, 238 M 304, 777 P2d 1285 (1989), the Supreme Court said that even though failure to file a brief is an admission that the motion is not well taken, the District Court still has discretion whether to grant the motion. The parties were also invited to propose a briefing schedule and/or evidentiary hearing date to present supplemental arguments, but failed to do so. Under these circumstances, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. In re Marriage of Grounds & Coward, 256 M 397, 846 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 114 (1993). However, see Moody v.

Northland Royalty Co., 286 M 89, 951 P2d 18, 54 St. Rep. 1317 (1997), which held that the District Court erred when it granted defendant's motion to dismiss after designating defendant's answer as the brief supporting a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 2, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19).

Failure to Perfect Appeal Within Time Limits as Precluding Jurisdiction: Failure to perfect an appeal within the time limits provided by law prevents the Supreme Court from acquiring jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. First Sec. Bank of Havre v. Harmon, 255 M 168, 841 P2d 521, 49 St. Rep. 955 (1992), followed in In re Marriage of Yeanuzzi, 2001 MT 171, 306 M 163, 30 P3d 1095 (2001).

Retention of District Court Jurisdiction After Filing of Appeal: A motion filed under this rule must be determined by the District Court within 45 days. If the court fails to rule within that time, the motion is considered denied. Former Rule 5(a)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), required the notice of appeal in civil cases to be filed within 30 days of judgment. However, if a motion is timely filed under this rule, the time for appeal runs from the entry of an order granting or denying the motion or, if applicable, from the time the motion is considered denied at the end of the 45-day period (see 1995 amendment). If a notice of appeal is filed before the motion is disposed of, the notice of appeal has no effect. Semenza v. Hartelius, 248 M 294, 811 P2d 1262, 48 St. Rep. 356 (1991).

Court Failure to Rule Within Forty-Five Days on Motion to Set Aside or Amend — Loss of Jurisdiction Over That Issue: Subsequent to obtaining a decree of dissolution, the husband died intestate and his ex-wife moved to have the decree set aside. More than 45 days later (see 1995 amendment), the District Court set aside the decree and also granted the ex-wife's motion to substitute as personal representative. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that a postjudgment motion not ruled on within 45 days is considered denied and at that time, the lower court lost its jurisdiction with respect to setting aside the decree. The court also held that the 45 days run from the time the motion to set aside or amend is filed and is not affected by when the notice of entry of judgment is filed. In re Marriage of Miller, 238 M 108, 776 P2d 1218, 46 St. Rep. 1128 (1989), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Untimely Appeal Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal filed after the mandatory time limit imposed under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., as untimely filed pursuant to this rule. Easley v. Burlington N. RR, 234 M 290, 762 P2d 870, 45 St. Rep. 1915 (1988). See also Miller v. Herbert, 272 M 132, 900 P2d 273, 52 St. Rep. 655 (1995).

Failure to Obtain Continuance — No Invalidation of Proceeding: Following service of the notice of entry of judgment, the defendants filed a timely motion to amend the judgment pursuant to Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P. However, hearing on the motion was not held within 10 days of service as required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. However, the hearing was within the total of 40 days which Rule 59(d) allows for the hearing. The notice of hearing was given within the 10-day period. The defendant's technical failure to obtain a continuance from the trial court is not a sufficient reason to invalidate the proceedings when the hearing is held within the period prescribed by the rule. Redinger v. French, 216 M 16, 699 P2d 94, 42 St. Rep. 604 (1985).

Effect of Stipulation Based on Mistake in Interpretation of Law: At entry of judgment the District Court permitted entry of a stipulation that apportioned attorney fees between the parties on the basis of an incorrect interpretation of the law. The parties agreed that attorney fees are costs in mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure actions. It was error for the District Court to refuse to alter or amend the judgment upon timely application under Rules 59(g) and 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. A judgment by stipulation is as binding as any judgment or verdict, no more or less. The court was responsible for a correct application of the law in accepting the stipulation and in later ruling on whether to alter or amend the judgment thereby entered. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985).

No Basis to Reopen Dissolution Decree: The appellant did not claim the existence of unconscionability, fraud, or any other inequitable situation that would give a court a legal basis upon which to reopen a dissolution decree. She attempted to enhance enforcement of the judgment that incorporated the parties' stipulations as to the property division by making a motion to modify. She was precluded by statutory time limits and by the fact that she had no legal basis to compel a court to reopen the judgment. Since no conditions existed that would justify reopening the judgment, the District Court was not required to enter findings of fact. Keirle v. Keirle, 210 M 214, 681 P2d 703, 41 St. Rep. 1016 (1984).

Award of Attorney Fees on Remand Improper: On remand from the Supreme Court, the District Court granted the mother's motion for attorney fees for the first trial and appeal. The District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees. The original judgment did not provide for attorney fees, and the judgment would have had to be amended before either party could be ordered to pay those fees. A motion to amend a judgment must be made within 10 days of its entry. This rule applies to requests for attorney fees and is not overridden by 40-4-110. Since mother's motion was not timely, the District Court was without jurisdiction to grant attorney fees for the first trial. R.L.S. & T.L.S v. Barkhoff, 207 M 199, 674 P2d 1082, 40 St. Rep. 1982 (1983).

Marital Separation Agreement Not a Judgment Amendable for Failure of Consideration: A marital separation agreement is not a conveyance. A separation agreement incorporated into a divorce decree is enforceable only as a judgment. A judgment can be reopened if obtained through fraud but not for lack of fair consideration. It was error to annul a marital separation agreement under 31-2-311 (now repealed). Witbart v. Witbart, 204 M 446, 666 P2d 1217, 40 St. Rep. 994 (1983).

Motion for Attorney Fees Following Judgment — Not Costs — Timeliness of Motion: The defendants signed a contract to purchase a tract of land from plaintiffs. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action commenced on the contract. Plaintiffs filed suit alleging that under the contract and various oral agreements, defendants had agreed to pay a real estate commission to plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding that written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission did not exist. No notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Defendants later moved to set an attorney fee award. The trial court ruled that under Title 25, ch. 10, attorney fees were not recoverable costs and that the motion for costs was not timely, as it was not filed within 5 days of judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees were awardable under the contract and that defendants' motion was essentially a motion to amend judgment under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. The motion was timely made since no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983).

Untimely Motion, Notice, or Hearing Not Suspending Time for Appeal — Appeal Not Timely: Summary judgment was entered against appellant by the District Court on November 25, 1980. On December 4, 1980, he filed his motion to alter or amend the summary judgment. He noticed the hearing on the motion for December 15, 1980. Under Rule 59(g), the motion was timely filed, but under this subsection, the hearing was set 1 day too late. The time for hearing expired December 14, 1980. Therefore, the time for filing a notice of appeal began running that date and his appeal which was filed on February 4, 1981, was not timely and was dismissed. Malinak v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. of Idaho, 203 M 69, 661 P2d 12, 39 St. Rep. 2046 (1982).

After the plaintiff and defendant stipulated to costs in a quiet title action, an amended judgment was entered by the District Court on October 29, 1981, but on November 13, the plaintiff filed a motion to amend judgment. On appeal by the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the motion to amend judgment was not timely filed, the motion did not suspend the running of the time for appeal, and that because the running of the time for filing an appeal had not been suspended, the notice of appeal was filed too late and the court lacked jurisdiction of the appeal. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982), followed in Estate of Stinson, 240 M 1, 782 P2d 78, 46 St. Rep. 1892 (1989).

Notice of entry of judgment against appellant was served on him on November 6, 1981. On November 20, 1981, he filed a motion to amend the findings. He did not file a notice of hearing on the motion. The motion was heard on February 1, 1982, and denied on February 2, 1982. Later in February, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The Supreme Court held that appellant's notice was not timely and dismissed the appeal. Under Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P., a motion to amend a judgment is considered denied at the end of the time period in which a hearing on the motion must be held. A hearing must be held within 10 days after the motion is filed. Therefore, appellant's motion was considered denied on November 30, 1981, and the notice of appeal was not timely. Fields v. Summit Eng'r, 201 M 204, 653 P2d 1204, 39 St. Rep. 2057 (1982).

When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Time Limits to Be Followed — Jurisdictional Requirement: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The court finally held a later hearing after the wife again moved on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that once the Rule 52(b) motion was made, the time limits of Rule 59(g) applied and a hearing had to be held within 10 days or the court could continue the hearing not to exceed 30 days. In this case, the court held the hearing 5 days later than the extended date and thereby lost jurisdiction of the motion. Further, the court did not rule on the motion within the required 15 days. Because the time for the wife's appeal began to run on the last day that the District Court could have ruled on the Rule 52 motion, her appeal was not timely and the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Notice of Appeal Divests Trial Court of Jurisdiction to Amend Judgment: After respondent moved to amend the judgment of the District Court, appellant filed a notice of appeal. The filing of the notice of appeal deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to amend the judgment. However, under 3-2-204, the Supreme Court can return jurisdiction to the trial court. United Farm Agency v. Blome, 198 M 435, 646 P2d 1205, 39 St. Rep. 1115 (1982).

Service of Notice of Entry of Judgment by Mail — Effective Three Days After Mailing: Notice of entry of judgment was mailed to the parties on May 21, 1980. Twelve days later the respondent filed a motion to amend findings and judgment and a motion for a new trial. Because service of a notice of entry of judgment by mail is not effective until 3 days after the mailing under Rule 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., the motions were timely. Wilson v. Wilson, 198 M 147, 645 P2d 393, 39 St. Rep. 828 (1982).

Challenge of Decree and Property Settlement After Six Years — Res Judicata: A property settlement and decree entered in 1974 cannot be set aside in 1980 on the grounds of unconscionability. The failure of the spouse to appeal the court's decree in 1974 has rendered the issue res judicata. Hadford v. Hadford, 194 M 518, 633 P2d 1181, 38 St. Rep. 1308 (1981).

Proposed Findings and Conclusions Adopted Verbatim: Notwithstanding the duty imposed in Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P., upon a District Court to "find the facts specially and state separately its conclusions of law thereon" is not automatically breached when a court adopts verbatim the proposed findings and conclusions submitted by the prevailing party, especially where, as here, the District Judge invited both parties to submit proposed findings and conclusions prior to making his decision. Adopted findings, though not the product of the District Judge's mind, are formally his and will stand if supported by the evidence. The District Court therefore did not err in denying the petitioner's motion to amend the findings and conclusions, which motion was based upon the verbatim adoption. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981), followed in Sawyer-Adecor Int'l, Inc. v. Anglin, 198 M 440, 646 P2d 1194, 39 St. Rep. 1118 (1982).

Extension of Hearing Date on Motion to Amend — What Suffices for Compliance With Time Requirements: The wife appealed from an amended decree dissolving her marriage, establishing child custody and support, and dividing the property of the marriage. The appellant filed and served a motion to amend the judgment. Including 3 days for mailing, the hearing on that motion was either required to be held within 13 days or to be continued by the court within 13 days. The District Court entered an order setting a hearing date on the appellant's and respondent's motions to amend. That order was filed on the last day of the 13-day period. The order constituted a continuation of the hearing date on the motions to alter or amend. That order did set a hearing date within a 30-day period required by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (See 1995 amendment). The District Court then ruled on the motions to alter or amend within 5 days following the hearing. Therefore, the District Court's actions regarding the petitioner's motions to alter or amend the original decree complied with the time requirements of the rule. The amending order of the District Court was therefore valid. Tefft v. Tefft, 192 M 456, 628 P2d 1094, 38 St. Rep. 837 (1981).

Petition to Alter or Amend Judgment With Regard to Fees and Costs in Divorce Case: A petition to alter or amend a judgment must be served not later than 10 days after notice of entry of judgment, and the court was without jurisdiction to grant a petition asking for attorney's fees that was filed almost 3 months after entry of an order that required each party to pay his own fees and costs. McDonald v. McDonald, 183 M 312, 599 P2d 356 (1979), followed in Haugen v. Nelson, 240 M 28, 782 P2d 901, 46 St. Rep. 1915 (1989), and in Estate of Stinson, 240 M 1, 782 P2d 78, 46 St. Rep. 1892 (1989).

Practice of Additur: The practice of additur by the District Courts is prohibited notwithstanding the court's dictum in Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc., 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978). Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117, 35 St. Rep. 1878 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Ruling on Motion — Mandatory Time Limitation: It was error for the court to rule on a motion to alter or amend judgment after expiration of the 15-day time period measured from the date of submission of the motion. Kelly v. Sell & Sell Paint Contractors, 175 M 440, 574 P2d 1002 (1978), affirmed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Rule Mandatory — Untimely Order Void: Order granting motion to alter or amend judgment was void where hearing was not held within 10 days after service as required by this rule; time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment set out in this rule are mandatory. Armstrong v. High Crest Oils, Inc., 164 M 187, 520 P2d 1081 (1974).

Motion for Modification of Paternity Decree — Requirements of Rules Not Satisfied — Jurisdiction Precluded: Where a husband filed a "motion for modification of divorce decree" more than 4 years after the divorce in an attempt to relitigate the issue of his paternity of the children of the parties, the District Court was without jurisdiction to hear the petition. As the petition on its face did not seek relief under Rules 59 or 60, M.R.Civ.P., and was based on facts which predated the original finding of paternity, which finding was not appealed, the District Court had no jurisdiction to modify its previous order. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Additur Not Allowed: This rule did not give the District Court power to order an additur to a condemnation award as a condition of denying motion for new trial. Highway Comm'n v. Schmidt, 143 M 505, 391 P2d 692 (1964).

Condemnation Proceedings — Rule Inapplicable to Award by Commissioners: Subdivision (e) of this rule (now subdivision (g)) did not apply in determining right of District Court to alter or amend an award of damages as found by the report of commissioners in condemnation proceeding under 70-30-303 after the award had been filed with the District Court and notice thereof given to the parties by the clerk as the commissioners' award was not a judgment. State ex rel. Frelich v. District Court, 141 M 169, 375 P2d 1016 (1962).

Former Rule 60. Relief from judgment or order

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Lack of Hearing Record on Support Modification — Vacation of District Court Decree Required: Pamela filed a motion to amend the decree dissolving her marriage, in order to increase child support payments, and a motion to hold her ex-husband, Earl, in contempt for failure to pay child support. The District Court held a hearing, which Earl did not attend. Based upon the hearing, of which no record was made, the District Court modified the decree by increasing Earl's child support payments. Earl was also ordered to pay Pamela's attorney fees and costs. In response, Earl filed a motion under this rule for relief from the judgment, but that motion was denied when the District Court failed to rule. Citing Malley v. Malley, 190 M 141, 619 P2d 531 (1980), the Supreme Court held that without a record, the Supreme Court could not determine the change in circumstances justifying the amended decree and Earl was thereby denied effective appellate review. The District Court's order was vacated, and the case was remanded for a hearing on the merits of Pamela's motion. In re Marriage of Long, 268 M 187, 885 P2d 533, 51 St. Rep. 1252 (1994).

New Trial Denied — Lack of Diligence: The defendants sought a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence indicating that the valuation of real property reached by the trial court was $13,000 too high. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's denial of the motion, holding that the defendants had not demonstrated that the evidence could not have been discovered in time for the trial with exercise of due diligence on their part. Brunner v. LaCasse, 241 M 102, 785 P2d 210, 47 St. Rep. 117 (1990).

Motion for Modification of Child Custody Decree: Wife filed for modification of a child custody order, and the subsequent order issued by the court affected only the terms of the original custody decree that relate to the notice required prior to visitation and to allocation of transportation costs. In response to husband's argument that wife's motion for modification should be denied because it was not properly filed under the time limitations established in Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., or this rule, the court held that the motion was filed under 40-4-217, which contains no time limitations. In re Marriage of Chase, 237 M 224, 772 P2d 1264, 46 St. Rep. 754 (1989), replacing previous opinion at 46 St. Rep. 540 (1989).

Appeal Not Timely: When a motion to vacate and set aside a portion of a judgment was made 46 days beyond the authority of Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P., it did not suspend the running of time permitted to file appeal under former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). Appellant's contention that Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., was applicable did not operate to vest the Supreme Court with jurisdiction to hear the appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Fry, 176 M 58, 575 P2d 1325 (1978).

Loss of Jurisdiction — Divorce Proceeding: The court exceeded its jurisdiction by determining paternity after entry of the original divorce decree. Relief was not sought under Rule 59 or Rule 60 as it could have been. Butler v. Brownlee, 152 M 453, 451 P2d 836 (1969).

Former Rule 60(a). Clerical mistakes

Erroneous Denial of Removal of Assessment of Postjudgment Interest When Principal Paid by City Within Two Years: Funke was awarded damages for injuries incurred when a deck collapsed, including 5% liability against the city of Polson. The District Court ordered that the judgment would bear interest at 10% from the date of the original judgment. The city paid its portion of the judgment within 2 years and filed a motion under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the judgment on grounds that it was a clerical error to charge the city interest when the principal was paid within 2 years of judgment as provided in 2-9-317. The motion was denied and the city appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the District Court properly denied the Rule 60(a) motion because the attempt to shoehorn consideration of 2-9-317 into the clerical error category failed, inasmuch as the District Court did not intend to apply the statute when the judgment was entered, and because the city had not yet paid the judgment, application of the statute at that time was premature. However, the District Court's failure to subsequently apply 2-9-317 was an error of law. When the city paid the judgment within 2 years of entry of judgment, the portion of the judgment requiring the city to pay interest was rendered invalid. Thus, the assessment of postjudgment interest against the city was stricken and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Funke v. Estate of Shultz, 2009 MT 411, 353 M 492, 223 P3d 839 (2009).

Motion for Posttrial Relief Untimely — Posttrial Motion to Correct Clerical Mistakes Proper — Motion for Posttrial Relief Not Substitute for Appeal: Following notice of entry of judgment in a marriage dissolution trial, the husband had 10 days to file a motion under Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P., but missed the deadline by 2 days, so the motion was properly ruled untimely. The husband had 30 days to file a notice of appeal, but the untimely Rule 59 motion did not toll the time for appeal, and that time also expired. The decree became final, subject only to the husband's motion for relief under the various provisions of Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P. The District Court erred in not applying this rule to correct clerical mistakes in the findings of facts. However, a Rule 60 motion may not be used as a substitute for appeal, so the husband's Rule 60 motion essentially seeking to set aside the decree based on insufficient evidence was properly denied. In re Marriage of Schoenthal, 2005 MT 24, 326 M 15, 106 P3d 1162 (2005).

No Time Limit on Court's Correcting Clerical Error if There Is No Currently Pending Appeal: At a bench trial, the lower court ruled that a disputed parking easement between the parties did not contain a certain portion of a lot. However, in the court's written opinion, the court cited the easement as containing that portion of the lot that the court's findings had delineated as not being part of the easement. The Franks brought a motion for relief from judgment based on a clerical error by the court. The lower court denied the Franks' motion without explanation, and the Franks appealed. Muri argued that the Franks had not timely filed their appeal because it was filed after the time for filing an appeal had elapsed. The Supreme Court stated that the lower court had clearly made a clerical error in its description of the easement and had abused its discretion in refusing to amend its ruling. The Supreme Court held that under this rule, unless there was a currently pending appeal, the rule had to be interpreted literally to mean that the lower court could correct its clerical error and therefore the time to file an appeal did not apply. The Supreme Court remanded the case and ordered the lower court to correct its error. Muri v. Frank, 2001 MT 29, 304 M 171, 18 P3d 1022 (2001). On remand, the District Court improperly made new findings of fact that conflicted with the unchallenged findings upon which the Supreme Court based its decision in Muri, id. Because plaintiff did not appeal the findings from the first appeal, the District Court had no authority to ignore the law of the case and reconsider its findings on remand. Muri v. Frank, 2003 MT 316, 318 M 269, 80 P3d 77 (2003).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Oral Pronouncement as Legally Effective Sentence — Correction of Error in Written Judgment by Nunc Pro Tunc Order — Due Process and Double Jeopardy Rights Not Violated: The oral pronouncement of sentence is the legally effective sentence. The written judgment and commitment serves as evidence of the sentence orally pronounced. In the event of a conflict between the oral and written sentence, the oral controls. The sentencing court may correct an error in a written judgment and commitment by a nunc pro tunc order, pursuant to 46-18-117 (now repealed), to accurately reflect what was orally pronounced at the sentencing hearing. Absent evidence of a tangible detriment or concrete injury to defendant, a clarifying nunc pro tunc order does not jeopardize a defendant's due process rights or constitute double jeopardy. St. v. Lane, 1998 MT 76, 288 M 286, 957 P2d 9, 55 St. Rep. 311 (1998), overruling St. v. Enfinger, 222 M 438, 722 P2d 1170 (1986), St. v. Wirtala, 231 M 264, 752 P2d 177 (1988), St. v. Mason, 253 M 419, 833 P2d 1058 (1992), and St. v. Graveley, 275 M 519, 915 P2d 184 (1996), to the extent that those cases held that the written judgment and commitment, rather than the oral pronouncement of sentence, was to be considered the final, valid order. Lane was followed in St. v. Horton, 2001 MT 100, 305 M 242, 25 P3d 886 (2001), and St. v. Ringewold, 2001 MT 185, 306 M 229, 32 P3d 729 (2001). The Supreme Court amended former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), to reflect the Lane decision in In re Amending Rule 5 of the Mont. Rules of Appellate Procedure, 55 St. Rep. 1267 (1998).

Notice or Motion Not Required to Correct Clerical Error in Order — Reentry of Judgment Not Required: The District Court entered judgment terminating parental rights but misspelled the father's first name. One week later, the court issued an amended order correcting the clerical error but made no other changes. The state did not notify appellant of entry of the amended judgment. Seventeen months after the termination of parental rights, appellant served notice of the amended order on the state and filed a notice of appeal from the amended order based on former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), contending that the state never entered the amended judgment and that therefore the 60-day appeal period did not run until the amended judgment was entered by the appellant's attorney. Under this rule, the District Court has inherent power at any time to correct clerical errors in its own judgments in order to ensure that the record speaks the truth and reflects the court's decision. A notice or motion is not required to rectify a clerical error, nor must the order that makes the correction be denominated a nunc pro tunc order. An error may also be corrected by the issuance of a new order that does not contain the clerical error and that entirely replaces the old order. In the present case, appellant was properly notified when judgment was entered and the original order was handed down. The state was not required to enter judgment again after the amended new order was issued or to notify appellant of the entry of the amended order in order to keep the appeal clock running. Because appellant failed to file a notice of appeal within 60 days of the entry of judgment, the appeal was dismissed as untimely. Clerical Correction of Error in Calculating Child Support Obligation: This rule was an appropriate vehicle for correcting a miscalculation in the net available resources to be considered in setting the amount of child support obligation. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Corrective Order — Not Modification of Judgment: In an action to modify a final decree of dissolution distributing a marital estate, the trial court, under the authority of Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., issued a corrective order to amend the judgment to express what was actually decided and to grant the relief originally intended. The order was not a modification of judgment subject to Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. The court did not have a change of mind or correct a judicial error. In re Marriage of Cannon, 215 M 272, 697 P2d 901, 42 St. Rep. 348 (1985).

Timeliness of Motion — Clerical Errors to Be Corrected at Any Time: The parties' marriage was dissolved on April 14, 1980, and a portion of the decree provided that the wife was to receive monthly payments equal to one-half the value of stock. On April 23, 1980, the wife moved under Rule 52(b), M.R.Civ.P., to amend the findings and judgment to correct the valuation of the stock. The motion was properly noticed for hearing under Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. On May 1, 1980, the judge continued the hearing for 30 days upon written stipulation of counsel. The hearing was held on June 5, 1980, but no order was entered. The wife moved to revalue the stock again on January 22, 1981. The court held a hearing on May 4, 1981, and in an order dated October 7, 1981, denied her request. On appeal the wife contended that her January 22 motion should be considered a motion under Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P., on the grounds of newly discovered evidence. Montana's Rule 60(b) requires the motion to be within 60 days following the entry of judgment. However, it can be considered if the relief could have been granted because the substance of the motion brought it under Rule 60(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. This was foreclosed here by the District Court ruling on the motion on its merits. The Supreme Court did resolve an apparent conflict between Rule 60(a) and Rule 60(c), M.R.Civ.P., by holding that when a clerical mistake occurs in a judgment, order, or other part of a court record and the error is admitted or can be corrected or clarified without inequity or prejudice to a party, the error can be corrected by the court at any time, either nunc pro tunc or by a new order. In re Marriage of Winn, 200 M 402, 651 P2d 51, 39 St. Rep. 1831 (1982), overruled in part on other grounds by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729, and followed in In re Marriage of Becker, 244 M 469, 798 P2d 124, 47 St. Rep. 1729 (1990).

Amending on Remand Judgment Upheld on First Appeal — Law of Case — Abuse of Discretion: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, the District Court amended its conclusions and findings to omit the alternative allowing plaintiffs to repair the ditch and awarded damages without the submission of any additional evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court found this to be an abuse of discretion, as none of the exceptions found in Rules 52(b), 60(a), or 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., applied. The court abused its discretion in not holding a hearing to determine if either alternative of the original judgment had been complied with. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Lack of Findings on Marital Home Not Correctable by District Court After Time Limitations Expire: In a divorce settlement, the trial court findings contained no determination of the net worth of the parties, the net worth of the husband's medical practice, or the relative financial contributions of the two parties. The findings of fact also were inconclusive as to the value and disposal of the family home. Five months after the decree was entered, the husband petitioned for amendment, requesting award of the family home to him. Eleven months later the District Court found that it was the original intention of the court to distribute the home to the husband. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred in its attempt to amend the decree. Under Rule 60(a), M.R.Civ.P., clerical errors in judgments may be corrected at any time since correction does not alter substantive rights of the parties. Here the attempted change adversely affected the wife's substantive rights by depriving her of her interest in the family home, a major asset of the marriage. Such error is judicial in nature and could not be corrected by the District Court except by motion made within the time limitations of Rules 50(b), 52(b), 59, or 60(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. No such motion having been made, the error would have been correctable by appeal, which was never taken by either of the parties. The District Court therefore lacked jurisdiction to make the change effected by its entry of the amended findings and decree. The case was remanded. Thomas v. Thomas, 189 M 547, 617 P2d 133, 37 St. Rep. 1710 (1980).

Error in Distribution of Decedent's Estate: When the mineral rights distributed in a decree of settlement of final account and distribution of estate had been previously conveyed by sale, the District Court has jurisdiction to reopen the case to amend the decree because the District Court was without authority to distribute items which were not properly included in the inventory of the estate. In re Estate of Swandal, 179 M 429, 587 P2d 368 (1978).

Finding Equivalent to Denial of Relief: Finding that "The evidence presented does not warrant any setting aside of the default judgment. . ." was equivalent to a denial of relief under this rule. Corban v. Corban, 161 M 93, 504 P2d 985 (1972).

Contempt — Excessive Sentence Corrected: Trial court could correct a judgment imposing a term of imprisonment for contempt of court in excess of that authorized by 3-1-519 (now repealed), and this was harmless error where the correction was made within the period of a stay of execution. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Erroneous Order — Corrected Nunc Pro Tunc: Court's nunc pro tunc order correcting erroneous contempt judgment was not in violation of Supreme Court's writ because the order was made before the writ was issued. Niewoehner v. District Court, 142 M 1, 381 P2d 464 (1963).

Effect of Change Governing — Time for Correction: The test is whether on the one hand the change will make the record speak the truth as to what was actually determined or done, or intended to be determined or done by the court, or whether on the other hand it will alter such action or intended action. Where the amendment comes within the permissible class there would seem to be no reason, nor any supportable precedent, limiting by time or term the court's right to correct its record; for if the power is to be effective and do justice to parties and public it must continue until the error is called to the court's attention and corrected. Morse v. Morse, 116 M 504, 154 P2d 982 (1945).

Party Omitted From Judgment: Where findings of fact and conclusions of law declared that both plaintiff wife and minor children should share in a $15 weekly allowance as the parties had agreed, but the decree by mistake or inadvertence omitted the wife's name as a participant, the court may properly allow the amendment that she participate, under section 21-139, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and the court's inherent power to correct errors of clerk, judge, or counsel, to speak the actual decision, either immediately or years later. Judgment must conform to verdict, decision, or findings in substantial particulars. Morse v. Morse, 116 M 504, 154 P2d 982 (1945).

Time of Correction: The District Court has power to order its judgments amended by nunc pro tunc order to correct an error which has crept into the judgment by reason of misprision on the part of the judge, clerk, or counsel and is apparent on the face of the record, so that it shall truly express what was actually decided, irrespective of the time intervening between the commission of the error and time correction order is made, provided the amendment does not change the rights fixed by the judgment as originally intended and made. State ex rel. Kruletz v. District Court, 110 M 36, 98 P2d 883 (1940).

Change of Substance — Order Void: Judgment of foreclosure of a real estate mortgage was based on a provision that if the mortgagor should default in payment of principal or interest on the note secured thereby, the whole debt should become due and collectible and all the rents and profits of the property should immediately accrue to the mortgagee. Nine months after its entry the trial court granted the mortgagor's motion to strike the clause relating to rents and profits. The order did not correct a mere clerical mistake but operated as a change of substantial rights adjudicated by the judgment. When made, the trial court had lost jurisdiction to amend or modify it; hence the order was void. Edgar St. Bank v. Long, 85 M 225, 278 P 108 (1929).

Defect in Affidavit Readily Curable: The District Court may and should, on motion to discharge a Writ of Attachment because of a defective affidavit, in furtherance of justice permit amendment of the affidavit and deny the motion, where the defect is readily amendable. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

Affidavit Amended Before Answer: An affidavit, made on information and belief in support of an application for an injunction, was amendable, before demurrer (demurrer abolished by Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., and 25-31-503, now repealed) or answer, by substituting a verification. Claussen v. Chapin, 69 M 205, 221 P 1073 (1923).

Pleadings Amended After Default: In a divorce suit where the plaintiff inadvertently alleges that the defendant, instead of the plaintiff, has been a resident of the state for more than 1 year prior to the commencement of the action, a mistake apparently affecting the question of jurisdiction, he will be allowed after a default judgment has been entered and after the expiration of the 6 months' limitation, to amend his complaint by substituting the word "plaintiff" for the word "defendant". Eadie v. Eadie, 44 M 391, 120 P 239 (1911). See Ivanhoff v. Teale, 47 M 115, 130 P 972 (1913).

Attachment Proceeding Amendable: The procuring of an attachment and the steps necessary therefor is a proceeding within the spirit of the Code, and if such proceeding is defective the same may be amended in furtherance of justice like any other proceeding. Wilson v. Barbour, 21 M 176, 53 P 315 (1898); Herbst Importing Co. v. Hogan, 16 M 384, 41 P 135 (1895); Newell v. Whitwell, 16 M 243, 40 P 866 (1895); Muth v. Erwin, 14 M 227, 36 P 43 (1894); Josephi v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1893); Magee v. Fogerty, 6 M 237, 11 P 668 (1886); Langstaff v. Miles, 5 M 554, 6 P 356 (1885); Pierse v. Miles, 5 M 549, 6 P 347 (1885).

Amendment of Void Process: Section 93-3905, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 60, M.R.Civ.P.), did not confer power upon the court to amend a void jurisdictional writ or process. Sharman v. Huot, 20 M 555, 52 P 558 (1898), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903); Choate v. Spencer, 13 M 127, 32 P 651 (1893), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

GENERAL

No Error in Denial of Motion for Relief Given Live Arbitration Controversy: After defendant decided to cut the length of the school year by 1 week, plaintiff filed a motion to compel arbitration on the issue because of the 40-hour cut in wages of plaintiff's bargaining unit employees. Defendant argued that it had the sole authority to reduce the annual salaries of all employees and moved for dismissal of the case. The District Court denied defendant's motion and granted plaintiff's motion to compel arbitration. Rather than appeal the order to compel arbitration, defendant filed a motion under Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P., for relief from the order on grounds that the matter was moot. Following the order, the parties had agreed to settle a separate grievance concerning a pay increase, but the settlement did not address arbitration. The District Court concluded that the issues in controversy were not moot and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A live case or controversy regarding arbitration existed thoughout the proceedings in District Court. The case was not moot when the District Court issued its arbitration order, so the order was not void under Rule 60(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P., and denial of defendant's motion for relief was not error. Greater Missoula Area Federation of Early Childhood Educators & Related Personnel v. Child Start, Inc., 2009 MT 362, 353 M 201, 219 P3d 881 (2009).

Dismissal Without Prejudice — Interlocutory Order: While a wrongful death claim was pending, the insurance company filed an action seeking a declaratory judgment that there was no liability coverage for motor vehicle accidents under the driver's policies with the company. The District Court dismissed the action without prejudice, and the insurance company appealed. The Supreme Court held that the order dismissing the action without prejudice was an interlocutory order and was not appealable in the absence of special circumstances. Because special circumstances were not present, the appeal was dismissed without prejudice. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bodell, 2008 MT 363, 346 M 414, 197 P3d 913 (2008).

Contempt Appropriate for Failure of Party to Abide by Court-Ordered Stipulation — Penalty Reduced to Statutory Maximum: The District Court held defendant in contempt for failure to abide by a stipulation entered by the court ordering Boles to remove a metal roof from her barn because it violated a subdivision's restrictive covenants. The court further ordered that defendant would be charged $300 for each day past the deadline for removal of the roof. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court did not have jurisdiction because defendant was not a named party or served as an original party and because defendant was coerced into signing the stipulation under the guise of changing the covenants to accommodate the roof. The Supreme Court noted that defendant's motion would have been more appropriately framed as a Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), motion seeking relief from judgment because the stipulation was a final order and agreed with the District Court's conclusion that there was no reason under Rule 60(b) to relieve defendant from the final judgment. Even though defendant was not a named party or served as an original party, the District Court did have jurisdiction because defendant had appeared in the case many times without raising the jurisdiction issue at the initial appearance or response, and once defendant recognized the court's jurisdiction, the defense of no personal jurisdiction was waived. Additionally, there was no credible evidence that defendant was coerced into signing the stipulation. Therefore, the contempt conviction was affirmed. However, the Supreme Court did vacate the portion of the order that defendant would be charged $300 for each day past the deadline for removal of the roof because a sanction for contempt that seeks to compel the contemnor to perform an act may not exceed $500, so the sanction was remitted to a maximum of $500. El Dorado Heights Homeowners' Ass'n v. Dewitt, 2008 MT 199, 344 M 77, 186 P3d 1249 (2008).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of Rule 60(b) Motion — Dual Lords Standards Clarified: As a general rule, the Supreme Court's review of a District Court's decision to grant or deny a Rule 60(b) motion is for abuse of discretion. One exception to the general rule is when a movant seeks relief from a default judgment, in which case the Supreme Court will apply the two standards of review set out in Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984). When a trial court has granted a motion to set aside the default and opened up the action for trial on the merits, the ruling will be set aside only upon a showing of manifest abuse, but when the trial court has denied a motion to set aside the default, only a slight abuse is sufficient to reverse the order refusing to set aside the default. However, the Lords standards are based on policy considerations identified in each case with respect to default judgments and should not be applied universally because there is no one set standard of review to be applied in all cases. Essex Ins. Co. v. Moose's Saloon, Inc., 2007 MT 202, 338 M 423, 166 P3d 451 (2007), overruling Wright Oil & Tire Co. v. Goodrich, 284 M 6, 942 P2d 128 (1997), Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), In re Marriage of Zacher, 2004 MT 249, 323 M 54, 98 P3d 309 (2004), and Wombold v. Associates Financial Serv. Co. of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 M 290, 104 P3d 1080 (2004), to the extent that those cases state or suggest that the Lords standards apply to all Rule 60(b) motions, and followed in Engelsberger v. Lake County, 2007 MT 211, 339 M 22, 167 P3d 902 (2007).

Questions of Fact Regarding Ambiguous Contract and Damages — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Upon remand of a breach of contract action in Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2003 MT 82, 315 M 75, 67 P3d 306 (2003), the District Court granted Bradley's motion for summary judgment a second time without considering the merits of defendant's defense to the breach of contract. However, because questions of fact still existed regarding ambiguous language in the contract and potential damages, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was again reversed and remanded for further consideration. Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2005 MT 309, 329 M 448, 124 P3d 1143 (2005).

Failure to Answer Complaint Not Excusable Neglect — Motion to Set Aside Default Properly Denied: Matthews filed a complaint in a wrongful discharge action, and the summons and complaint with an acknowledgment of service were forwarded to defendant's attorney. The attorney returned the acknowledgment, but the attorney's assistant failed to calendar the answer's due date and misfiled the summons and complaint in a different file. An answer was not timely filed, so Matthews sought and was granted a hearing on a default judgment and damages, but defendant's counsel did not attend the hearing, and a default judgment and damages of $185,000 were entered for Matthews. Defendant moved to set aside the default, but the District Court did not rule on the motion within 60 days, so the motion was considered denied. On appeal, defendant argued that the motion to set aside the default should have been granted on grounds of excusable neglect. However, by the time of the default hearing, the lack of attention to Matthew's complaint was a serious disregard of the judicial process and could not be considered excusable neglect, nor did the situation demonstrate extraordinary circumstances justifying setting aside the default judgment under this rule. Further, the actions of defense counsel did not constitute gross negligence or actual misconduct, and defendant was not completely innocent in the matter, so any neglect of counsel was properly charged to defendant. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to set aside the judgment, and the default judgment was affirmed. Matthews v. Don K Chevrolet, 2005 MT 164, 327 M 456, 115 P3d 201 (2005), applying the standard for setting aside a default in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). See also Lords v. Newman, 212 M 359, 688 P2d 290 (1984).

Appropriate Standards for Setting Aside Entry of Default and Default Judgment: Defendant failed to respond to a complaint within 20 days, and default was entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant sought to set aside the entry of default under the good cause standard provided under Cribb v. Matlock Communications, Inc., 236 M 27, 768 P2d 337 (1989). Plaintiff contended that in order to meet the good cause standard, a party would have to meet the higher excusable neglect standard set out in Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990). The District Court held that the Blume standard applied and that defendant's neglect was inexcusable, so default judgment was entered. On appeal, the Supreme Court took the opportunity to clarify the applicable standards. When the issue is the setting aside of a default judgment under this rule, either alone or in conjunction with an entry of default, the appropriate standard is the Blume excusable neglect standard. When the issue is the setting aside of an entry of default under Rule 55(c), M.R.Civ.P., as opposed to a default judgment, the appropriate standard is the Cribb good cause standard. This case involved setting aside an entry of default, so the court applied the Cribb standard. Defendant failed to show that its default was not willful, instead professing ignorance in the face of repeated warnings that if no answer was filed, a default would be taken. The Cribb standard also compels consideration of the prejudice to plaintiff and whether defendant had a meritorious defense. Plaintiff had a right to be apprised of defendant's defense in a timely manner, and defendant should have raised those claims in a timely fashion rather than ignore plaintiff's repeated attempts to elicit a responsive pleading. Defendant was correct that the proper standard to be applied in this case was the Cribb standard, but defendant nevertheless failed to show good cause to set aside entry of default under that standard. Thus, even though the District Court applied the wrong standard, it reached the correct result for the wrong reason, and the Supreme Court affirmed the default judgment. Essex Ins. Co. v. Jaycie, Inc., 2004 MT 278, 323 M 231, 99 P3d 651 (2004), followed in Peak Dev., LLP v. Juntunen, 2005 MT 82, 326 M 409, 110 P3d 13 (2005). See also Engelsberger v. Abuse of Discretion in Reopening and Amending Final Dissolution Decree Absent Evidence of Fraud or Newly Discovered Evidence: Following judgment in a dissolution proceeding, the husband moved to reopen the case on grounds that the wife's testimony constituted fraud and that the husband had newly discovered evidence that was not available at trial. The District Court reopened the case and held that the husband was not responsible for the wife's dental bills, even though the husband had agreed to pay them. The wife appealed. The record showed that the wife used the present tense in answering a question regarding whether she was providing medical coverage for the husband, even though she had terminated coverage on the husband over a year before. However, the deficient question and answer did not rise to the level of fraud because the husband: (1) knew that coverage had been discontinued and failed to object to the inaccurate answer; (2) was not misled by the response; and (3) was not deprived of the opportunity to rebut the testimony or to present his case. Further, he admitted at a postdissolution hearing that he had no new evidence. Thus, the conditions were not sufficient to justify the reopening of the judgment, and the District Court committed reversible error in reopening and amending the final decree. The Supreme Court remanded with instructions to reinstate the final decree. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 211, 322 M 341, 96 P3d 716 (2004).

Failure of Defendants to Monitor Litigation — Relief From Default Judgment Properly Denied: Although default judgments are not favored, litigants nevertheless have a duty to monitor litigation. Here, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to set aside a default judgment when defendants: (1) knew that litigation was proceeding; (2) knew that a status conference had been scheduled but failed to attend in person or to hire an attorney to appear in their behalf; (3) failed to notify the court or the opposing party of their intention to miss the conference; (4) were aware that service upon the listed post-office box was considered effective service for all matters regarding the litigation; and (5) neglected to notify the court of a change of address. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004), distinguished in In re Marriage of Wendt, 2014 MT 174, 375 Mont. 388, 329 P.3d 567, in which the Supreme Court declined to allow for a default judgment in a parenting plan proceeding solely on the basis of a party's absence at mediation.

Failure to Litigate Claims Justifying Dismissal of Counterclaims With Prejudice — Lack of Specific Findings on Counterclaims Not Erroneous: Defendants failed to litigate the claims against them, resulting in default judgment in plaintiffs' favor and dismissal of defendants' counterclaims with prejudice. On appeal, defendants asserted that the District Court committed reversible error in failing to mention the counterclaims and enter general findings from which the Supreme Court could determine whether the counterclaims had merit. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the counterclaims. Failure to litigate the claims justified dismissal of the counterclaims with prejudice, and entry of the default judgment on the issues in the complaint also served to settle any compulsory counterclaims arising out of the transaction or occurrence that was the subject of the suit. Further, the District Court did not err in failing to make specific findings regarding the counterclaims because the counterclaims were considered dismissed and res judicata upon entry of the default judgment in favor of plaintiffs. Caplis v. Caplis, 2004 MT 145, 321 M 450, 91 P3d 1282 (2004).

Improper Assumption That Defense Verdict in Underlying Negligence Action Precludes Subsequent Unfair Trade Practices Claims — Reversible Error: Plaintiff was involved in an automobile accident when an employee of the Goosebill Ranch struck a vehicle driven by the Cloutiers and then struck plaintiff's vehicle, which was pushed across an intersection and collided with a truck that was proceeding through the intersection. Plaintiff sued Goosebill Ranch for negligence, but the jury returned a verdict for the ranch, and plaintiff appealed. The Cloutiers also sued Goosebill Ranch in a separate action, and in that case, the jury found that the ranch was negligent and awarded the damages to the Cloutiers. The damages were paid by the defendant insurance company. While appeal of plaintiff's negligence case was pending, plaintiff settled, and the judgment against plaintiff was released as part of the settlement, but plaintiff reserved the right to bring a bad faith action against that insurer. Plaintiff then brought an unfair trade practices claim against the insurers, asserting violation of 33-18-242 and alleging claims for outrage or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. The District Court held that the initial jury verdict for Goosebill Ranch provided the insurers with a reasonable basis defense to plaintiff's subsequent unfair trade practices claim and that plaintiff could not bring a statutory bad faith action claiming liability was reasonably clear when the jury had decided the opposite, so plaintiff's claim was dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's assumption that the unfair trade practices claim sought to relitigate the underlying claim and that the issues in both claims were the same was incorrect because the issues were in fact separate. An unfair trade practices claim is considered an independent cause of action. The District Court's reasoning that an unfair trade practices claimant must first establish liability in an underlying claim and that an adverse jury verdict defeats the claim was also erroneous because under 33-18-242, a settlement of the underlying claim is sufficient to allow an unfair trade practices claim, and a defense verdict in the underlying negligence suit was not tantamount to a finding that the insurer did not engage in unfair trade practices. Further, a ruling that a defense verdict provided a reasonable basis defense to a subsequent unfair trade practices claim as a matter of law was also erroneous because insurers would then be encouraged to obtain defense verdicts at any cost to shield themselves from subsequent unfair trade practices claims. Thus, a defense verdict in the underlying negligence claim did not collaterally estop plaintiff from pursuing an unfair trade practices claim. Last, plaintiff's failure to raise the issue of insurer misconduct in a motion under this rule in the underlying negligence case did not preclude pursuit of an unfair trade practices claim because the unfair trade practices claims were not litigated in the underlying case and were not issues that should have been litigated in the negligence suit for personal injuries. No Abuse of Discretion in Granting Marriage Dissolution Default Judgment Given Failure to Establish Good Cause to Set Aside Default: The wife Florence petitioned for a legal separation to which her husband William did not respond. The District Court subsequently entered a default judgment against William, who appealed. The Supreme Court noted that default judgments are not favored and that a finding of even a slight abuse of discretion warrants setting aside a default judgment if good cause is shown. The court then applied the criteria in In re Marriage of McDonald, 261 M 466, 863 P2d 401 (1993), to determine whether William established good cause, which include whether: (1) the defaulting party proceeded with diligence; (2) the defaulting party's neglect was excusable; (3) the defaulting party has a meritorious defense to the claim; and (4) the judgment, if permitted to stand, will injure the defaulting party. William met the first and third criteria, but his neglect was not excusable, nor could he show that default would result in injury. Having failed to meet the McDonald good cause criteria, the court declined to address possible relief under this rule, and default judgment was affirmed. In re Marriage of Shannon, 2004 MT 25, 319 M 357, 84 P3d 645 (2004), distinguishing In re Marriage of Winckler, 2000 MT 116, 299 M 428, 2 P3d 229 (2000).

Deficiency Judgment Embraced Within Assignment Order Seeking to Enforce That Judgment — Appeal of Assignment Order Divesting District Court of Jurisdiction to Address Motion to Set Aside Deficiency Judgment: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, and on the same day moved to set aside the deficiency judgment pursuant to this rule, claiming that the judgment was improperly based on the value of the property from the Sheriff's sale rather than the fair market value of the property. The District Court declined to address Andersen's motion under this rule on grounds that the appeal of the assignment order divested the court of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court affirmed. The assignment order and the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment were inextricably intertwined. The motion under this rule challenged the validity of the very deficiency judgment on which the appealed assignment order was based and that the assignment order sought to enforce. The District Court did not err in finding that appeal of the assignment order divested the court of its jurisdiction to address the motion to set aside the deficiency judgment. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), following McCormick v. McCormick, 168 M 136, 541 P2d 765 (1975).

Change in Decisional Law Not Extraordinary Circumstance to Allow Reopening Law of Case: Calcaterra's initial wrongful death action failed because Calcaterra did not raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether her husband's employer caused his death through an intentional act or omission. Relying on Schmidt v. St., 286 M 98, 951 P2d 23 (1997), the Supreme Court affirmed in Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), citing the proposition that proof of negligence was insufficient to avoid the exclusive remedy provided in the Workers' Compensation Act. However, in Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), the Supreme Court subsequently clarified the definition of intentional and malicious within the context of the Act, holding that the term should be defined according to the plain meaning in 39-71-413 and the definition of actual malice in 27-1-221. Calcaterra then moved for reconsideration under this rule, contending that Sherner changed the definition with respect to the exclusivity provision and created extraordinary circumstances justifying an exception to the doctrine of the law of the case and the reopening of the 1998 case. The Supreme Court disagreed. Both Fiscus v. Beartooth Elec. Co-op, Inc., 180 M 434, 591 P2d 196 (1979), and In re Marriage of Waters, 223 M 183, 724 P2d 726 (1986), support the conclusion that a change in decisional law subsequent to a final judgment does not constitute extraordinary circumstances that would allow reopening of that judgment. Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 2001 MT 193, 306 M 249, 32 P3d 764 (2001).

Motion for Relief From Judgment Barred by Res Judicata — Sanctions Appropriate: McLaughlins moved for relief from judgment under this rule, but the motion was denied by the District Court. On appeal, McLaughlins raised 14 different reasons why the District Court's judgment following remand was void. The thrust of their argument was that the District Court failed to follow statutory law when awarding punitive damages against them. In denying the motion under this rule, the District Court noted that the issues raised by the motion had been appealed three times to the Supreme Court and affirmed each time in noncite opinions and held that the motion under this rule was dilatory in nature and without substance in law or fact. On this fourth appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, finding that all of the issues raised by the McLaughlins in their motion under this rule were barred by res judicata because they either had been previously litigated or could have been litigated in prior proceedings. Further, because the latest appeal was taken without substantial or reasonable grounds, it was frivolous pursuant to former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), so sanctions in the form of reasonable costs and attorney fees were ordered to be added to the judgment against McLaughlins on remand. Bragg v. McLaughlin, 1999 MT 320, 297 M 282, 993 P2d 662, 56 St. Rep. 1276 (1999). See also Wellman

v. Wellman, 198 M 42, 643 P2d 573 (1982), Searight v. Cimino, 238 M 218, 777 P2d 335, 46 St. Rep. 1217 (1989), and Loney v. Milodragovich, Dale & Dye, P.C., 273 M 506, 905 P2d 158, 52 St. Rep. 1093 (1995).

Failure to Submit Available Evidence Precluding Setting Aside of Judgment: At a 1995 hearing on child support, a father was defiantly uncooperative in providing documentation of any kind regarding his finances, assets, the provision of insurance for the children, or past child support payments. At a 1998 hearing on suspension of his driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses, he claimed that he should be allowed to present the evidence that he refused to provide earlier. The District Court declined to reopen the 1995 hearing, and the Supreme Court affirmed. If there was anything that prevented the father from a fair submission of the controversy, it was his own defiance of the justice system. His failure to avail himself of the opportunity to present the appropriate information in 1995 and his desire to retroactively argue a factual issue in the case were not sufficient reasons to justify setting aside the judgment. His motion for a new trial was properly denied, and in the interests of finality of litigation, the Supreme Court declined to upset the judgment. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999). See also Karlen v. Evans, 276 M 181, 915 P2d 232, 53 St. Rep. 337 (1996).

Extension of Time Deadline by Rule Inapplicable to Administrative Law Judge's Decision — Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper: The mother petitioned for judicial review of an order by an administrative law judge regarding her child support action. The Child Support Enforcement Division moved to dismiss the petition on grounds that it was not timely filed pursuant to 2-4-702 and that, as a result, the District Court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to hear the case. The mother filed a motion under Rule 6(b), M.R.Civ.P., seeking an enlargement of time in which to file the petition, asserting that her failure to file the petition within the 30-day deadline was the result of excusable neglect. The motion was denied. The mother then filed for relief under this rule, and that motion was also denied. The mother appealed from the denial of both motions. The Supreme Court held that Rule 6(b), by its terms, applies only to acts required by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure or by court order, but does not apply to acts required within a statutory framework, such as that established in 2-4-702. Thus, the rule does not apply, either by its terms or by analogy, to petitions for judicial review of administrative proceedings because applying the rule in that manner would extend the jurisdiction of District Courts beyond that allowed by the statute. Further, this rule does not provide a basis for relief in this case because the District Court was automatically deprived of jurisdiction once the 30-day period expired, and this rule cannot be applied to revest jurisdiction where none existed in the first place. Dismissal of the mother's petition was not an abuse of discretion, and the District Court order was affirmed. In re Support of McGurran, 1999 MT 192, 295 M 357, 983 P2d 968, 56 St. Rep. 741 (1999).

Summary Judgment Improper Before Meaningful Discovery Conducted: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence, which had come to light during the summary judgment hearing. The evidence consisted of financing authorization documents allegedly incorporated by reference into the contract for deed, as well as privileged bank account information that had been unobtainable prior to the hearing. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motions, reasoning that the evidence could have been discovered prior to entry of judgment through the exercise of due diligence. In this case, judgment was the result of a summary proceeding, not the result of a trial on the merits. The record on appeal revealed that First Security's motion for summary judgment was filed before Ranch Recovery had even filed its answer and counterclaim, but there was no indication in the record that any formal discovery had been conducted prior to entry of summary judgment. Thus, the Supreme Court declined to characterize the failure to discover this particular evidence as failure to exercise due diligence for the discovery and presentation of evidence at trial. Ranch Recovery met its burden of establishing that the newly discovered evidence was not "newly discovered" for lack of diligence. The District Court erred in refusing to consider Ranch Recovery's motion to reconsider. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999), following Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994). See also Gregorian v. Izvestia, 871 F2d 1515 (9th Cir. 1989).

Judge's Answer to Jury Question Held Not External Influence — Juror Affidavits Not Proper — Motions to Change Verdict Denied: In a civil suit, the special verdict form contained question #5 that read: "Do you find by clear and convincing evidence that Defendants acted either fraudulently and or with malice?" This question was taken nearly verbatim from plaintiff's proposed verdict form except that the proposed form contained a slash ("/") between the "and" and "or" in the question. Plaintiff did not object to this clerical error at or prior to the time that the form was submitted to the jury. During jury deliberations, the jury submitted a question to the judge stating: "Do we have to differencateate [sic] Between [sic] fraud and malice in #5." The judge answered "No" to the jury question, and neither plaintiff nor defendants objected to the answer at the time. After the trial, plaintiff filed alternative posttrial motions requesting the court to order that the answer to question #5 be "Yes", to set aside the jury verdict on question #5, and to either enter judgment against defendant on the issue of punitive damages as a matter of law or grant a new trial on the issue of punitive damages. The motions were based on affidavits of eight jurors alleging mistake or confusion based on the court's "No" answer. The District Court denied the motions. The Supreme Court upheld the denial, determining that plaintiff waived her claims of error by failing to object to the special verdict form submitted to the jury; that based on the "invited error rule", plaintiff participated in the error by submitting the conjunctive-disjunctive question; and that the affidavits were not proper because the jury had not been subject to external influences. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Later Finding of Unconscionability Proper Upon Failure to Make Initial Determination of Conscionability: Wife contended that a dissolution agreement was unconscionable as a matter of law because: (1) her understanding of English was limited; (2) both parties were initially represented by the same attorney; and (3) the agreement did not include a statement of the parties' incomes, property valuations, or child support calculations. Husband maintained that the trial court was estopped from finding unconscionability because of its initial finding that the agreement was not unconscionable. However, in this case, the District Judge did not make a specific inquiry into conscionability because the parties had reached a separation agreement. The Supreme Court held that when a District Court fails to make an initial investigation of conscionability of an agreement, it is not estopped from later finding that the agreement is unconscionable if the decree adopting the agreement is set aside pursuant to subsection (3) of this rule. In re Marriage of Gudmundson, 1998 MT 54, 288 M 70, 955 P2d 648, 55 St. Rep. 226 (1998).

Past Available Records Not Newly Discovered Evidence Warranting New Trial: State Medical Oxygen contended that a new trial was warranted based on newly discovered evidence consisting of two sets of records, but conceded that the evidence was in its possession prior to oral arguments on the summary judgment motion. The evidence could thus not be characterized as newly discovered in the context of this rule. Given the lack of effort on State Medical Oxygen's part to bring the evidence to the court's attention and its failure to request additional time prior to resolution of the summary judgment motion, coupled with the fact that the evidence was not truly newly discovered, it was not error for the trial court to deny a motion for relief from judgment in this case. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 267 M 340, 883 P2d 1241, 51 St. Rep. 1063 (1994). Newly Discovered Evidence of Federally Recommended Highway Guardrail Upgrade — New Trial: Following an automobile collision with a guardrail in which his daughter was injured and his wife and another child were killed, Fjelstad sued the state for negligent guardrail design, installation, and maintenance. The state denied negligence and alleged that its conduct with regard to the guardrail conformed to the applicable standard of care at all times prior to the accident. Following trial, in which the state was held not liable, Fjelstad received additional evidence in the form of recommendations in federal documents regarding upgrade of guardrail installations during overlay projects. The existence of the documents was known by the state prior to trial but not disclosed. The District Court granted Fjelstad's motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence, and the state appealed. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was not cumulative and that it did not simply tend to impeach the state's witnesses. Because the newly discovered evidence would probably produce a different result on retrial, the motion for a new trial was properly granted. Fjelstad v. St., 267 M 211, 883 P2d 106, 51 St. Rep. 1047 (1994), followed in First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Newly Discovered Evidence — Proof — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court properly granted defendant summary judgment on a collateral estoppel defense and properly ruled on nonadmissibility of a statement that, at most, would have constituted newly discovered evidence and that plaintiff failed to establish could not have been discovered earlier with due diligence. Farmers Plant Aid, Inc. v. Huggans, 266 M 249, 879 P2d 1173, 51 St. Rep. 803 (1994).

Settlement Agreement From Parties' First Divorce Not to Be Set Aside Sua Sponte by Trial Court: The parties entered into a property settlement agreement that was incorporated into their divorce decree in 1989. Seven months later, they remarried; their marriage was again dissolved in 1993. The lower court found that the parties had not performed or complied with the terms of the prior decree and that they were estopped from asserting any rights under the previous agreement. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had no jurisdiction to declare the agreement null and void because neither party had requested that the agreement be set aside and there had been no finding that the agreement was unconscionable. In re Marriage of Nordberg, 265 M 352, 877 P2d 987, 51 St. Rep. 531 (1994).

Relatively Minor Disputes in Property Valuation — Failure to Appear — Relief Not Granted: The Supreme Court will not mandate relief pursuant to this rule over relatively minor disputes in property valuation or identification when a party does not appear at hearing to present evidence concerning those matters. In re Marriage of Miller, 260 M 15, 858 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 912 (1993).

Newly Discovered Evidence of Stock Ownership — Judgment Affirmed by Finding Evidence Would Not Change Result of Trial: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. Evidence at trial consisted of confusing and incomplete evidence of stock transactions. Following a judgment for Cowles, Sheeline moved for relief from judgment on the basis of newly discovered evidence consisting of stock records found in an unlikely place upon moving from her home in Boston. The District Court found a lack of due diligence and that the new evidence would not have changed the result of trial and denied the motion after expiration of the 45-day limit provided in Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. The Supreme Court determined that the District Court should have found due diligence but after a review of the new evidence, concurred with the District Court that although some of the evidence was not produced at trial, it was cumulative and duplicative with introduced evidence and would not have altered the outcome of the trial. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Failure of Bonding Company to Tender Defense to Known Suit — No Excusable Neglect or Other Reason Justifying Relief: American Casualty Company provided a construction bond to a general contractor, C&D Contractors, for an expansion of the Billings city hall. Because subcontractor Empire Lath & Plaster, Inc., was not paid for all of its work for C&D, Empire submitted a notice of claim against the bond to C&D, Billings, and American Casualty. Over a month later, because it had received no reply to its notice of claim, Empire filed suit on the bond against American Casualty. The claims analyst receiving the complaint sent it to C&D and tendered a defense, but no response was received from C&D. A default judgment was entered against American Casualty, and the District Court refused to set aside the default. Distinguishing Blume v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 242 M 465, 791 P2d 784 (1990), the Supreme Court held that the failure of American Casualty to respond to the complaint, when it knew of the pending action and knew it had received no response from C&D to the tender of defense, was not excusable neglect, nor was there any other reason to relieve American Casualty from the default. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion. Empire Lath & Plaster, Inc. v. Am. Cas. Co., 256 M 413, 847 P2d 276, 50 St. Rep. 128 (1993).

Statements Regarding Value of Partnership Assets No Barrier to Presentation of Evidence — New Trial Denied: Wife argued for a new trial based on conflicting information compiled after trial regarding the value of the marital estate. With the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence could have been discovered prior to trial. Husband's trial statements concerning partnership assets did not materially thwart wife's ability to present her case, indicating lack of fraud, so a new trial was unwarranted. In re Marriage of Barnes, 251 M 334, 825 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 67 (1992).

Failure to Discuss Grounds for Relief Until Reply Brief — Review of Order of Denial Only: Plaintiffs devoted the majority of their initial brief to arguing the merits of the court's grant of summary judgment to defendant and did not even discuss the grounds for relief under this rule until their reply brief. While an order denying a motion under this rule is final and appealable, the appeal brings up for review only the order of the denial itself and not the underlying judgment. Reconsideration of an earlier motion on its merits cannot be the subject of a motion under this rule. Therefore, failure to raise the merits of the grant of summary judgment with a timely appeal or request for consideration precluded Supreme Court review. Donovan v. Graff, 248 M 21, 808 P2d 491, 48 St. Rep. 303 (1991).
